The University is currently employing Skoler, Abbott & Hayes in it's negotiations with the clerical union that has been without contracts since July and negotiating since May.

Louis Cohn, of West Hartford, part owner of the home is not a newcomer to union busting. As absentee landlord of Colonial Village Apartments, he has made numerous attempts to destroy the power of Colonial Village Tenants Union—currently the only tenants union in the Amherst area. Cohn is also the owner of Presidential Apartments, Southwood Apartments and property in downtown Amherst.

Into all this steps our University police and security guards. As Linda Edwards, 31 year old mother of two, worker and striker at the home said, "I can't believe what I saw today. I never thought that I would be sitting down in front of a moving car, struggling nut to be dragged off by the police." More than 13 people have been arrested at the Home. We've seen strikers and supporters beaten, mistreated and falsely charged by the Amherst police.

We are outraged that UMass police have been called in to serve the interest of the management of the Amherst Nursing Home. We support the strike. We've formed a support committee. We've on the picket lines and we're stopping the scabs. We don't want our money going to the other side. WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON?

MTA/NEA endorses strike

To the Editor:

The University Staff Association (USA) endorses the strike of District 1199 at the Amherst Nursing Home and fully supports their efforts to earn a fair wage and maintain their union strength.

In their attempt to settle the contract just hours before the strike, members of District 1199 offered more than reasonable compromise positions on the issue of a union shop—offers which the management of the Amherst Nursing Home flatly refused.

U.S.A. President Lynn Washburn said, "While we are currently making some progress at our negotiating table we deplore the tactics used to break the union at the Amherst Nursing Home." Both the University and the Amherst Nursing Home are represented at the bargaining table by attorneys from the Springfield law firm of Skoler, Abbott & Hayes.

Ms. Washburn continued, "As residents and employees of this community we are concerned with the apparent use of the Amherst police as escorts for scab employees entering the Nursing Home. The Town of Amherst is not in the business of protecting the interests of the Amherst Nursing Home and should refrain from doing so."

We urge strong community support to the striking workers at the Amherst Nursing Home.

A ton's worth of courtesy

To the Editor:

If this were the last day of your life, my friend, tell me, what do you think you would do?

The Amherst area is literally flooded with thousands of young people for eight months every year. Some of you won't be coming back next spring—not because you flunked out, but because of senseless driving on the roads.

It concerns me that people can't show a little courtesy when driving a two thousand pound vehicle in a highly pedestrian-oriented environment.

A bus driver for the UMass Transit Service, I've seen the aftermath of three traffic accidents (two of which resulted in a fatality), since the beginning of the fall semester. Those two people will never have "a second chance" to see a sunrise, express love for another person, or to look forward to tomorrow.

Make the most of your life—don't end it crunched in a car. Remember, a little courtesy won't kill you...hope to see you next spring.

New Right 'prays' for your vote

To the Editor

In Iran today the Ayatollah and his band of religious Moslem zealots make no bones about the fact that they are legislating morality. The government decides what clothes you will wear, what music you will be allowed to listen to, and most importantly, what parties you will be allowed to vote for in elections. The manipulation is an open and accepted fact of life.

When we witness a rebirth of dogmatic Christian lobbying in the United States, however, the advocates of this so called "New Christian Right" deny that they are trying to undermine our country's traditional separation of church and state. This is sheer hypocrisy.

Recently Catholic Humberto Cardinal Medeiros issued a pastoral letter condemning the candidacies of Barney Frank and James Shannon for their support of freedom of choice on the issue of abortion. Fortunately, the voters of Massachusetts were not swayed by this blast from the pulpit, as their Iranian counterparts would have been.

Far more frightening than the Cardinal's weak effort, however, is the militant conservatism of the southern evangelical Christians and their television salesmen such as the Rev. Jerry Falwell. These Bible toting rednecks tell their followers that to vote for a liberal is to vote for someone who is a servant of the devil. By concentrating on a single issue such as abortion or strangely enough military spending (being a good Christian, the Rev. Falwell believes we should have enough military hardware to blow our enemies to kingdom come,) the TV preachers command their people to vote for conservative republican candidates.

Organizations such as "Moral Majority" and "Christian Voice" take this audacity one step further by distributing report cards on all senatorial candidates. Supposing themselves to be more pure than the average American, these groups claim to speak with the authority of God, while in actuality they are nothing more than cutthroat political activists.

Already we can see the impact of these religious zealots on our electoral system. Ronald Reagan, who fully realizes the amount of help he is getting from these groups, has instituted as part of his platform the ludicrous idea that along with the Darwinian theory of evolution, the Biblical theory of evolution should be taught in our public schools. In our scientific age this sort of religious hocus-pocus has no place whatsoever.

As citizens of a free democratic society we can only reject the vulgar morality of the TV preachers and refuse to follow their commands like sheep. To have self respect means to trust in your own judgement and have the courage of your convictions. To me, anyone who votes for a certain candidate simply because his preacher told him to is either a coward or a robot. Lets not be followers of any Imam.

Progressive Student Alliance

To the Editor:

Recently, students in the state of Massachusetts have been burdened by a plethora of new problems. Tuitions are increasing while financial aid is increasingly difficult to get. Minority enrollment is decreasing while racism continues to be a problem on campus. Students are increasingly losing control of their own affairs; the recent non-student decisions on dorm policies are an example. Buildings on campus are reaching a critical state of disrepair. At the same time, university curriculum has not kept pace with changing student needs.

The Undergraduate Student Senate has made some attempt to address these issues. But these attempts have been inadequate. The senate has been unable to reach out and mobilize students around the major campus issues. There is an urgent need to open the senate up to student participation as well as to bring senate affairs to the attention of the entire student body.

The senate can have an impact on the running of this institution. It controls over $1 million in student money. It has a Legal Services Office, watchdog status on many campus committees, a research and advocacy arm, and other tools. Student participation is the missing ingredient in effective action, however.

The Progressive Student Alliance is an open group of concerned students running for the senate on a common platform. We are a diverse alliance united by our desire to increase student participation in the senate and senate representation of the student body. We invite all like-minded candidates to run with us and endorse our platform.

Let's unite to get student control of student affairs!

Student Attorney General new shade on spectrum

I was moseying through the Campus Center coffee shop, looking for familiar faces the other day when I overheard a spirited discussion between a couple of students. The guy was sloppily dressed, but in a calculated way, and the woman was rather on the well-dressed side, very attractive but at the same time looking quite confused. Now since I am an exceedingly nosey person, I didn't want to miss out on this spat. I sat down at the table next to theirs and pretended to be reading a book I was carrying around for just this purpose.

Steve Masse

"But I don't see what you have against Spectrum," the young woman said.

"Did you read it?"

"No, but — "

"There. It's been out two weeks now, and most people I talked to didn't seem too bummed out about missing it."

"Maybe your friends aren't into art."

"Art? Christ, UMass doesn't produce art! Just because we're in Alternative Valley, anything remotely connected to narcissistic self-expression gets to be called art. There is no control here — there is no...risk, that's the word."

"Risk in art?"

"Look, we pay in advance for this thing whether we like it or not. There's too much poetry, and very few people care about other people's poems. Everybody's a poet, you know? I'd like to see Spectrum operate on speculation."

"What do you mean? This is a college!"

"Exactly. It's a pre-professional world here, and instead of getting down to business, everybody's masturbating. I'd like to see Spectrum publish on a loan. Then have the students pay for their copies only if they want one."

"Then it would fail, and if you had your way, you'd wipe out a UMass institution."

"Either you face up to the business of getting readers to want what you write, or go to another hobby," he said, waving his hand and knocking his cup of coffee straight off the table. It landed on the floor right-side up, but the liquid that half-filled it splashed out onto the floor, touching their shoes.

She hardly noticed the incident. "Come on now, that's really hard on the people who contributed all this material. There must have been a lot of work put into it."

"But did you read it?"

"No, I told you..."

"That's your answer right there. It's like the old story of the tree falling on the bear in the woods. If nobody hears it, then it is immaterial, especially in this case. I've got nothing against the people, but the art is terrible. The magazine has become a subject of insult and derision.

There was a lull in the conversation here, and just out of the clear blue sky they changed the subject to the new skating rink at the mall. I quickly bored of that, and got up to get a drink.

While at the counter, I heard somebody make a remark about the new student Attorney General. Wow, I thought is this poor Dana Collier getting the shaft behind her back — but no, let me listen more closely...

"I don't know how she managed the job," the guy said, "but she must be really efficient. She's out making enemies. Keeping the elite hopping up there. sort of like an exterminator moving a fridge on a nest of roaches, you might say."

"Well, that's a pretty bad analogy," the other guy interjected.

"Yeah, I suppose it is below the belt. But this woman's doing her job and not wasting any time about it, either. See Spectrum. See the student pay. See Dana Collier come in. See some changes."

"Just like that?"

"Just like that. And it's not the last time you'll be hearing from her, either!"

Greek's bad publicity unwarranted

To the Editor

I am writing in response to all the negative publicity the Greek area has received in the past few weeks. Too often the Greek Area is judged by people who know very little, if anything about the area, or the activities involved within it.

Yes, the Greek Area has problems, but so does every residential area on campus. The main problem, however is the Greek area mostly receives negative publicity.

I'm sure everyone has heard about the so called "terrible hazing" that goes on and the "wild animal style parties", but the Greek area never gets credit for the positive things it does. For instance, the Muscular Distrophy "dance a thon" that Pi Kappa Alpha sponsored last year, the Greek Week activities in which all money raised goes to charity and even campus organizations such as ARCON, which is the tour guide service offered to perspective students that is supported soley by the Greek area.

It is about time that people stopped judging the Greek area from the outside. The Greek area is trying to grow and this unfair publicity is not helping. Don't find us guilty with out a fair trial.

More praise for Greeks

To the Editor:

On September 23, there was a letter to the editor regarding the Greek system. It accused us all of being irresponsible and unjust; we are not. My sisters and I go to afternours, as well as many other fraternity parties and exchanges, on a regular basis, and it is the exception that there is a problem. When a disturbance arises, one would expect the brothers of whatever house is sponsoring the party to ask the people involved to leave. It is their home—a place where they have to live seven days out of a week. If it were to be destroyed during a party, they have to clean it up and assume the cost, it's not as if someone will do it for them, as is the case in the dorms.

The young lady who wrote "Who's Responsible for Greeks?" may in truth have been mistreated, but even if she was, there is no reason to generalize and accuse the entire Greek system of being irresponsible. People on this campus don't realize how much good the Greek system does. The Greeks sponsor Arcon, are actively involved in most campus activities and many philanthropic projects, as well as have an average cum that is higher than the campus average. I hope people will remember some of the good things in which we are involved the next time they hear a derogatory comment or read such a letter again.

With a shoe on the other foot

To the Editor:

I would just like to say that I sympathize with Paul Banks who feels that fraternity men are stereotyped as animals. This is a falsity if I've ever heard one.

Paul, I would assume that you belong to or are affiliated with a fraternity in some way. Isn't it a crime the way some people are treated? Doesn't it make you feel cheapened when members of another group (women, for example) hurl obscenities at you or feel they have the right to paw you? I tell you I've seen many a man break down and cry. Why must they be treated so cruelly? They may get a little drunk sometimes but that doesn't mean they should be taken advantage of. It will be a long time before people are awakened to the fact that every individual has the right to be treated with respect. But hang in there Paul, someday the world will realize just what you're going through.

Frat party 'respectable'

To the editor—

We are writing in response to the woman who attended the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity party on September 19, 1980.

Taking underconsideration that it was after hours, and about 300 people were still drinking, some form of obnoxiousness should have been expected.

As onlookers to the situation, it seems to us that a woman who shows up to a party in a tube top and tight jeans should expect certain kinds of comments. However, when this woman could no longer balance on her spiked heels, one of the Frat brothers tried vainly to hold her up. Frantic with paranoia, she started jumping to conclusions.

As attending women, we never experienced any harrassement. In fact, we feel that Phi Sigma Kappa's party was the most respectable Frat party we have ever attended.

Editing confuses letter

To the Editor:

On September 18, a major portion of my letter to the editor was omitted from the editorial page.

In the original letter, my intent was: one, to point out that the majority of voters and non-voters know that present government leadership does not represent them; two, to offer an alternative in the form of a political party.

I introduced a minor party (minor only because it's not federally funded or covered in the press, like other "minor" parties), its presidential candidates, and some of its national proposals.

The editors considered this an endorsement and omitted this section. The Collegian, having changed editors and policies since last year, had not published any new rules concerning endorsements on the editorial page.

This constituted a violation of my right to freedom of expression because it changed the focus, character, and purpose of my message. The editor who read it decided that the meaning wouldn't be completely changed by cutting the endorsement. But there were statements within the deleted section which I included as part of my meaning, statements relating to the rest of the letter.

As it was printed, I appeared confused and the letter contradictory, first criticizing the two-party system, then urging people to register to vote.

I posed the question "How can representatives of the rich defend the average American?" specifically to let it be known that the party I introduced runs candidates who are primarily industrial workers; people of color and whites, both women and men; people are more representative of the American population than a dominant group of political profit-seekers.

The closing statement, urging people to vote "within a community fighting for the common goals of a free society," was not merely a general, airy statement. It was aimed at connecting the dissident non-voter with an established, organized, worldwide movement toward social change, one being repressed by most governments and the mass media. My point, partially deleted, was that acquiring some of the spoils isn't enough.

It is generally accepted that the author of a letter or article knows where its meaning and emphasis lie, and will not allow them to be changed in the name of editors' rights.

The Collegian editors took unjustified liberty in cutting a whole section of my letter without notification or explanation. Had I known of the new rule concerning endorsements, I would have reworded my letter or done my own deleting, to my satisfaction. If the editors change policies every year, yet don't feel compelled to publish them, then one has no way of knowing if she/he is violating them.

I request that this letter be published with an apology from the Collegian editors.

Shirley Kempinski Amherst

Editor's note: We apologize for changing the focus, character, and purpose of Ms. Kempinski's September 18 letter.

front of cars and pedestrians to impede progress to encircling the police escorts of workers, linking arms, and remaining immobile.

Richard Sanders, chief union negotiator, returned to the site after being released from jail yesterday morning.

He charged the Amherst police with excessive use of violence, displaying the welts on his arm and neck as evidence.

"The police departments have entirely overreacted to the situation. They don't realize that we have grandmothers on this picket line," Sanders said.

He claimed that, as union negotiator, he had been targeted for arrest by the police, but said "the police conception of me as a ringleader is overblown. They fail to realize that these picketers are deeply committed to what they are doing. They won't give up this struggle."

Experts report on hostage crisis

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — Four experts on the Middle East have told the State Department that U.S. officials missed an opportunity to resolve the Iranian hostage crisis last week before hostilities erupted between Iran and Iraq, according to a published report.

The Harvard Crimson reported yesterday that the four men told State Department officials Sept. 15 that the Carter administration should respond quickly to a speech by Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

In that address, Khomeini listed conditions for the release of the American hostages, omitting a common demand that the United States apologize for it's past actions.

"Khomeini was in effect offering us a diplomatic solution that we should have immediately seized upon," said William O. Beemen, an associate professor of anthropology at Brown University. "I think we missed an opportunity to end the crisis."

Beemen, a language specialist who lived in Iran for seven years, attended the briefing with Michael Fischer, an associate professor of social anthropology and chairman of Middle Eastern studies at Harvard, John Esposito, chairman of religious studies at Holy Cross and Fazlur Rahman of the University of Chicago.

The group recommended that Congress or a group of congressional leaders issue a strong statement pledging respect for Iran's sovereignty. They said a similar statement by President Carter would be viewed with distrust because Carter has become a symbol of hatred in Iran.

The recommendation came during a meeting with David D. Newsom, the undersecretary of state for political affairs, and Steven Grummon and Miles Green of the State Department's bureau of intelligence and research.

The State Department acknowledged to the daily student newspaper that the meeting took place.

Beemen, who noted Carter has said this country will not issue an apology, said U.S. officials are misinterpreting Iranian demands.

"Khomeini's demand that we pledge not to interfere contained all of the things implicit in the Iranian notion of an apology," he said.

Esposito explained the word "tawba," used in Iranian demands, refers not to apology or repentance in an American sense, but to a return to the path of God.

"You have this cross-cultural communications gap," he said. "we interpret it in JudeoChristan terms — an admission of guilt, breast-beating and a loss of honor — when in the Islamic context it refers to the need for the 'sinner' to do good in the future."

Nuclear warhead in hands of experts

AMARILLO, Texas [AP] — A nuclear warhead damaged in the explosion of a Titan II missile silo was in the hands of hydrogen bomb experts in Texas on yesterday, but government officials wouldn't say what they plan to do with it.

The warhead was hurled hundreds of feet when an intercontinental ballistic missile silo exploded near the rural community of Damascus, Ark., early Friday. It was flown here by a special Air Force jet transport Tuesday from Little Rock and trucked to the Pantex plant about five miles away.

Department of Energy officials, who oversee work at Pantex, would acknowledge only that the warhead is at the sprawling plant about 20 miles from this Panhandle city.

The warhead is believed to be in the nine-megaton range, much smaller than the 24- megaton bombs hauled on B-52 bombers.

Although DOE officials won't give the next step, normal procedure would be to disassemble the warhead, one source said. The usuable components would be recycled and shipped to other plants which make parts for nuclear weapons. Besides its radioactive plutonium, the warhead could contain gold, silver and platinum, depending on its makeup.

I hope that you will take a moment to read how you and the student body can benefit by your being a student representative on a University or Faculty Senate Committee.

The University has many areas in which students can participate in developing policies which effect the campus community. If your major field of concentration is related to any committee listed on this page, then you could possibly participate in developing and recommending policy in the management of that respective field. You can receive first hand experience on how the committee functions. As a student you will not only be effected by your committee's policy recommendations, but you will have participated in developing new policies.

Look carefully at the list of committees and think of how you are effected by them. Are you interested in any of the particular fields listed? Do you want to work in any of these areas someday? If so, you may be eligible to be a student representative. It is not a time consuming committment and your membership should not interfere with your studies.

If you wish to pursue a possible committee, please feel free to contact me. Thank you for your time.

Spikers at Central Conn for Invitational

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Still confident after its 3-3 showing at the UMass Invitational last weekend, the women's volleyball team will try to continue its improving team play as they head to the Central Connecticut State College Invitational this weekend.

At Central, UMass will be part of a ten-team tournament in which it will play C.W. Post, the University of New Haven, the University of New Hampshire and Providence College in its pool. According to Coach Elaine Marasco, the top two squads in each pool will advance to the semifinals.

Except for Providence College, UMass will face these teams for the first time this season. The Minutewomen fell to the lady Friars at the UNH Tournament two weeks ago.

"As far as experience goes, we've gained another week of practice and experience."
—Marasco

The possible key to the Minutewomen's success this weekend could be the defense, especially the block.

"Overall, we're looking good," said Marasco, "our defense will be even stronger than at the UMass Invitational, and our block will be more effective."

"As far as experience goes, we've gained another week of practice and experience. We're improving with every practice, and from the way we played last weekend, I think this is a good team. I'm excited about the Invitational," she said.

The one major drawback on the squad is the foot injury to junior Ellen Braun. She will be traveling to Central and will play, but may not start.

"We may not be able to use her in the same way, but Ellen will be able to play," said Marasco, "we've got some good people coming with us who did well in the Invitational, especially Katrin Hecht, Joann Siler and Nancy Joraske. I think we'll do well."

After the Invitational at Central, UMass will travel to Boston for a tri-match with Boston College and the Mass. Institute of Technology on Thursday night, with the UMass Tournament set for the weekend of Oct. 3-4.

The JVs will not open against Berkshire Comm. College because BCC cancelled its volleyball program. A new match has not been set.

Haynes, Bishop sign with Pats

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

FOXBORO — Mike Haynes was getting bored, mowing the lawn and hanging around home.

Richard Bishop was thinking about getting a job working with youngsters in Miami.

Instead both will be spending the fall playing again for the New England Patriots, after signing three-year contracts with the National Football League team.

"There were up and down times, but I knew things were going to work out," said cornerback Haynes, who has played in the Pro Bowl in each of his four NFL seasons. "I was more or less doing a lot of yardwork and helping my wife with the chores around the house."

Bishop, who started on the defensive line in 14 games last season, said he thought he would be back, "but it would take time."

He said he had been working out in Florida, adding, "I had a few connections in Miami. I had a job possibility working with kids and people with a lot of family problems."

But he won't have to take the job after signing Wednesday. Haynes signed Tuesday night.

Other than the length, terms of the contract were not revealed.

the only UMass runner to improve her time last Tuesday over Friday's meet against Boston College.

Although she finished first for UMass, Judy McCrone felt badly about her race. "Physically I felt okay, but mentally I was zero. I think I put too much pressure on myself and I should save that for the big meets," McCrone said.

The women had only eight people out for the team this season. LaFreniere said, "I've been trying to get people on campus to run with us but they just don't want to compete."

The team's next meet will be tomorrow against Springfield College at Springfield.

Stickers take Harvard, 3-1

Dominating most of the game, the UMass women's field hockey team beat Harvard yesterday, 3-1.

The first two goals were scored in the first half by Tish Stevens and Judy Strong, both unassisted. Judy Strong got the only goal in the second half.

For Harvard, it was Jen White with the only goal, with an assist by Martin.

The UMass JV field hockey team also won by the score 3-1. In goal for UMass the first half was Mary Thomas. The second half showed a strong performance by goalie Lydia Parks, who saved two penalty flicks, the only two shots on goal.

Women's tennis team loses first

By ANTHONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team lost to Harvard, 7-2, in Cambridge Tuesday afternoon. Suffering their first defeat of the season, their record dropped to 4-1.

The day was not all bad as number one singles Barbara Mills turned in a stunning performance to beat Tina Bougas, 6-1, 6-3. Bougas is currently the number one ranked woman in New England.

"We designed a way to beat her (Bougas) and Barbara was able to execute the game strategy so well that she won," said coach John Beal.

The only other win came from number five singles, Paula Natalia, who won her match 6-3, 6-4. Other singles who played well, according to Beal, but did not win were number two Elizabeth Sullivan, 6-1, 6-3 and number three, Joanne Vennochi, who went down 6-3, 6-2.

The three doubles teams were all defeated soundly with number two doubles, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian, turning out good performances despite a 6-1, 6-3 loss.

"Harvard is a very strong team (ranked third in New England). The team did not respond well, we just never got started," said Beal of team play.

Today at 3 p.m. on the Boyden courts the netwomen face Mount Holyoke College.

Netmen win, 7-2

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass men's tennis team opened its 1980 Fall season yesterday with a convincing 7-2 win over the University of New Hampshire. UNH came into the match sporting an 0-3 record, while UMass was playing its first match since their superb third place finish in the EAA's.

Sergio Strepman filled the number one singles role yesterday and came through in grand style as he rolled over Peter Dickinson 6-1, 6-0. "I had him moving most of the time, then just passed him when he came in" Strepman said.

Neil Mackertich and Greg Sanders, number two and number five singles, as well as both being EAA finalists, seemed to have incurred a touch of post-tournament letdown. Both won, Mackertich 7-5, 6-0, and Sanders 7-5, 3-6, 6-4, but both were a bit unhappy with their play. Mark Huetteman easily took his match, 6-3, 6-1 at the number four singles spot.

In the other two singles contests, freshman Mike Harrelson hitting number three singles, lost a tough match, 3-6, 6-4, 6-7, while twenty-eight year old Neal Westerman took his 6-7, 6-4, 6-3, to nail down the fifth UMass point and insure a Minutemen victory.

Booters, 3-2 in OT

By SUE BRIDGMAN
Collegian Staff

The J.V. soccer team opened their season with a bang, going into overtime before beating Williams College 3-2. UMass was not playing their type of game in the first half and got off to a slow start. The team was not moving together, and they had a lack of communication.

The first goal came thirty minutes into the first half. Winger Rick Wasmund headed the ball to Eric Zuckerman who beat out two defenders and put it into the goal.

Williams then came up with two quick goals both by Bill Best to move ahead 2-1.

UMass tied it up just minutes away from the end of the half on a penalty kick. Dave Shilo tallied that goal for UMass.

In the second half UMass had a total turnabout. The team showed sharp skills, and totally dominated the half. Despite many corner kicks and opportunities, UMass couldn't capitalize. The half ended at two goals apiece. The game went into double overtime to break the tie.

Kevin Fowler broke the tie booting a shot past the Williams goalie, midway in the period.

Coach Mascolo gives a lot of credit to Steve Berlin who played a superb game, but it was a total team effort.

Women down Owls

By JEFFREY BILLARD
Collegian Correspondent

The women's soccer team defeated Westfield State 4-2 in their 1980 home opener at NOPE field. The squad was led by freshman halfback Stacy Flionis, who scored the winning goal set up the offense for most of the afternoon.

"Stacey surprised me," coach Kalekeni Banda said." She played well in-place of Nina (Holmstrom)." Holmstrom suffered a bruised foot in the first half.

UMass dominated play all afternoon but had trouble getting their offense track. "We got caught up in Westfield's style of play," Banda said. "That is run and kick; we like to play a disciplined passing game."

Junior halfback Madeline Mangini started the scoring at 14:51 of the first period when she connected from the right side on a pass from senior co-captain Elaine Contant.

Westfield tied the game nine minutes later on an unassisted goal by forward Kathy Knowlton.

With five minutes left in the first half, sophmore Nancy Feldman put in a head shot for a score off a corner kick by Manginin. One of 13 corner kicks on the day for UMass.

Flionis' game winner then came at 14:36 of the second period on a great pass from Contant who was streaking down the right side.

Contant then added the final goal, her third point of the day, with the assist going to sophmore Deborah Pickett.

Westfield's Barbera Howe answered with a goal two minutes later to round out the day's scoring.

"UMass moved very quickly and demonstrated their skills; they played a fine game," said Westfield coach Mike Walker.

Banda had different thoughts on the subject. "We rushed our passes out there, we did not play a thinking game today," he said.

"It was a good win for our first game," Banda said. "The team was a little anxious, but we will improve with experience."

UMass outshot the owls 22 to 10 and tested Westfield goalie Linda Jenkins continually throughout the afternoon.

Senior goalie Kelly Tuller played extremely well turning eight Westfield shots. "Kelly played very well," Banda said. "The two goals they scored were not good ones."

The team will take on Boston College this Saturday at NOPE field. Starting time for that game is 1:30. Boston College is currently ranked eighth in New England. UMass remains second behind Harvard.

"Nina Holmstrom (bruised foot) is a probable starter for Saturday's game. "She may only need two days rest," Banda said. "But sophmore forward Natalie Prosser is only a possible starter."Prosser injured her knee late in the second half. "We do not know how bad it is," Banda said.

Minutemen bounce back, beat Williams

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Williamstown — Junior Tony M. Dias scored two goals, including the game winner off a penalty shot, to lead the UMass men's soccer team to a 3-1 victory over Williams College Wednesday.

"We certainly needed this one," UMass coach Russ Kidd said. "We've got a long way to go, but it's nice to get the win."

Dias scored the only goal of the first half and added the game-winning score early in the second. Minutemen Denny Walsh upped the count to 3-0, before Dave Nasser popped in the lone Williams tally with four minutes left.

"Williams is much improved over last season," Kidd said. "They hustled and never let up; we got a big break with the penalty kick."

The kick came just 5:41 into the second half, when Ephman Willie Stern was charged with a hand ball. Dias beat Williams goalie Alex Keosglou high to the right side to put UMass up 2-0. Dias had gotten the Minutemen on the scoreboard at 29:02 of the first half on a low, hard shot which beat Keoglou inside the right post.

Walsh notched his first varsity goal off a feed from Doug White at 33:07 of the half to elevate the Minutemen advantage to 3-0. Walsh, who took a pass up the middle, burst down the right side and beat Keosglou low to the shot side.

Nasser scored Williams' only goal at the 41 minute mark of the half. He took a pass from teammate Stu Taylor off an indirect kick and fired it past UMass goalie Brett Olsher into the far corner.

Olsher, who was starting his first varsity game, made 11 saves enroute to the Minutemen's second victory of the season.

"When they were down our backs he (Olsher) kept us the hell in there," Kidd admitted. "I thoughthe did a helluva job."

Olsher and his teamates faced a tough, hustling Ephmen squad which had many chances to put the ball into the net.

The Williams' attack included five corner kicks, six indirects, and two directs. The major break for UMass came with 28 minutes to play in the game, when Ephman Jim Peck drilled a shot off the left post after taking a feed from Marty White.

Women harriers fall to Harvard

By JAMES M. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Last Tuesday afternoon the UMass women's cross-country team lost to Harvard by a score of 36-23 on Franklin Park's 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course in Boston. Though the team competed without two of its better runners, several individuals ran well against the strong Harvard team.

Junior Judy McCrone was the first for UMass and third overall with a time of 17:48, followed closely by Tricia Moores, fourth in 17:50 and Cathy Petrick, sixth in 18:18. Fourth and fifth for UMass were Caroline Gardiner and Robyn Dally. Dill Wilson and Linda Welzel did not run because of injuries.

"Harvard had two really top runners and we just didn't have depth at all," coach Julie LaFreniere said. Sarah Lynsley and Darlene Beckford, both of Harvard, finished first and second respectively.

"I felt a lot better about this race than last Friday's. I felt more like I was in control," Petrick, a junior said. Petrick was Little League. . .loud and clear

Bob Mitchell

Among the many jobs I have held during past summer breaks, none stand out in my mind more than my stint as an umpire of little league baseball. Not because it was the most rewarding or paid the most. It just stands out. . .loud and clear.

There's something drastically wrong with the coaching techniques in little league. When a game of baseball between two teams consisting of eight and nine-year-olds turns into the seventh game of the World Series to both coaches and spectators alike, it is time to draw the line.

As an umpire I had a unique insight into what really goes on on the little league diamond.

Coaches, apparently attempting to imitate their favorite big-league managers, were often trying to teach their youngsters—who had barely learned the fundamentals—how to hit-and-run, sacrifice bunt, suicide squeeze and above all—WIN.

Ah, yes, winning. It has sadly become an obsession with the vast majority of little league coaches.

From my perspective, the kids—outfitted in their spiffy double-knit uniforms which were always either too big or small—cared less about winning than the parents and coaches.

At times the players on the benches, complete with dirty faces, hands and any other parts of exposed flesh, seemed perplexed when their coach stood by the always present water cooler and shouted, in the unmistakable form of Billy Martin, "Hey ump, that plate's got black edges too, ya know?"

Does a pitch in a little league regular season game hold as much importance as one does in a major league contest? Unfortunately, in the minds of many of today's youth instructors it does.

Strike one.

And the people in the stands, wow! When a middle-aged mother of two starts yelling at the umpire as Earl Weaver does on a nationally televised game, my God!

"You need glasses ump," they would shout. Then, as I glanced over at the stands to see who would make such a kind comment, little Stevey Smith had tossed another pitch which I didn't see. "Keep your eyes on the game ump!" the coaches would bark.

Strike two.

I tell ya it's enough to drive you to drink, if you take it seriously. That's the key. Should we allow our youth to take such an event as little league baseball so seriously? I think not.

Perhaps we should put the emphasis on learning the fundamentals of the game in these early playing years rather than placing so much damn value on winning.

Sounds good? I think so. But I'm afraid it's too late to start now. Coaches and parents have turned those cute little guys with the too-big-for-the-hand gloves into little monsters with an obsession to WIN.

One particular incident which caused this writer to pass on his chest protector, chin guards, mask and indicator to some other lucky soul, is a vivid example of how bad it has gotten.

During the championship game between an obvious team of ringers and a not-so-hot team of challengers, I saw what I thought was a very cruel judgement by the ringer's coach.

With his team winning by only a surprising one run in the bottom of the sixth (last inning) and the opponents with runners on first and second with two out, he had his pitcher intentionally walk the other team's best hitter to load the bases. Sounds more something Don Zimmer would tell Skip Lockwood to do to Reggie Jackson in the ninth inning at Yankee Stadium.

Anyway, the move brought up one of the team's worst hitters who had struck out three times in the game.

The manager's move—although it was a correct one—did not belong on a little league diamond.

Needless to say the kid struck out on three pitches and the favorites won the "title."

The poor little guy who whiffed burst into tears and stormed off the field totally dejected. Is that the way a little-leaguer should leave the field, or should he leave with a big smile, having enjoyed the game rather than worrying about winning or losing?

Hikes expected in student fees

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students may be paying more money to live and eat at the school, a group of University administrators said last night.

Representatives from the residents halls, boarding halls and family housing told the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees committee that higher fees are needed because of soaring inflation, waste and mismanagement. In addition, fees may be further increased to pay for employees' fringe benfits, the result of a mandate to all state agencies.

Three years ago, the state legislature ordered all public colleges in Massachusetts to fall in line with all other state agencies and pay for employees fringe benifits out of their own funds. Only the UMass system does not currently pay for the beifits itself.

Such benifits include pension funds, accident and health insurance and vacation pay.

If UMass is required to comply with the mandate next year, the charge for boarding halls, or dining commons meals, would be increased by about $1.1 million, or $110 per student, according to James Weaver of the Boarding Halls staff.

Requests submitted to the committee call for an increase of $826 to $927 for the meal plan; $921 to $1,022 for the 14 meal plan; and from $992 to $1,092 for the 19 meal plan. Figures for fee increases did not included the possibility of the fringe benifits being added to the costs.

Rent for room in the residence halls may be increased by as much as $81 per semester without the fringe benifit costs and about $107 a semester with the charges.

Rents in University-owned family housing — North villiage, University and Lincoln Apartments — could be increased by an average of $12 per month without the fringe benefit costs. With the added cost of the benifits, rents in the apartments could rise$14 per month.

Aside from the fringe benfit costs, John Findley, assistant director of housing administration said costs for maintenance and repairs done by the Physical Plant also have an effect on the fee increases. Physical plant labor charges are expected to rise about 14 percent in the residence halls next year and about 9 percent in the University apartments.

Findley said the housing department has instituted a new procedure of verifying charges for service by Physical Plant, the result of allegations made by family housing residents that charges had been inflated for work performed. Housing is also responsible for assuming costs of travel time, breaks and lunches, Findley said.

"Some of the hours are excessive. There's no reason for some of them. We continue paying bills knowing all along we're paying more than we have to," Findley said.

With the new system of checking the hours many overcharges may be eliminated," Findley said.

The rents and Fees Committee will decide next week whether to approve the fee increases requested by the departments and will pass their sentiments on to University officials for consideration, Committee Chairman Bob Cleary said.

The final decision on the increases is up to the UMass Board of Trustees, The Rent and Fees Committee can only make a recomendation.

UMass police assist town during the strike

By BILL HALLISSEY
Collegian Staff

In response to confusion over the role of University police in the Amherst Nursing Home strike, the University of Massachusetts administration said yesterday morning the University police and the Amherst police have a long standing emergency mutual aid agreement. The agreement allows UMass police to aid and assist the town in times of need.

The statement by the University said the UMass police were special police of the town and in that context were asked to join the Amherst police at the nursing home site.

Also included in the statement was a mutual agreement by both departments that stated all UMass police have been removed from the picket strike.

The statement was released throughout the University News Bureau at 11:30 in the morning.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia announced yesterday that an agreement has been reached between the police and strikers at the Amherst Nursing Home which will hopefully put an end to the violent confrontations at the picket line.

Maia said the strikers have agreed not to use physical restraint to prevent access to the nursing home by employees. The strikers have adopted the strategy of locking arms and encircling persons who cross the picket line along with their police escorts. The strategy slows access to the nursing home but does not prevent entry, Maia said.

Maia said the procedure does constitute an "impediment of access" and technically is unlawful, but certain concessions had to be made" in order to maintain the safety of the persons trying to get in, the police and the strikers."

Maia denied reports that police were willingly escorting temporary employees, or "scabs," onto the premises. All persons seeking access to the nursing home are checked against an employee list, Maia said, and non-employees are denied a police escort.

He said five persons approached the picket line yesterday morning, four were employees, and one was not. The non-employee was told she would not be escorted by the police but made her way into the circle anyway. "Actions such as these may jeopardize our position," stated Maia.

The chief said he was impressed with the amount of restraint his officers had shown. "I don't know of any who don't have bruised ribs and sore heads," he said.

He could not guarantee an end to the problems at the nursing home but he said the new development was "a step in the right direction."

US, USSR to negotiate nuclear missile cutbacks

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko reached agreement Thursday to open superpower negotiations for a cutback in nuclear missiles in Europe, Muskie said.

But it was not immediately clear whether Muskie got from Gromyko any assurances that the Soviets would try to use their influence to end the spreading war between Iran and Iraq.

U.S. officials disclosed, meanwhile, that the United States and some half-dozen allied governments are holding informal talks here on setting up a naval task force to protect Western oil shipments from the Persian Gulf region.

These officials, who asked not to be identified, said the objective would be to keep oil flowing from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and other oil countries now that shipments from Iran and Iraq have been halted.

The formation of a task force is a contingency measure, they said, with Carter administration policy still directed primarily at supporting U.N. peace making efforts as the best hope for an end to the fighting.

He said the Soviets and the United States "are both apparently in a neutral position." But asked whether the Soviets, who have a treaty of friendship with Iraq, were cooperating to end the war, Muskie replied: "I don't think it's useful to speculate on that."

Gromyko, meanwhile, said nothing to reporters who waited in a drizzle at the entrance to the Soviet mission to the United Nations.

The new arms control negotiations are expected to open in mid-October in Geneva. Muskie said there would be an announcement on that subject later.

On the Persian Gulf conflict, which could imperial Western oil supplies, Muskie told reporters "I think it's difficult to find any basis an immediate resolve."

Muskie called his meeting with Gromyko, which ran a little more than three hours, "a very frank exchange." In diplomatic parlance, that kind of statement can indicate some serious disagreement.

Asked whether he had gained Soviet cooperation, Muskie said "we'll have to wait and see what develops."

Rose Kennedy hospitalized

BOSTON — Rose Kennedy, the 90-year-old matriarch of the political clan that spawned a president and two U.S. senators, was reported in satisfactory and stable condition at New England Baptist Hospital yesterday after her second intestinal operation in a year.

Mrs. Kennedy was taken to the recovery room at 12:40 a.m. yesterday after an operation to remove a "kink" in her intestine, according to nursing supervisor Priscilla Severence.

She was transported by car from her Hyannis Port home on Cape Cod to the hospital Wednesday night on the advice of her personal physician, Dr. Robert Watt, Ms. Severence said.

"The operation was successful to relieve adhesion causing a small bowel obstruction. Her condition is satisfactory," said Martha Horsefield, a hospital spokeswoman.

Led Zeppelin drummer dies

LONDON — Drummer John Bonham of the Led Zeppelin rock music group was found dead yesterday at the home of a friend, a spokesman for Atlantic Records International said.

The spokesman refused to reveal the cause of death and would only say Bonham "died in England."

There will be no further statement on the death until completion of an autopsy Friday, said Mitchell Fox, a senior executive in New York for Swan Song Records, which produces the group's records. Atlantic distributes the Swan Song label.

Bonham, 32, known by the nickname "Bonzo," lived on a farm in Worcestershire, northwest of London. He had been with the group since its formation in 1968.

Arafat tries to mediate war

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Palestinian guerilla leader Yasser Arafat arrived in Tehran yesterday for talks with Iranian leaders in his efforts to mediate an end to the Iran-Iraq war, the Palestine news agency reported.

Arafat, who has expressed concern about the war between the two Moslem countries, met with President Saddam Hussein of Iraq in Baghdad on Wednesday.

Details of Arafat's talks with Hussein were not disclosed.

War creates snag in oil movement

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press

BAHRAIN — Tankers carrying oil to the Western world moved steadily out of the Persian Gulf on yesterday after a two-day slowdown caused by the Iran-Iraq war, industry officials said, but there were reports empty tankers have stopped returning for new cargoes.

A top Middle East oil analyst, with close ties to Saudi Arabian oil officials, said loading operations were virtually halted yesterday at the big Saudi terminal of Ras Tanura and at other gulf ports.

Loading ceased because empty tankers have stopped entering the gulf and are waiting outside the Strait of Hormuz, the only entrance to the gulf, the analyst said.

Iran, which controls the northern side of the straits, has been radioing ships leaving the gulf and asking them to identify themselves, he added.

Besides the danger of taking the huge ships into a war zone, the owners face new, prohibitive insurance rates.

In normal times, about 18 million barrels of crude oil are carried through the Strait of Hormuz every day — more than 40 percent of the Western world's oil imports. A barrel is equivalent to 42 gallons.

Officials in Oman, which controls the southern side of the straits, said traffic out of the gulf had been normal since dawn yesterday.

In Bahrain, a shipping agency spokesman said his timetables indicated tanker traffic out of the gulf was "picking up again."

"To the best of my knowledge, there has been no noticeable reduction in the volume of crude oil shipments out of the gulf region, with some exceptions in Iraq and Iran, of course," he added.

The undeclared war over territory claimed by Iran and Iraq, broke out this week after Iraq abrogated a 1975 treaty settling the old dispute. Sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab waterway from Iraq's main deep-water port to the Persian Gulf is the central disputed issue.

It was not immediately known how much oil from Iran and Iraq was sailing through the gulf. Normally, Iraq sends 2.9 million barrels and Iran about 950,000 barrels a day.

Census Bureau suit expected

BOSTON — Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd says he expects Massachusetts to file suit within two weeks against the results of the federal census, and a court ruling in Detroit yesterday will help the Bay State's case.

A federal judge in Detroit ruled in a suit filed by the city, that the Census Bureau significantly undercounted the population and ordered corrections.

"Like Detroit, we feel the Census Bureau drastically undercounted our population," O'Neill said yesterday, adding that millions of dollars in federal aid are at stake.

"Like Detroit. our legal suit will be based on arguments that an undercount violates the constitutional on man, one vote rule since census counts determine how many congressional seats a state has."

"And like Detroit, our suit will argue that the Census Bureau missed counting many minority residents of this state."

O'Neill has met with Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti and municipal officials on the issue to discuss documentation for the state's case.

"If we can win a court suit against the Census Bureau, we can force them to add to their count, and then we would be eligible to get federal aid that we otherwise would have lost," O'Neil said.

"We're very much elated by the decision," said Alexander Ganz, research director for the Boston Redevelopment Authority.

Boston had supported the suit, but did not file a brief that was requested by the court.

Ganz said the city believes its population is around the 644,000 mark, up slightly from the 1970 Census figure of 641,000. But a preliminary count released by the Census Bureau in July put the city's population at 504,000.

He said the difference in population size could cost the city $8 million annually in federal aid.

"If I understand the sense of the court order, it applies reality to Detroit but to other cities like Boston that had claimed an undercount,"

Mondale wants more money allocated for college research

By JOANNE D'ALCOMO
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The United States must preserve its "competitive advantage" by devoting more money to research at colleges and universities, Vice President Walter F. Mondale said yesterday.

Describing colleges and universities as "our greatest national asset," Mondale said, "I believe that the time has arrived for a dramatic renewal of our national commitment to those centers of excellence."

"Our nation will lose its competitive advantage unless we do something to maintain it."

"The surest route to new discoveries is to support our major research centers, protect their academic freedom, help them get the equipment and facilities they need and leave them alone to do their job."

The vice president, on a two-day stop in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, addressed several hundred students and educators at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. A research-oriented institution, MIT has received considerable federal support.

Mondale credited the Carter administration with increasing federal funds by $1.6 billion and promising an additional 3 percent increase over the next two years.

He also cited President Carter's proposal, contained in his most recent economic package, for $600 million devoted to research and technological development. He invited students and teachers to send him suggestions about how the money should be spent.

Universities perform more than half of the basic research that is done in the United States, and 70 percent of their research is financed by the federal government, according to Mondale.

Mondale said that while he has been satisfied with the amount of financial aid appropriated for minority and poor students, he would like expanded public support for university research facilities and equipment.

"The time has come to match our commitment to access with a comparable commitment to excellence," he said.

"It is our genius for new inventions which has boosted our productivity. It is science and technology which have carried us decades ahead in our defenses."

Mondale, greeted by a standing ovation, also supported the easing of federal restrictions on the use of research money.

"I believe universities need not more direction from Washington, but more support from Washington," he said.

Amherst housing woes highlight discussion

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The local housing shortage, rent control, and the quality of rental properties were the topics of a discussion last night sponsored by the League of Women Voters (LWV) at Amherst Junior High School.

Edith Wilkinson, moderator of the meeting, said the LWV was in favor of an increase in the supply of low and moderate income housing.

"I think it would be a good idea for everyone (in Amherst) to work togeter to improve the housing situation," Wilkinson said.

According to Eliza Cambell, chairperson of the Amherst Planning Board, there have been only 300 housing units built in the last five years, which is one-sixth less than in previous years. She said that area apartment complexes have no vacancies, and some have waiting lists of up to 500 people.

A Planning Board survey discussed at the meeting shows that University of Massachusetts faculty and lower-paid employees tend to live outside of Amherst. But a large portion of the University's professional staff lives in town.

Cambell said that the University has records of 3,696 students living in Amherst, but cannot account for 4,000 other students.

The Planning Board will try to re-zone many areas to allow the construction of apartment buildings. This should help accommodate the growing population, which has increased by 6000 people since 1970.

According to Brian Harvey, assistant to the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, the University is the largest provide of housing in the Amherst area. Only five other colleges in the nation have larger housing situations.

The University has 11,100 spaces for students and 391 apartments to house families. Harvey said that the University's housing system is full, and "every space that we know of has a body in it."

Harvey expects UMass enrollment and dormitory population to remain stable for more than five years, and does not foresee any additional dormitories being built, he said.

Harvey said that the goal of his department is to provide quality housing for students while limiting the impact on the surrounding community. He credits th free bus system with helping to alleviate the housing shortage by allowing them to live in neighboring towns.

Cervical cap stirs debate

Are popular in 5 college area

By JANE DEVIRGILIO AND JANET SEKEL
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the first article of a two-part series on the cervical cap.

After twenty-seven years of virtual oblivion, the cervical cap, a contraceptive method similar to the diaphragm but smaller, is gaining in popularity nationally and in the Five College area. It is also attracting its shere of notoriety.

As a birth control method in Europe, the cervical cap is a widel used and effective method, according to Dr. Thomas C. McBride, University Health Services medical director.

But in June, 1979, the Food and Drug Administration (F.D.A.) said the cervical cap was "not indicated as a contraceptive agent because its effectiveness for this use has not been proven in the United States." The most recent research on the cap previous to the F.D.A. report was published in 1963.

The fact that few controlled studies have been done in the United States is largely responsible for the F.D.A. ruling to take effect January, 1981, requiring any importer of the cervial cap to have an Investigational Device Exemption(I.D.E.), according to an F.D.A. report.

The exemption is obtainable only after a research plan is devised by an importer and the plan is approved by a board of F.D.A. scientists. All caps are imported from the sole manafacturer, the Lamberts Dalston, Ltd. company in England.

April 3, 1979, a F.D.A. report classified the cap in a Class II performance standard along with condoms and diaphragms. "Future developments of material standards are necessary," the report stated "to assure flexibilty and rigity of materials used in cervical caps to prevent trauma and lacerations of the cervix." This is also necessary to assure safety and effectiveness.

However, James P. Koch, M.D., a gynecologist and Havard University research fellow at the Boston Hospital for Women, said "In my thorough search of literature, I have not observed any problems concerning trauma or lacerations in over 300 patients I have fitted with the caps in the past two years."

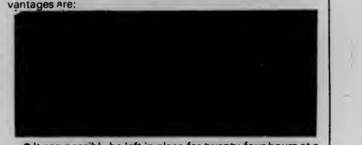
"Nor have I learned of such problems from other health personnel who have provided the caps to many other women," Koch added.

Doctors and clinins in New Hampshire, New York, California, Iowa, and Massachusets who have fitted thousands of women with the cap will now need to find for them alternative methods of birth control. Of these women fitted with caps, most reported an effectiveness equal to the diaphragm and a general satisfaction according to the sources surveyed.

In A New York Times article of August 26, Loie Sauer states that 20,000 caps have been imported to United States clinics and doctors in the past year and a half.

Since the F.D.A. investigational device classification, interest has been sparked locally and nationall, concerning the small cap, a rubber-cup like device that fits closely over the cervix barring the enrty of semen or the exit of vaginal discharge.

Compared with other birth control methods, its advantages are:



- It can possibly be left in place for twenty-four hours at a time and requires considerably less spermicide (about one third) than the diaphragm.
- It is usually felt by neither the user nor the partner.
- It has no documented side effects or health risks and is thought to be as effective against pregnancy a the diaphragm.
- Since the cap is smaller than the diaphragm, it may be the method for women who've been unable to use or have been uncomfortable with the diaphragm.

The cap also has its disadvantages:

- The cap's small size and its placement far back in the vagina over the cervix may make insertion difficult for many women.
- It cannot be used during menstruation and doctors' opinions differ on length of time the cap should be left in place.
- Because cervix size and shape vary greatly, many women cannot be fitted with the limited number of sizes the cap is available in.

Strike creates frustration for both workers and police

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The recent labor strife at the Amherst Nursing Home has been attributed to frustration and confusion on the part of the police and the strikers.

The 60 members of District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union took to the picket line Monday at 6 a.m. after spending 13 hours at the bargaining table trying to iron out an eleventh hour contract agreement. The last agreement expired May 8.

Richard Sanders, the union organizer at the nursing home, maintains the picketers were frustrated at management when they finally went on the picket line for two reasons.

"We offered to bargain on the closed shop issue, but management refused to budge," said Sanders.

- Sanders claimes that Betty Kravitz, the nursing home owner, caucused with her "spiritual advisor" at one point in the negotiations, then returned to the table and said that God had instructed her not to budge on the closed shop issue.

Union strategy, claimed Sanders, was to prevent any worker from gaining access to the building. Management's position was equally clear: Jay Presser, chief management negotiator said, "we have to take care of the patients. There will be the same patient care as yesterday."

As the non-union staff attempted to man their stations in the nursing home, the strikers sat down or linked arms and surrounded the police escort. Both police and picketers claimed excessive use of violence by the other side. Indeed, five picketers were treated at Cooley Dickenson Hospital, and Amherst police officer Thomas O'Connor received five stitches in his face.

Picketers claimed that police officers were escorting "scabs" (workers hired during a strike) across the picket line in betrayal of their agreement only to escort current employees. Chief Maia said that if the police did escort them, it was only because they did not know who presently worked at the home. He said the police are legally required to provide access to workers as they seek their place of employment.

Police were then given a list of present employees, and have agreed to abide by their agreement not to escort "scabs". Employees have, in turn, agreed not to interupt the police escorts of present employees.

On the first day of strike, picketers stopped each car that sought entry to the parking lot, allowing access only to those destined for the Amherst Medical Center. The medical center and nursing home share a common driveway.

In order to provide a smoother flow of traffic, which had at times backed up 20 cars, police began interrogating drivers and informing picketers of their destination. At one point, police did not report the destination and workers sat down in the driveway, blocking the car's progress. The driver began crying and said she was a patient at the center. Police moved in to move the crowd which dispersed voluntarily when the driver's destination was discovered, but not until tempers had flared. One policeman was heard to say "I've supported you until now, but now I don't."

Amherst Nursing Home strike continues

Violence decreases, end not in sight

By STEPHEN MORAN

For the first day since the 60 non-professional staff members of the Amherst Nursing Home went on strike three days ago, ther was no arrests and no violence yesterday the Amherst Police department reported.

Richard Sanders, union organizer for District 1199 of the New Englan Health Care Employees Union, claimed that "our posistion is a little bit stronger today" as a result of a bargain struck between union members and Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia Wednesday night. Sanders said the bargain called for police to escort only current employees across the union picket line. Police have agreed to refrain from assisting "scabs" through the line, he said.

Inreturn, said Sanders, the picketeers agreed not to inhibit the progress of the police escort of current workers

"There is no move toward a settlement of the contract negotiations," said Sanders, "but we have gotten a response to the settlement of violence." He voiced his desire for Amherst community leaders to assist in getting both parties back to the negotiating table in order to get a speedier settlement to the issue that separated the bargaining parties.

The workers are striking for the right to have a closed union shop, higher wages, and retroactive pay to May 8, the date the last contract expired.

Expressing relief that "cooler heads have prevailed", Chief Maia stated: "The agreement seems to have worked today, and I see no reason why it should fail in the future. Both sides have commited themselves to a non-violent approach to the sitution."

Yesterday, workers from the Amherst Department of Public Works installed a makeshift driveway over the lawn of the Amherst Medical Center.

Peter Gill, med-center administrator, said the action was taken "to prevent the possibility of injury to the picketers, and to allow free entrance and exit without having to stop and explain to picketers that the drivers were not seeking entrance to the Nursing Home.

He said many patients had become frightened by the interrogations. The medical center is located beside the nursing home and shares a common driveway.

Chief Maia explained that the driveway was installed after negotiations between Amherst Town Manager Louis Hayward, Medical Center administrator Peter Gill and Sanders.

BOG says roof construction delayed until spring

By SAM CHALFEN
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Union roof will continue to leak thoughout the wet winter months because it is now too late to begin construction of a new roof, William Harris, director of the Campus Center, announced last night at a Board of Governor's meeting.

Design Project Engineer William P. Mitnik said in a letter to Harris that the construction of a new roof is unfeasible in winter weather. Plans for construction of the roof did not begin early enough because a contracting bid was not accepted until Sept. 24, Harris said.

Drains were installed this summer and Harris said the roof should remain structurally sound if the amount of rain and snow fall are not abnormally high this winter.

Harris also announced at the meeting that the Massachusetts Building Authority (MBA) is asking for debt service payments, which the Campus Center did not expect to have to pay. The payments, used to pay for bonds floated for the cost of the Campus Center complex, were not requested last year by the MBA, according to Harris. The payment would cover two years of debt payments.

"We dont' know whether it's an oversight on their part or just an error in procedure," Harris said. The Campus Center administration will be researching the problem in the next two weeks. If the payments must be made, then the option of paying installment plans must be researched because such payments would seriously impair the complexes cash flow situation, Harris said.

The Board announced that three RSO groups have been notified that their space use is being examined. Asian/American Studies, Resources Judaic and International Relations have been informed that an open meeting will be held on Monday at 3:30 p.m. in Room 817 of the Campus Center.

All Rely Tampons have been removed from the University Store, according to Board Chairman Curtis Wohlers. Rely tampons have been recalled due to the recent discovery that the product may lead to toxic shock syndrome, a potentially fatal disease.

The board allocated $200 for the purchase of magazines for the Campus Center music room/library. A list of almost 20 magazines was disclosed which will be subject to revision, board member Lori Dratch said.

UM students fight charges

By JULIE GEANAKAKIS

A motion to dismiss criminal charges against two University of Massachusetts students is expected to be argued at Hampshire Superior County Court today.

Joseph McDonagh, a resident of Hamlin dormitory in the Northeast residential area, was indicted on charges of disorderly conduct and of assault and battery on a University police officer with a dangerous weapon, on the morning of March 9, 1980 on the Campus Center Concourse, outside the Blue Wall Cafeteria.

Douglas R. Locke of Amherst was indicted that same night with charges of disorderly conduct and assisting a prisoner attempting to escape from an officer who held him (McDonagh) in custody.

Attorneys for the students from the Legal Services Office assert in briefs filed with the court that the indictments in Superior Court were brought "in bad faith" because the students were originally charged in District Court.

Jean-Pierre Berwald, an associate professor of French at the Univeristy of Massachusetts has been elected chairman of the nominating committee for the 1981 North-east Conference on the teaching of the French language to be held next spring in New York.

The Northeast Conference was organized in 1954 as an outgrowth of the Barnard-Yale Conference on the teaching of the French language. It is a forum for exchanging ideas on language, literature and culture, said Berwald.

Topics of the conference will include testing, individualized instruction, vocational education, technology, programs abroad, global education, and student/teacher exchange programs he said.

Foreign language instructors at all levels of education participate in the annual conference. This year, 2,000 to 2,500 teachers are expected to attend including 150-200 members of the Advisory Council of which UMass is a member Berwald said.

The 1981 conference will be concerned with implementing commission reports on foreign language and area study programs, Berwald said. Area studies include the linguistic, historical, political, economic, sociological and cultural aspects of regions throughout the world.

The commission was organized in 1978 through the efforts of U.S. Congressman Paul Simon, D-Ill. Between October 1978 and October 1979 the commission questioned students, teachers and businessmen throughout the country on the importance of foreign languages and area studies in the education system of the United States said Berwald.

The commission drew up specific recommendations to encourage legislation in favor of the development and expansion of these programs he added.

On November 3, Berwald said he will deliver a keynote address about the presidential commission at a meeting of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association in Natick, Mass.

The foreign language profession would like to see bills passed which would provide incentive funding for various foreign language and area studies programs Berwald said.

Berwald said Americans are at a disadvantage in not knowing foreign languages since they compete in a world market where people from other countries speak several languages.

Berwald is a native of Antwerp, Belgium and has been at UMass since 1970. He is director of the graduate and undergraduate foreign language teacher training programs at the University and also teachers French language courses.

Berwald conducts numberous workshops throughout the country while developing instuctinal materials.

He has used such topics as sports, driver education, wine and country music to teach his classes. Berwald said when teachers prepare their own material they are more enthusastic about it and this enthusiasm is shared by the students.

Berwald said his idea of teaching foreign languages is to "try to make class as interesting and pleasurable as possible, to get students to see a value for languages so they can use them for travel or study abroad. Many students eventually realize the value of a foreign language."

Railroaded in Georgia

By Karen Marie Thomas

Two Springfield men are incarcerated in the Union County Jail located in Blairsville, Ga., where they were arrested Nov. 5, 1979 and charged with theft of $1,000 from a convenience store. The money was not found on either man.

Richard Lomax and Perry Owens, two black men, escaped from their jails located in the all-white county, 25 days later believing their lives were in danger.

Testifying in Springfield, the two men claimed under oath that while at Union County Jail they were beaten, denied access to a phone, attornies, threatened by jail inmates and outsiders. They were also served food that had been spat upon.

Two Hampden County Superior Court judges, George J. Hayer and John M. Greaney, denied motions fighting extradition back to Georgia. Owens and Lomax were returned to Union County Jail in late March, 1980.

In a letter written to BMCP President Keith Johnson, Lomax states "Our situation has worsened since our escape because now they have added a whole slew of trumped-up charges to us, such as armed robbery, aggrevated assault, stolen car and escape. The bad thing about this is they all carry 20 years and the armed robbery charge is a capitol offense, punishable by death in Georgia. There is no telling what these mountain red-necks might try to pull..."

Bail for these two men was set in July, 1980, although they were taken in custody late in March. Bail for each of them, excluding the armed robbery charge is $80,000 a piece.

After a five-month search for competent outside attornies, the two men located Bruce Harvey and Mike Brown of Clayton, Ga. The trial is set for early October and Owens and Lomax are in desperate need of funds to contribute to their defense.

Neither man's family can adequately support this cost, although they are contributing all that is physically possible.

The money will contribute to the services of expert witnesses needed to challenge the Grand Jury, which has indicted these men. It will also be used to attempt to change the location of the jury to a less segregated and hopefully, less racially prejudiced area of Georgia.

Lomax has written 26 organizations including the American Civil Liberties Union, the NAACP, Urban League and numerous other agencies seeking help. None of these organizations have offered support. In a previous letter Lomax wrote, "I have written over 26 organizations seeking help with our problem and half of them took four months to respond...when they did it was to tell me that there was nothing they could do. Some of them did not answer, that is why I'm seeking help and support from my own community and surrounding area."

Each of these men face 50 years in a Georgia prison unless the community rallies to help them. Personal donations can be addressed to Keith Johnson, President of BMCP, 402 Student Union Building. For further information, please call 546-2426. Other alternatives available are to sponsor a benefit in Lomax's and Owne's behalf; establish a defense fund for them, either a coalition of organizations or a single group; write them and let them know they have not been written off by their community, and contact their attornies to learn what else is needed. The address for Lomax and Ownes is:

Union and Towns County Jail
Route 5 Box 285
Blairsville, Ga., 30512

The desperate need of these two men is expressed best by Lomax, "I am in fear... may not remain alive."

Jarrett in concert

Keith Jarrett, one of the foremost pianists in America, will appear at the Fine Arts Center on Suday, Sept. 28 at 8 p.m. in a solo concert.

Jarrett is an impossible musician to label. A native of Pennsylvannia, he was a child prodigy, learning how to play the piano at the early age of three. By seven, Jarrett presented a full-length solo recital and toured extensively performing solo recitals of classical music and his own compostion.

Jarrett studied at Boston's Berklee College of Music and in 1965, he went to New York City where he toured with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers and then with Roland Kirk.

Jarrett toured Europe many times in his illustrious career and in 1967 he made a historic visit to the Soviet Union.

By 1968, Jarrett gained enough support and notoriety to form his own trio here in the United States. The Keith Jarrett Trio consisted of Charlie Haden, Paul Motian and Jarrett. The trio began to record as early as 1966.

Jarrett has developed his talents past being just a pianist, he is also widely respected for his talent as a composer and improvisor.

Firmly established as one of the greatest contemporary musicians of our time, do not miss the opportunity to hear Jarrett in concert on Sunday.

CUT BACKS

By Kimberly Green
(Black Affairs Staff)

Have you wondered why the amount of money in your financial aid package has decreased each year that you apply for it? It's probably attributed to the fact that within the last five years UMass has experienced massive cuts in its budget.

This brings us to another very important phase of reality. Many students from working class families are constatnly faced by the pressure of not having enough money to continue their education or support themselves while in school.

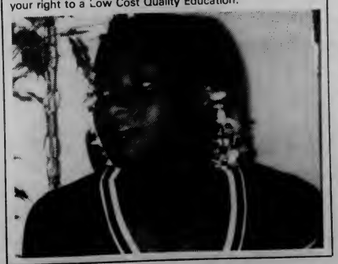
One student, Barbara Covington says, "I had plans, they cut me $600, they expect me to live off of $14 a week. That does not include the cost of living." Barbara is an R.A. (Resident Assistant) in Mackimmie dormitory in Southwest.

If this situation continue, potential students from this same socio-economic background may decide that they don't have the money to go to college at all. They are being denied their right; not privileged to a low cost, quality education. Ponder these statistics supplied by Students United for Public Education, an RSO Group.

The percentage of unmitigated grants has regressed fom 57% of the total amount of aid provided by the federal government in 1978-79 to a mere 39% in 1980-81. Workstudy grants in 1978-79 was 21% of the total aid given, for 1980-81 its down to 16%. Board of Higher Education Scholarships, which were 8% of the total aid given in 1978-79, is now 2.7%. Basic Educational Opportunity Grants have been lowered from its previous 30%, however, the new percentage was not available.

Between 50 and 75% of the student body receives financial aid in some form. The number of applicants has increased by 68% since 1978-79. As a result, the percentage of HELP loans has increased by by seven times for the period 1980-81. This means more people will have to go into debt to finance college educations.

The money is out there, it's just a matter of the government officials rearranging their priorities. If you want action to be taken start speaking up, send messages to your representative in congress on Capitol Hill. Tell him about your right to a Low Cost Quality Education.



How to be a 10 or just look like one

By Pat Cassell
Barbara Covington
and Lezlie Harrison (Black Affairs Staff)

Hair is probably the most versatile object on the human body. It's brushed, it's combed; it's permed, it's relaxed; it's curled, it's colored; it's washed, it's conditioned; it's cut and it's replaced. As a matter of fact, there only two places on the body where hair does not exist — on the bottoms of our feet and the palms of our hands. We forgot to mention that hair can also be braided, a silly thing to overlook considering the attention cornrows is receiving as of late.

With the release of the movie Ten, millions of Euro-American women have become obsessed with the art of cornrowing referring to them as "The Bo Derek Look", "The Ten," and "Bo's Braids." "Whose Braids?" is the question being argued by African-American women and men. It's no new phenomena to us.

Cornrowing dates back some five thousand years with the most historical date being 35 BC — before Christ! Yet more important than the dates of its origin is the realization by white society that the art of braiding is more than just fashion or fad. It has meaning. It is a statement symbolic of our African heritage which white Americans fail to realize, and therfore, exploit for financial purposes.

In light of all of this controversy though, white women still flock to hair parlors and pay exuberant prices to acquire "the look." Salons which do offer cornrowing charge on the average $20 to $30 an hour. Whereas we can find any sister to take the time and braid our hair free of charge.

Much of the appeal of the style to the white majority is due to its easy care, and the longevity. Little do they realize that wearing the style is not healthy for their hair, causing breakage and other damages rather than promoting growth.

Famous Black actress, Cecily Tyson had worn her hair in cornrows and braids on national television before Bo Derek knew what they were, more importantly whence they came.

Naturally, a white woman and a Black woman wear cornrows in two very different ways. A white woman wears them to say, "I am a 10", "Miss Hollywood", "Miss Vogue". But a Black woman can wear her braids with pride because she's always been a "10". Cornrows were conceived in Africa many centuries ago. Nefetiti of Egypt, Yaa Asintwas of Ghana, and the Nyingas of Angola, all wore their braids proudly. They way in which your hair was designed told what region you were from, what tribe you came from, and your royal status.

Furthermore, the beads and shells and jewlry they used to adorn their hair also seved an important purpose. The purpose being that your head was the closest part of your body to the heavens. You wanted the gods to look down on some thing that was beautiful. And as the gods looked down they would smile upon the children of the earth to see their neatly sectioned 'rows and colorful, shiny beads. the second reason was that as you moved your head or walked, the beads made music for the gods.

So all of you sisters out there with your braids and 'rows hold your heads high and be proud. Remember your hair is "not a fad but a part of our existence since time begar". For we are an AFRICAN PEOPLE!

Area Assembly elects officers

By JOHN DIPALAZZO
Collegian Correspondant

The Southwest Assembly elected representatives to both the Student Government Association's Residents Appeal Committee and the Campus Center Board of Governors last night at their first meeting of the semester.

The meeting, which was attened by aproximately 20 new members, assembly will meet next Thursday, at which time all elections within dorms will have been completed.

Co-president Kevin Mangan outlines the Assembly budget, which was passed last year. The budget included $4200 for Assembly staff salaries, $2500 for the Southwest audio visual center, and $20,000 for the Joint Curricular Committee, which in turn finances Southwest Residential College courses.

The appointment of treasurer Stephen Judge was announced. The Assembly also approved the appointments of Barbara Hammond to the Campus Center Board of Governors, and Maria DaRosa to the SGA Residential Appeals Committee, which handles student claims against the university.

Also speaking at the meeting was Ed Duggan, director of Southwest radio station WZZZ, who asked for participation and support for the station, which recieves Southwest Assembly funding.

Gov. King to speak on energy

By DEBBIE ASBRAND

Dissatisfaction with their lives and lack of contact with teachers are two of the most common reasons students give for leaving the University of Massachusetts, according to the results of a report released earlier this month.

Students intending to withdraw said they missed more classes than other students, expressed disappointment with the usefulness of their education and dissatisfaction with their majors, according to the report.

The Social Indicator Research and Community Study report is the result of a two-year study on the effects of the UMass environment on students. It was compiled by the Student Development and Counseling Center (SDCC), located in Berkshire House.

SDCC hopes to decrease the percentage of UMass students who leave the university without having graduated.

A 1977 report conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation stated approximately 62 percent of the original members of the class of 1975 had graduated from UMass within five years. The report showed that 13 percent re-entered later and the 25 percent of the class withdrew and did not graduate from UMass. No distinction was made between students who had transferred, postponed their education or those who dropped out.

In efforts to reduce the number of students who leave UMass, SDCC is planning a Mentor Program. The program will bring students and faculty together on a one to one basis, using a common factor other than academics, said Jim West, coordinator of the program.

Last week over 2100 letters were sent out to faculty and staff as an introduction to the program.

Kosher plan in trouble

By MARCIA SCIABARRASI
Collegian Correspondent

A 50 percent decline in the number of students participating in the Kosher meal plan may jeopardize the future of the once popular program.

University Food Services dietician Marie V. Cappadona said the plan, which provides five Kosher meals a week, may be re-evaluated if more students do not participate.

The Kosher option which cost about $50 more than the standard meal plan, is served at the Hampden Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area.

Two students already on the Kosher plan said they think the program will be terminated, although Cappadona assures that it will not be discontinued this semester.

Jeff Weener said some advantages of the Kosher plan are the people at Hampden make him feel like an individual, and they are careful to make sure the food is a better quality.

Susan Day, another Kosher plan participant, said "Hampden is a nice quiet eating place, the workers and the other students even know me by my first name."

If a student is on the regular meal plan, there is an additional cost of $.75 for a Kosher plan. A student must obtain a receipt from the cashier in Franklin Dining Commons, in the Central Residential area, before going to eat at Hampden. Beginning next week, the receipt can be obtained at Hampshire Dining Commons.

The National Guard Bureau is now routinely ruling on activities once considered to be at the discretion of the governors.

"We don't approve of a Guard band playing at a political function, providing of course that we are asked," said a bureau spokesperson who did not want to be identified by name. "Nor will we permit Guard displays at business houses."

The bureau usually does approve the construction of baseball diamonds, a popular request.

"They may as well work on such a community project because it provides needed training for the engineers," the spokesperson said. He had no estimate on what percentage of the Guard's annual .6 billion budget was spent on such projects.

Some adjutants general share Washington's concern that community activities might detract from the primary mission of the Guard, which is preparing for war. There are other considerations as well.

"A real problem is our competing with the private sector," Bullard said. "An engineer battalion with all its assets is a tempting prize. I don't allow my people to go at all on private land to work."

The National Guard Bureau also is concerned about the qualifications of Guard officers.

Officers in the Guard are required to meet federal educational and training standards. While many are acknowledged by active Army observers to be outstanding, there is a built-in possibility that promotion in Guards units can depend on factors other than ability.

"Maybe a candidate for promotion is popular in his community, is related to the governor or someone else in authority, or works in a local business whose support is needed," said a training assessor at the U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga.

In time of war, the Army hopes to weed out incompetents.

Fees going up

To the Editor

As the second of three fee review hearings is about to occur, we, the Rents and Fees Committee, feel that there are serious facts about fees that students should be aware of.

First, due to the reorganization of higher education in Massachusetts by Gov. King, a sense of questioning anxiety about future funding for this institution is prevalent. The result of this situation is the shifting of costs to the students and away from the reliance on funds from the legislature. The net result would be disaster as fees for students go up, financial aid goes down and an affordable education in the Commonwealth becomes questionable. Many state subsidized services will now be turning to student fee based trust funds for support. This will increase the costs of higher education which will be a burden solely on the students of UMass and other institutions of higher education.

Examples of the services switching costs are a $10 increase in The New Students Counselling Program, a new $5 application fee of which there is presently an existing state fund and a change over in the funding basis for the Continuing Education Program from a tuition base to a trust fund fee base.

If these initial changes occur, uncontested, the students can expect more changes in the future which will result in higher costs to students. Where will it all end? We don't know, but we need your help. Please call SCERA at 545-0341 and leave your name and number. Or stop by and see what you can do to help: 420 Student Union. Let's keep UMass a state funded institution before its toooooo late.

Closed shop unfair

To the Editor:

Although we usually side with labor where labor vs. management battles are concerned, we feel that the UMass community in general has overlooked some of the issues involved in the Amherst Nursing Home strike.

An increase in wages could possibly lower the higher turnover rate of employees thereby benefiting the patients, although considering the situation with other businesses in this area this seems unlikely. It seems that a system of wage increases based on work quality and duration may provide a better incentive than the guaranteed increases most unions seek.

We are especially concerned with the proposal for a "closed shop" which would take away the rights of those who do not wish to belong to a union. While we support the right to unionize, we do not feel obtaining a job should necessitate joining a union. We are appalled at the Student Senate for endorsing a group which proposes to take away the right of individuals to make their own decisions. A community which seems to view itself as liberal should be defending, not attacking, the rights of individuals.

Contradictory policy

To the Editor,

At the beginning of the semester the Collegian printed an article concerning letters to the editor. This article laid out the guidelines concerning what letters would be acceptable for printing and among those guidelines you stated that slanderous and libelous statements would not be printed. Does this only apply to persons who are popular? I am referring to the letter by Mike Skolnick in which he refers to G. Gordon Liddy as a "political asshole." Would a letter referring to Jane Fonda as a political asshole also been printed or would that be too libelous? I think that this is typical of the Collegian in that you print whatever the masses want to hear. Tell me, if the anti-nike referendum in Maine had passed would it have made the front page or would it have been printed where you printed it today, on page two?

Organizer's ideology

To the editors:

On September 16, the Collegian ran an announcemnt about an organizational meeting of the Palestine Solidarity Committee. As usual, listed in the announcement was a phone number to call to request more information about the meeting. During the afternoon and evening of the 16th, I received threatening phone calls from an anonymous caller. He repeated, "Taleb Bizri, you Palestinian, I am a Zionist and I am going to kill you."

This incident exposes one of the terrorist methods that has been used by the Zionists against people of different political ideologies. Zionism is an ideology which, in practice, is a racist movement having deep historical roots.

In moving the Jewish people into Palestine, and away from the murder and genocide perpetrated by the anti-semites in Europe, the Zionists conducted their own program of genocide against the Palestinian people. Theodor Herzl, the founder of Zionism, had the help and support of the very same anti-semites such as Cecil Rhodes of Britain in finding "a land without people for people without land." However, the lands they were proposing were inhabited by people—but Herzl and Rhodes meant a land without white people. They proposed Argentina and Uganda before Palestine. The Zionists, by blocking the way of Jewish emigration to the United States and to other European countries, made the number of the Jewish settlers enough to establish the Zionist state of Israel. However, the structure of this Zionist state is a racist structure that practices genocide against the Palestinian people and discriminates against the Arab Jews, Oriental Jews, Black Jews, and other non-white European and American Jews.

When the Zionist state of Israel maintains its support and full relationship with the pro-Nazi regime in South Africa, it shows not only the racist ideology of Zionism in terms of its full support to racist Soth Africa, but also shows that the Zionist state of Israel does not hesitate to have strong ties with the very same racist forces that massacred millions of Jews. This exposes the false myth that Zionism is dedicated to the protection of the Jewish people.

Although this incident represents an attack on the Palestinian liberation struggle, instead of posing any real threat, it exposes the fundamental weakness of Zionism. The Zionists are using any means they can to try to maintain their dying power, and to attack the Palestinian liberation movement and its supporters. The threatening phone calls I have received are a product of the growth of Zionism throughout the Valley. But what appears to be the growing offensive power of Zionism in this community is really only a defensive reaction to the growing support for the Palestinian people's struggle for self-determination. The threatening phone calls are an attempt to prevent, through the use of fear tactics, the formation of th Palestine Solidarity Committee which represents the uncovering of the Zionist racist ideology. While the Zionist element is becoming more active and seems on the offensive, in actuality their support is rapidly declining among people in general and the Jewish community in particular. The struggle against Zionism and for the liberation of Palestine is being taken up by people all over the world who are struggling to defeat imperialism. The struggle of the Palestinian people will be victorious!

The Palestinian Solidarity Committee is taking the task of making the Palestinian point of view known to the American and non-American public. That point of view which has been kept systematically away from the world consciousnes for more than thirty years. But the world started to recognize the reality of the Zionist state of Isreal and the fundamental links the Zionist state has with imperialism, South Africa, the deposed Shah of Iran, Somoza, Chile, El Salvador and many other Latin American dictatorship regimes. We, the Palestinians, will continue the struggle despite all threats and the victory will be ours as well as for all the oppressed people.

I call on all the progressive people to support the Palestinians and the Jewish people against Zionism and other oppressive and racist forces.

Cultural fair Sat.

By KELLEY DOAK
Collegian Coressspondent

Jugglers, weavers, artists and more will be featured as part of the festivities of the Peoples Cultural Fair, to be held this Saturday, Sept. 27, at the Amherst Common.

The fair, running from noon till 5p.m. will also feature a wide variety of games, including a special life-size board game, and music ranging from rock, fusion and reggae to Jazz and Irish folk tunes.

The fair was organized by a recently formed community cultural coalition primarily to raise funds for the Che Lumumba School- a third world community elementary school located in Amherst.

The school was opened in 1972 and is run and financed through the combined efforts of parents, teachers and students.

But, due to financial difficulties, the school was forced to stop its full-time operation last week and now operates on a part-time, after school basis.

Organizers of the fair are seeking support from its proceeds along with aid from local campus and community clergy in efforts to reopen the school next fall.

Joel Saxe an organizer for the fair, said the goal of the community coalition is to help change society not through the school system but through its culture.

Saxe said he thinks protest groups are necessary to inform people of social issues. But he prefers a more constructive approach than merely protesting.

Keith Jarrett, jazz piano virtuoso will be performing a solo concert at the Fine ARts Center Concert Hall on Sunday Sept. 28 at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the box office, with discounts for students and senior citizens.

WHAT A DAY!

After 15 interviews with various companies, I finally found MITRE. And after 15 interviews I definitely knew what I was looking for when I saw it.

I had to have breathing room. A place that would turn me loose and let me work on different kinds of projects. On the other hand, I had to know I'd be able to turn to other people for advice and backup. And I definitely wanted a steady growth situation.

With the MITRE people, I knew right away I'd found it all.

At any given time, they have some 75 or so funded, significant programs involving several hundred separate projects and tasks. And because they're Technical Advisors to the Air Force's Electronic Systems Division in Command, Control and Communications (C³), they design and develop some of the world's most advanced information systems.

Still, MITRE handles every assignment as if it were the only one. Because they have to come up with the right solution every time. That's their product.

The best of MITRE to me is that they'll let me move from project to project if I want, or get deeply involved in a longer-range one. There's always something waiting for me.

I'm glad it took 15 interviews to get to MITRE. Now when I say I chose them, I know exactly what I'm talking about.

Goldwater has no apologies

With No Apologies | William Morrow and Co.| $12.95
By Barry M. Goldwater

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

In this election season which offers us a very conservative candidate from the Republican party, it is interesteing to go back and read the experiences and philosophies of another of the GOP's bestknown conservatives — one who, in fact, is a close friend of Ronald Reagan.

With No Apologies are the memoirs of U.S. Senator and 1964 Republican presidential candidate Barry Goldwater. Goldwater wrote the book based on what he calls his "Alpha File" — a collection of his recorded observations and important correspondences.

Although Goldwater confesses he has made some mistakes, he repeats throughout the book exactly what the title says — he has not regrets aobut what he has done or said.

In fact, in several places, Goldwater takes pride in pointing out that he warned us nearly 20 years ago about some problems we are facing today, such as an insolvent Social Security system, runaway inflation, and an uncontrollable government bureaucracy.

Goldwater was born in 1909, when his native state, Arizona, was still a territory. He is from a Jewish family of Polish descent (Their original name was Goldwasser) who fled to this country to escape the oppressive rule of the Russian czars.

In 1952, Goldwater decided to enter the national political scene as a result of his dissatisfaction with the "no win war" we were fighting in Korea and the "giveaways" of the Marshall Plan in Europe. He defeated incumbant senator Earnest McFarland, the majority leader of the Democratic Party in the Senate, and went to Washington on Eisenhower's coatails.

In 1958, Goldwater attracted national attention during his bid for re-election to theSenate when it was discovered the COPE, the political arm of organized labor, had distributed illegal handbills to discredit him.

This publicity, along with Goldwater's position as chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, led several state delegations to support Goldwater at the 1960 GOP convention in Chicago. Although Nixon won that nomination, Goldwater began to campaign actively for and won the GOP nomination in 1964.

Goldwater says his campaign was doomed by the media, however, which created a "trigger-happy" image of him. Goldwater still insists at no time during the 1964 campaign did he advocate or suggest the use of atomic weaponry.

Few of Goldwater's recollections about political figures in his era are postive, including those of Republicans. The one man he calls "a national hero" in the book is J. Edgar Hoover.

Some of Goldwater's harshest criticisms, are reserved for the Kennedys. He accuses John and Robert of not investigating Walter Reuther and the UAW during their days on the Senate Select Committee investigating labor and management because Reuther and the UAW could help John become president.

During the 1960 presidential campaign, he accuses the Kennedys of using criminal acts to achieve their victory in the crucial West Virginia primary against Hubert Humphrey and says he collected 16 affadavits to prove his claim.

At the 1960 Democratic convention, Goldwater says the Kennedys got Johnson to accept the vice presidential nomination by threatening to investigate how Johnson made his fortune.

Although many people have said John Kennedy stood up to the Russians during the Cuban missile crisis, Goldwater says Kennedy lost his nerve on the crisis and "gave world communism its first outpost in the Western Hemisphere." He says Kennedy began sending troops to Vietnam to show strength after the missile crisis.

Goldwater also accuses Kennedy of being weak in the Bay of Pigs invasion, and talks about how he urged the president to make the effort a full-scale attempt.

The book is provocative because it presents events of the last 25 years in a perspective not often written about. One problem, however, is that the book is not well documented. There are no footnotes, and Goldwater makes several statements without any attribution. He claims, for instance, that Mao Tse-tung executed 20 million Chinese in his bid for power in that country.

Barry M. Goldwater relates his experiences and philosophies in With No Apologies, his recently published memoirs.

Pentagon eyes National Guard

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon, expecting the National Guard to be on the front lines in the next big war, is keeping a closer watch on how the "weekend warriors" are called on to build baseball diamonds, taxi VIPs, haul water and perform other chores at the whim of their states' governors.

The Guardsmen were called out during race riots, strikes, storms, floods and other natural disaster. They are an instant pool of policemen, laborers or welfare workers.

Each day this past year, an average of 1,000 militiamen were on state missions across the country.

A Guard unit with bulldozers is considered a prize asset in a community. Airplanes or helicopters are cherished.

"Communities are wanting more and more from the Guard, and their governors are giving it," said a spokesperson for the National Guard Bureau, the Defense Department agency that oversees the Guard.

Some state adjutants general of the National Gueard, who are in command of the militiamen until they are federalized, agree that there have been abuses.

"It is difficult to say no to a well-meaning local project," said Florida's adjutant general, Maj. Gen. Kennedy C. Bullard. "Yet, I've seen so many people get into trouble by going out and doing them."

Iowa's adjutant general was more emphatic.

"These projects began during the Vietnam war when the Guard was seeking community approval," said Maj. Gen. Roger W. Gilbert. "But it has backfired. We get up to 100 requests a year for helicopters to tour the state, tents for fratrity gatherings and parades, for tennis courts and bridge building."

State governors are empowered to utilize Guardsmen in emergencies, and do so freely.

In Florida last year, Guardsmen were called to help during a truck strike in Fort Lauderdale, Hurricane David, the Haitian and Cuban refugee influxes, and the Miami riots.

More typical was the less significant mission of Arkansas Guardsmen who trucked water to the town of Vilonia for three days during a drought in July.

Pinball craze is spreading

By MARY E. O'BRIEN
Collegian Correspondent

There is a cult growing on campus. Onway through the Campus Center, heading toward the Student Union, a clamor arises as you near the Campus Center Barber Shop. You may even hear it occassionally on your way to the Hatch Cafeteria. It is the pinball and video game arcade.

The area is usually filled with players and a full range of expressions pass over their faces from disgust to anger to joy. They are the regulars there.

William Harris, Director of Campus Center Operations, says: "Most people become thoroughly engrossed. There's almost a cult there of the same people every day."

What kinds of people play these games? The majority appear to be men. Most of the players interviewed play everyday and they spend anywhere between one and three dollars a day. They all agree on one thing: the games make them forget the world around them.

John Hudson, a sophomore studying Political Science, said he plays every day because "It takes your mind off the D.C. food." Another student said that it was a real "rip-off",but that it takes him into another world.

Wendy Burman, a junior studying Mechanical Enginering, plays every day because she finds it relaxing betweenclasses, she said. It relieves a lot of the tension that builds up in her daily routine, she added.

She especially enjoys it when she wins a free game since she can't afford to play as much as she sometimes would like, "I guess I'm addicted," she said.

Another woman player particularly enjoys the "Asteroids" game. She said that she enjoys the competition and concentration, but "when you get killed it's no fun."

One student, a junior studying Mechanical Engineering, tries to play every day. He admits that he doesn't play very well, but enjoys using the skill with his hands and the quick thinking it taks.

Another student said he takes his games very seriously. He said he prefers the video games to pinball machines because pinall is too frustrating since you can lose the ball without fault. He said he finds that the video games, however, depend on reaciton time, quickness, and diversity of action.

The same student said he played one game every day for three weeks and spent twenty dollars just to get the highest score. Competition is not the end-all though. He said he plays primarily for fun. "If it was free everyone would play," he said.

Some of the players interviewed admited to skipping some of their classes in order to play these games. One woman said she sometimes cuts classes and plays for hours. She said pinball gives her "a different sense of reality. You can get lost in it for a quarter."

The woman plays every day and spends at least $1.50 at a clip. It makes her forget all of the frustrating things that are going on, she said.

Most players don't know the Student Union games arcades history. The games were originally located where the vending machines are outside the Coffee Shop. They were moved to their present location in 1978. They are there to provide recreation for the students and revenue for the Campus Center, Harris said.

Harris said sales through these games amount to approximately $125,000 a year. This helps pay the total cost for operating the building, Harris said. But it makes a small dent in the total annual operating cost of $8 million.

When asked if he played Harris admitted that he does occassionally.

A representative from Trico Vending Co., which leases the pinball and video games to the university said the machines require 65 hours per week for maintainance. Trico's representative said there is little vandalism because the company tries to keep their machines operational at all times. When the machines are not working properly is whenthe most desruction takes place.

One woman player compared pinball to life. "It's like life sometimes because you get certain chances to take a shot at things and you've got to take a shot while you've got the ball," she said.

The Amherst DPW construction of a makeshift driveway, and police agreement to screen divers and inform the picketers of each driver's destination will provide less chance for similar confrontations, said Maia.

But the decrease of violence, though welcomed by police and strikers, has not resolved the reasons why the picketers are strikeing, claims Sanders. He said a date has not been agreed upon whe negotiations will resume, and said he hopes Amherst community leaders will take an active role in mediating between the sides.

Until then, Sanders said, "these workers will continue to fight for their dignity and respect. Managment is still trying to bust the union. This has to be kept in mind."

The Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy (SCERA) plans a rally of support tommorrow at 1 p.m. on the Student Union steps facing the campus pond. A march and bus ride to the strike sight will follow. Sanders plans a march on Saturday at noon that will terminate at the Amherst Town Common. A rally is also scheduled for Sunday at 1 p.m., said Sanders.

Collegian Corespondent

Saturday night at the Hatch, UMass., students will be treated to a night with the Atlantics, who are presently the hottest band in the Boston area. The Atlantics feature a new single,"lonelyhearts" b/w "Can't Wait forever", which is currently listed in the Boston Phoenix as the number 1 most-requested, most-played single. This record is just starting to make a mark for itself nationwide. It is already receiving heavy air time on New York stations and is taking off on San Francisci stations.

A little better than a year ago, the Atlantics released their first album Big City Rock. At that time, they did a national tour with Roxy Music, Cheap Trick, and later the Talking Heads.

The Atlantics

Since their first album, they have come back with new material and a hot live act,which is sure to keep any audience on its feet from start to finish.

It's not often that you get to see a band before they really make it big. Don't miss these guys this Saturday Night at the Hatch.

Discount rate up, will cause credit to tighten

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve board announced yesterday the discount rate — the interest rate the board charges member banks for money — will be raised today from 10 percent to 11 percent, a move that will tighten credit.

The key interest rate had been reduced to 10 percent on July 28.

In a statement, the board said the action yesterday was taken unanimously at the request of the governors of all 12 district Federal Reserve banks.

"This action is part of the continuing policy of the Federal Reserve to discourage excessive growth in the monetary aggregates," the announcement said.

"In taking the action, the board also took note of recent appreciable increases in borrowings at the Federal Reserve discount window as short-term market interest rates have risen significantly above the 10- percent discount rate that has been in effect since July 28," the announcement added.

The rate stood at 13 percent as recently as May 28.

Increasing the charge that banks must pay for loans will raise costs for borrowers, thereby making it harder for consumers to get credit.

TSS cases increase, package warnings next

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration said yesterday the number of reported cases of toxic shock syndrome, a sometimes fatal ailment in which tampons are believed to play a role, has risen to 344.

Some 330 cases of the ailment reported since January were in women. A total of 29 deaths associated with the disease are known to have occurred since 1975.

The agency is developing a proposal that would require warning labels on tampons to alert women to the link between toxic shock and tampon use.

The FDA has warned women to discard any remaining supply of Rely brand tampons because tests have indicated a higher-than-average risk of contracting the disease by women who use them.

Procter & Gamble, manufacturer of the tampons, has withdrawn them from the market voluntarily because of the controversy over their use.

The FDA said about 85 percent of the stock of Rely should be out of stores by Monday and virtually all of the tampons should be off the shelves by Oct. 13.

The FDA will ask each of the major tampon makers to join the federal agency in an education campaign alerting women to the risks of contracting toxic shock if they use tampons.

Church to set birth control rules

By SAMUEL KOO
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II opens a world synod of Roman Catholic bishops today, aimed at dispelling any doubts over church teaching on birth control, divorce and other family issues.

The bishops also will try to find pastoral guidelines for dealing with Catholics who ignore these teachings.

For the first time since the 1962-65 Vatican Council II, the bishops will attempt to work out common views on a host of other issues facing the world's 760 million Roman Catholics, including drug addiction, the changing roles of women, consumerism and sex education.

"Our objective is to help Catholic families, who must live in an ambiance which pays little heed to their Catholic principles," said Archbishop Jozef Tomko, secretary-general of the Sixth World Synod of Bishops.

The theme of the synod, the first under Pope John Paul II, is "the tasks of the Christian family in the contemporary world."

As sketched in a working paper sent to the 216 bishops invited to the month-long meeting, the prelates will be struggling with a secularized and in many respects amoral society, and with the confusion, ambiguity, distrust, fear, and even hostility caused by the changes that have taken place in the church after Vatican Council II.

In the end, however, the synod is expected to uphold the traditional church views on all major issues.

"Don't expect any changes in doctrinal matters, because those things simply cannot be changed," Tomko said.

After deliberations, the prelates will vote on individual issues and then on the final document before is it sumbitted to John Paul. But their report is not binding and the pope may reject or rewrite any part or all of the report.

Setting the tone for the synod, the Polish-born pontiff spelled out in a series of speeches firm opposition to abortion, contraception and divorce.

The pontiff has lined up marriage and family-planning experts to provide technical support for the "sinless" methods of birth control sanctioned by the Roman Catholic Church.

He also has invited 16 couples, most of them active in promoting "Christian ways of life," to take part in the synod. Sitting side by side with cardinals and bishops in the Sistine Chapel, they will offer comments and answer questions on family issues.

Their job would be to show, based on their experiences, that there are means to rescue a troubled marriage without resorting to divorce.

Women golfers look impressive

By MARK BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Women's golf team opens its season today with a four team match at Mount Holyoke College. Competing in the match will be Mount Holyoke College, Rutgers University, and the defending New England Champions, Amherst College.

Coach Jack Leaman from UMass is anxious to see how good his team is. "I think we've improved greatly with young players. We're hitting the ball well and we will see how good we really are on Friday."

The Minutewomen don't have to improve much to be the best team in New England. The Minutewomen finished second to Amherst College last spring in the New England Championships at Hickory Ridge.

UMass will be led by defending New England champion, Marlene Susienka. Susienka, a sophomore, is also working out with the woman's basketball team. Next on the team is junior, Karen LaVerdiere. Leaman calls LaVerdiere "an outstanding woman golfer."

Following LaVerdiere is Robin Hayes, a junior. Hayes is in her second year of competitive golf and is an extremely long hitter.

Judy Simonds and Barbara Spilewski are the only two seniors on the team. Simonds had a hole-in-one this past summer in the club championships at Cranberry Valley Country Club. Leaman says "Simonds is the most improved player on the team over the last two years and she is really playing well."

The other is Barbara Spilewski. "She is a long hitter whom we expect to make a lot of contributions this year," Leaman said.

The sixth spot on the squad belongs to sophomore, Laura Gibbons. "She has an excellent golf swing and I look for her scores to go down," Leaman said.

The alternate for the women's golf team is sophomore Jane Egan. Leaman describes Egan as "a strong hitter."

When asked how she thought the team was going to do this fall, Hayes said "We have a very, very good chance to do well."

"We have a relatively young team but we have experience. If Marlene and Karen do well and if two of the next four can come through we will have a good team," said Leaman.

Leaman expects "that Amherst and UMass will be battling for the New England Championship one more time."

Freedom wins America's Cup

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

NEWPORT, R.I. — The 12-meter yacht Freedom with Dennis Conner at the helm completed the United States' 24th defense of the America's Cup Thursday, defeating Australia by 3 minutes, 38 seconds.

The victory gave Conner and his crewmates aboard Freedom a 4-1 vicotry over Australia in the best-of-seven series.

It had been considered one of the closest America's Cup series in 50 years, but in the end, it was a rout.

Conner took the start of Thursday's race by seven seconds, and he led by 52 seconds at the first mark on the six-leg, 24.3 mile course. There was little doubt about the outcome after that.

Australia, a fine boat with a radically designed, flexible mast, just never had the horses in heavy breeze. Australia skipper Jim Hardy was using the same mainsail he had used to claim Australia's only victory this year.

It had been recut for heavier air, but that was Freedom's forte. Freedom was untouchable. After the first leg, it was simply a game of "Follow The Leader."

Netwomen edge by Mount Holyoke, 5-4

By ANTHONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team scored a narrow victory yesterday afternoon over Mount Holyoke College, 5-4. The match was played on the Boyden courts and raised the teams' record to 5-1.

The weather was cloudy, cold, and damp but that did not deter the UMass women from putting the match away early UMass took the first five matches to win the contest and than lost the next four.

The first to finish was UMass captian Joanne Vennochi, playing number 3 who beat Lili Thomas 6-4, 6-1. Number two, Elizabeth Sullivan, breezed by Ann Wopat 6-3, 6-2. Rounding out the single winners was nubmer one Barbara Mills, who went a grueling three sets with Kim Colson 5-7, 7-5, 6-0. The three remaining single matches were won by Mt. Holyoke in close three-setters.

The doubles matches got off to a slow start when they were delayed from starting because of the men's coach, Steve William's insistance on practicing on six of the 12 courts. The problem was not resolved until one hour later.

Finally under way, number one doubles, Kathy Burke and Carolynn Tarbell, won easily 6-2, 6-2. Number two doubles, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian, also were winners 6-2, 6-0 over Mt. Holyoke's Penny McNerney and Lisa Meeks.

In third doubles, UMass' Lynn O'Sullivan and Tamby Mixer were defeated by Laura Kiradjieff and Nancy Quinn 7-5, 6-4.

The J.V. also played three matches. Only one was finished, (Sue Ferris won 6-1, 6-1;) the other two were cancelled because of darkness.

are for real. Could be UMass-UConn for the Yankee Conference on Nov. 1 . . . Holy Cross place-kicker Matt Michaud has hit 25 straight PATs, a Crusader record . . . Speaking of Holy Cross, tomorrow's game at Harvard marks the 35th time these two teams have met, in a series going back to 1904—and all the games have been at Cambridge. Talk about a home field advantage . . . Talk in the press box last week was Villanova place-kicker Chuck Bushbeck, who was hitting field goals from 65 yards, with the help of a strong wind, before the game. Bushbeck was putting them through the uprights and out of the stadium from 35 to 45 yards. Trouble was, the Wildcats didn't get close enought to let him try . . . The BU-Maine game is Visor Night at Nickerson Field, with the first 4000 fans receiver free Budweiser visors. The only way Budweiser could get a good crowd down to Alumni for a UMass game was if they gave away cases . . . As for Maine, sophomore tailback Lorenzo Bouier (I love the name) is leading the nation in rushing, averaging 165.7 yards in three games. But, word on Maine is, without Bouier, they're not much. In fact, the rest of the team has a net loss of one yard.

The UMass men's golf team didn't fare too well on their trip to Williams College on Wednesday. The Minutemen have most of their concentration placed on the New England Championships which take place Monday and Tuesday.

Williams did win the match by a good margin. As a team Williams had a 385 and UMass finished with a 407. The Williams team was led by Bruce Goff who shot 74. Goff just happens to be the son of the pro at Taconic Country Club where the match was held. Greg Jacobson and Chris Malone both shot a 76 for Williams.

Low man for the Minutemen was Rich Wells who had a 77. Wells who is a transfer, was playing in his first match for UMass. He was followed by Ron Laverdiere who had an 80. He was followed by both Marty Hunt and Bob Gladchuck who both had 81s. In the fifth spot for UMass was junior, Jay McConnell who finished eighteenth with an 88.

UMass coach Ed Vlach commented "they just played better than we did."

Bob Gladchuck of UMass didn't feel down about the loss, "That was just a tune-up for the New Englands. If we were on our home track I think the results would have been different. The loss certainly shouldn't hurt our morale for the New Englands, we've been shooting for them all season. I think we have as good a shot as anybody to win it."

The New England Championships will be held at Ellington Ridge Country Club and Glastonbury Country Club. Both the courses are in Connecticut. The Minutemen will tee off with about forty other teams this Monday at 8:30 a.m..

Hornets buzz into Massachusetts

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

The Hornet of Delaware State under second-year head coach Charles Henderson come to Alumni Stadium tomorrow for an intersectional game with the Minutemen.

Not unlike the plight of most small universities Deleware St C1-2 has some exceptional athletes at the skill positions (that is, the offensive and defensive backfields and the receivers), but lack overall depth, particularly on the lines.

Hornet quarterback Sam Warren has thrown for 364 yards (17-for-39) and five touchdowns. Warren's favorite target has been Greg Lee, a Billy Whiteshoes type, who has four of those TD passes. One Warren-Lee combination was good for a 92-yard touchdown against So. Carolina St., establishing a school record.

In the backfield, leading rusher fullback Anthony Beamon has run for 203 yards on 39 carries.

"When you have the athletes they have at quarterback, running back, receiver, and the defensive backfield, you can't take them lightly," says UMass head coach Bob Pickett.

A sportswriter from Delaware called Pickett yesterday and assured him that the Hornets do have quality players—just not enough of them.

Pickett closed with a warning:

"I think it's significant that they (Del. St.) lost to South Carolina St. by one point," he said. "South Carolina St. is ranked second in Div. 1-AA this week."

Enough said.

Keep an eye on Lee tomorrow. Every second time he's caught the football he's scored (eight receptions, four TDs). Although any serious observer has to favor UMass heavily, if scouting reports are accurate, Mr. Lee could put on a show . . . When Garry Pearson and Brian Heyworth rushed for over 100 yards each last week, it was the first time two

Booters battle Black Bears at Boyden

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

After a 3-1 victory over Williams College, the UMass men's soccer team will be looking to up their record to 3-3 this afternoon at 3 p.m. when they face the University of Maine Black Bears at Boyden Field.

It suddenly looks as the Minutemen, who had dropped two in a row before Wednesday's win, have finally put together the offensive punch which had been lacking in three of the team's first four contests. UMass, who had scored just four goals in four games exploded for three Wednesday, rejuvenating the offensive surge.

In addition, the Minutemen have found themselves a competent second goaltender, in the person of Brett Olsher. The sophomore from Bayside, NY earned a victory in his first varsity performance for UMass Wednesday, steering aside 11 Williams volleys. An additional spark for the Minutemen was Tony M. Dias, who struck for two goals against Wiliams, to raise his total to four.

The Black Bears come into this afternoon's contest at 1-2 haven taken a 1-0 decision from the University of New Brunswick while dropping 3-1 and 1-0 counts to Boston University and Thomas College respectively.

Under Head Coach Doug Biggs, in his third season with the Bears, (Biggs is 6-23 overall), Maine will be boating West Springfield's Mike Pechulis, who is the team's top scorer with one goal and one assist.

Biggs, who has been trying to rebuild the Maine soccer program since is rookie year, has a team ladened with 11 freshmen and 11 juniors.

The probable Maine goalie this afternoon will be Dave LaPrise, who has 24 saves in his first three games.

UMass is a winner again as the women's field hockey team shut-out Rutgers University yesterday at NOPE FIELD, Umass is a winner again as the women's field hockey team shut-out Rutgers University at NOPE field,3-0.

"I am thrilled, this has been the best team effort yet," said coach Pam Hixon. "Everyone was great; we were under a lot of defensive pressure but we shut out a great team who had previously beat the best team in the nation."

With Rutgers defense hanging tough, UMass played a very steady game with nice stick work and marking their opponents well.

The first goal for UMass came with 20:00 left in the first half. Coming off a corner shot, Patty Bossio woked the ball past Rutgers' defence for the shot.

The UMass women kept at it after that with a number of corner shots and a penalty flick taken by Judy Strong. That shot was saved, but Strong got another shot and capitalized, scoring UMass' second goal with 34 seconds left.

So, the first half ended with UMass up 2-0 and Rutgers haning tough. Hixon was also very pleased with her women's defence. "I felt very comfortable with our defensive organization. "Everyone on the front line was great, Chris Coughlin and Carol Progulske played an outstanding game. They were very, very steady."

The second half started with UMass quick on the ball and anticipating where Rutgers was going. They were pressuring Rutgers well.

With 22:40 left in the second half, Rutgers had a corner shot that was saved by a great defensive play on the part of Patty Bossio. Also tight on defense, was Patti Shea who made some great saves on goal.

The final score for UMass came at 14:00 left in the second half with a line drive by Patty Smith. With that, UMass played the remainder of the game defensively alert, allowing only a few shots on goal.

"I thought this as being a test of what we could do," said Hixon. "And if this is what we can do, then I am very pleased!"

The women's next game of the season will be away at Vermont tomorrow at 3:00 p.m.

The cousin knows

Henry Crosby says he will probably go somewhere in downtown Amherst tomorrow afternoon and watch the fight.

"I'll go somewhere that has one of those big screens," he says. "I think that's what I'll do."

Tomorrow, in London, Marvin Hagler, Marvelous Marvin of Brockton, Mass., will fight Alan Minter at Wembley Arena for the middleweight championship of the world.

Henry Crosby will sit somewhere in Amherst and cheer for his cousin, Marvin Hagler.

"It's going to a tough fight," says Crosby, a University of Massachusetts student from Brockton. "That Minter is a tough dude. They can't knock him out."

Kevin Cullen

But, anyone who knows Marvin Hagler, relations or not, knows that Alan Minter is fighting a challenger who has waited all summer — really, all his life — for the opportunity to step into the ring with the Englishman. Hagler trained in Provincetown, down the Cape, for nearly a month before heading on to London, where he's continued to train for the last week. He has run, at dawn, in Hyde Park for the last week. Six miles a day. Then onto Freddie Hill's Gym in Battersea, on the other side of the Thames. He is ready.

"Yeah, the whole family's over there," Henry Crosby said, sitting in a Sunderland bus. "My uncle (Marvin's father) is there. He's having a helluva time, I guess. they're goin' here, goin' there — doin' the town up right, you know? Marvin's paying for everything. That's the way he is."

Marvin Hagler was ripped off. Most people, most objective people, will admit that. Marvin Hagler beat the living hell out of Vito Antufuermon, then middleweight champ, and received a draw in Las Vegas last year. Hagler did not knock him out. Alan Minter, middleweight champion, beat the living hell out of Antufuermo last spring. Minter knocked him out.

Marvin Hagler has waited. And he has changed.

"I went to the wedding," Henry Crosby said. "It was a good time. A real good time. Marvin's a little different now, being married and all. But he's still Marvin."

Marvelous.

Tomorrow night in London, really tomorrow afternoon here, Marvin Hagler will try to beat the living hell out of Alan Minter and become the world champion. Marvin Hagler's cousin will sit, 3000 miles away, and watch on television.

"It'll be fun to watch," Henry Crosby says. "I mean, it's going to be something."

The figure turns, and walks past the hot dog man in the Campus Center.

"I know who's gonna win," the cousin says. "I just know."

Iraq penetrates major Iranian oil areas

By STEVE K. HINDY
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq—Iraq said yesterday its forces punched 50 miles inside Iran and were battling for control of three major cities in Iran's oil heartland. President Saddam Hussein of Iraq said he was willing to halt the fighting if Iran recognized Iraqi's "legitimate" border rights.

Iran denied the Iraqi claims and said the Iranian air force was attacking "enemy units that have penetrated into our beloved homeland."

President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan was on a peace mission to Tehran and Baghdad, but there was no indication of progress toward ending the week-long war between the neighboring Persian Gulf oil countries.

Iran's news agency said Zia left for Baghdad after conferring twice with Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr about the border dispute. Tehran radio quoted Bani-Sadr as saying, "our position is that we will continue to fight until the last aggressor is driven from our territory."

The U.N. Security Council met in New York and unanimously adopted a resolution offered by Mexico calling on Iran and Iraq to stop the fighting.

Hussein, in a broadcast on Baghdad radio, said Iraq was willing to negotiate directly with Iran or through a third party for a settlement that would "secure Iraq's rights." Iraq's demands for territorial concessions have been unacceptable to Iran.

Iraq claimed the capture of Ahwaz, capital of Iran's oil province, and Iraqi forces were reported inside Khorramshahr and besieging Abadan and Dezful. Baghdad said its troops had crossed the Krkheh River defense line of Dezful, 70 miles north of Ahwaz, and that "the town is doomed."

Iran called claims that Ahwaz had fallen a "great lie." The city is 50 miles east of the disputed Iraq-Iran border and the capital of Khuzestan Province. Iraq accused Iran of broadcasting from another transmitter in the name of Ahwaz radio "to make the Iranian people believe that Ahwaz is still resisting."

In the south, at the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway, Iraqi troops fought for control of the Iranian oil port of Khorramshahr and tightened their siege on the refinery city of Abadan. Reports from the front said Iraqi troops on the outskirts of Khorramshahr were shelling the center of the city where Iranian defenders were led by revolutionary guards.

Tehran radio, however, broadcast an announcement from the Khorramshahr City Council saying "Iraqi Baathist Party mercenaries and supporters of hedonism have been crushed."

State officials discuss energy at symposium held at UMass

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Governor Edward J. King said the nation's key energy alternatives for the future would be nuclear power and offshore oil during a rare appearance at the University of Massachusetts Saturday.

King's speech was part of a symposium on "Energy Alternatives and Assistance for the 80's," sponsored by Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass.

The six-hour symposium featured representatives from government, private industries, and the University, who discussed alternative energy sources, further development of present resources and the role of government in energy-related products.

UMass Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty opened the symposium by pointing out the success of the UMass Transit System in cutting down automobile usage on campus. He called the transit system "the largest free bus service west of Moscow."

Conte, in his opening remarks, said America was too dependent on oil from Mideast countries and outlined ways for America to dut foreign usage, including the increased use of gasahol, coal, and the production of more domestic oil and hydroelectric power.

Massachusetts Energy Secretary Joseph Fitzpatrick told the audience about state energy conservation programs, specifically the Home Conservation program. Fitzpatrick said if the present war between Iran and Iraq had occurred two years ago when the United States was still receiving large oil imports from Iran, the resulting loss of oil from the two countries would equal the amount of oil we import from Saudi Arabia alone. He said Americans learned to adjust to the loss of oil imports before, in 1973, but that conservation methods are still necessary in the event of another import embargo.

Displays at the symposium were sponsored by the United States Department of Energy; Massachusetts Voice of Energy, a private group which promotes alternative energy and conservation; the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group; the Pittsfield Resource Recovery Commission, which operates an energy-producing waste incinerator in Pittsfield; the Berkshire Solar Heating Inc. of Pittsfield and the Sun Energy Systems and Equipment, also from Pittsfield.

Dr. Duane Cromack of the Umass Mechanical Engineering Department, talked about wind-power systems, referring to the small-scale windmill and solar-heated house on top of Orhard Hill.

The symposium was attended by about 50 people but doubled with the arrival of the governor.

King said his appearance at UMass was not his first as governor and said that if asked he would speak to students and faculty in the future.

Agreement is reached in nursing home strike

By STEPHEN MORAN

People march through the center of Amherst Saturday to show their support for strikers at the Amherst Nursing Home. The strike was settled Sunday. (Staff photo by Dan Drollette)

After five days, seventeen arrests and dozens of police confrontations, the strike at the Amherst Nursing Home ended yesterday after the sixty non-professional staff members of District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union voted to accept a contract package offered by the management of the home.

The new contract calls for a $1.15 wage increase over two years, retroactive pay to July 1, a two day increase in sick days, and an agency fee.

During an afternoon rally yesterday at the picket site, an event that union organizer Richard Sanders had billed as "either a victory party or a show of support for a prolonged union struggle," 120 workers and supporters sung victory songs and congratulated each other on the results of yesterday's bargaining session.

Returning from yesterday's breakthrough negotiation session, owner Betty Kravitz passed the picket line unimpeded by picketers for the first time since the strike began at 6 a.m. Tuesday. She was embraced by union and staff workers.

Both sides claimed victory. Martin Skoler, partner in the Springfield law firm of Skoler, Abbott and Hayes which represented Kravitz in negotiations, said "I'm happy it's over; everybody's a winner today."

The mood of patients and staff members inside the nursing home was similar to that of the picketers outside. One patient smiled and said "I'm so glad it's finally over. I'm looking forward to having everyone back."

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia, "pleased" over the settlement, expressed relief that the "difficult days are over."

"I am proud of my men for using restraint in handling this situation," he said in response to accusation of police violence from union members.

Saying that she expects little, if any, staff retribution for the union member's activities of the past week, union member Linda Edwards reported: "I have gone into the nursing home and was welcomed with open arms. There were a few cold shoulders, but that will pass." She continued, "It's been a bitch for everyone this week: the workers, the staff, the police, the workers' supporters. But there is agreement by everybody that quality patient care is of primary importance. On this, everyone is united. Perhaps this will be the ground where each side can begin to eradicate ill feelings."

The status of the union had been the major stumbling block in previous negotiating sessions. An agency fee clause was accepted by Kravitz in yesterday's 10 a.m. bargaining session, and was the source of the breakthrough, Sanders said. He maintains that workers will have the option of whther or not to join the union, but will be required to pay an agency fee regardless of their decision on union membership. The agency fee will be equal to union initiation dues plus the monthly union dues, and is earmarked for the American Cancer Society, the American Heart Association, and the March of Dimes.

"All of these items had been proposed by the union before it went on strike," Sanders said. "The point is, there shouldn't have been a strike."

Claiming that the supporter's perception of this union struggle was correctly interpreted as a symptom of a larger problem that involved the struggle for women's rights, minority rights and other issues, he vowed that the nursing home workers would reciprocate their support for other struggles.

Refugees cause no problems

FOBT CHAFFEE, Ark. – Despite the transfer of 1,1118 Cuban refugees to the relocation center at Fort Chaffee last week, with thousands more on the way, authorities said yesterday there had been no problems on the base as had been feared.

About 6,600 refugees at three other camps who haven't been able to find sponsors, are being airlifted to Fort Chaffee – which already housed 2,900 – because the barracks at the Arkansas base are winterized and the weather here is milder than at Fort Indiantown Gap, Pa., and Fort McCoy, Wis.

Two more flights from Fort McCoy were on their way to Fort Chaffee yesterday. The earlier arrival of 615 refugees from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., emptied that camp, where the refugees had lived in tents.

Sylvia Spencer, spokeswoman for the State Department, said yesterday there had been no reports of renewed trouble at the Arkansas base, where riots broke out last summer. Local people have voiced objections to bringing in more refugees.

"There are no problems between the refugees on the post," Ms. Spencer said. "I talked to the Park Police and the Border Patrol last night and they said there were no incidents in the compound at all.

Iraqi troops cross the Shatt al Arab waterway into Abadan, Iran, while an Iraqui patrol boat moves by the bridge. Oktoberfest bombing linked to outlawed fascist organization

MUNICH, West Germany – Authorities believe a West German neo Nazi planted the bomb that ripped through a crowd of Oktoberfest revelers, killing 12 people, including the suspected terrorists, and injuring 213.

Police have arrested six members of an outlawed fascist organization in connection with the blast.

Karl Heinz Hottmann, 43, leader of the "Military Sport Group Hoffmann," was picked up over the weekend along with five other members of the group, Bavarian State Justice Minister Karl Hellermeier said yesterday.

Police found papers pertaining to the group near the body of 21-year-old Gundolf Koehler, the student suspected of planting the bomb in a trash can near the crowded exit from the Oktoberfest grounds Friday night.

The powerful explosive went off before Koehler could leave the scene, police theorized. The blast tore through a crowd leaving the Munich beer festival, which is billed as "the biggest folk festival in the world."

Among the dozen victims were a Briton and a Swiss, and three of the 10 West Germans were children, police said.

Seven Americans were injured, according to the Interior Ministry.

Carter master of incumbancy

By HOWARD BENEDICT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – President Carter is the master musician, playing his incumbency like a fine old instrument.

Consider:

-Just hours before he and GOP challenger Ronald Reagan were both to address an important Jewish organization on Sept. 3, Carter disclosed plans for another Middle East peace summit between Israel and Egypt.

-On the day Carter was to appear before the Italian-American Foundation, he personally awarded the Medal of Honor to Anthony Casamento, an Italian-American World War II veteran who spent years lobbying the government to award him the medal for his actions as a Marine corporal on Guadalcanal. The action overruled 35 years of refusal of successive secretaries of the Navy to give Casamento the nation's highest award.

-The same day, Carter announced approval of $70 million in government credit guarantees to Poland that will allow that country to purchase U.S. grain and agricultural products.

Such an announcement routinely comes from the Agricultural Department. By reporting it personally, Carter was appealing to Polish American voters, whose attention was glued to news of labor unrest in Poland.

Chicago provides a classic example of how federal funds can be put to work to influence local voters and political leaders.

Last fall, when Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne jilted Carter in favor of Kennedy's candidacy, Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt publicly suggested the city might suffer in terms of federal aid.

Carter was incensed with Mrs. Byrne back then, but now he needs the help of the Chicago Democratic organization if he is to defeat Reagan in Illinois. This month alone, the Carter administration approved more than $100 million in federal money for Chicago.

Commerce Secretary Philip Klutznick, Housing Secretary Patricia Harris and Goldschmidt all made funding announcements on recent trips to Chicago.

Because Goldschmidt's department dispenses considerable grant money for transit, highways, railroads and other transportation projects, he has become among the most political of the Cabinet secretaries.

In other recent moves which appear aimed at bolstering Carter politically, the Agriculture Department dropped efforts to head off a pre-election increase in federal milk price supports, and the administration, fearful of a fight with business and labor, has postponed a scheduled revision of its voluntary wage-price guidelines program until after Nov. 4.

Che Lumumba fundraiser draws crowd to common

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

A fundraising fair for the Che Lumumba School Saturday on the Amherst Common attracted several hundred people who enjoyed an afternoon of music, food, and warm sunshine.

The fair was a joint fundraising effort between various organizations in the area who support the school and other human rights movements. Some of the groups participating in the event were the American Friends Service Committee, the Latin American Solitary Committee, the UMass Hunger Task Force, and the John Brown Anti-Klan Committee.

"The school is designed to deal with Third World problems and with deficiencies in the public school system. We try to give the kids a sense of their own heritage and background, things rarely touched on in public schools," Steven Coons, an active school supporter said.

The fair was highlighted by various area bands, including FX, Violet Ray, and Ditch the Company. In addition to the music, there was a skit performed by area students.

Panna Putman, a teacher and director at the school, said the instructors try to teach the kids to think for themselves and to ask questions. "We encourage the kids to believe in themselves," she said.

The Che Lumumba School was founded in 1972 as an alternative, Third World elementary school, serving children between the ages of 5 and 11. Since that time, the school has received accreditation from the Amherst Public School system.

Because the school is a private institution, it receives no state or federal funds. The school is dependent on contributions from private individuals, and from money earned through fundraisers, concerts, and tag sales, Putman said.

Until this fall, the school operated on a full-time basis, but because of financial difficulties it has been forced to cut its hours back to only one afternoon a week, and the students have had to return to the public schools.

"I like Che Lumumba better, the teaching is more interesting, and there aren't as many kids," said sixthgrader Alicia Nieto, a Che Lumumba student now attending Belchertown Elementary School.

"This financial situation has been building for a long time. Since 1975 the school has had a full-time teacher coordinator, and the costs of paying someone in this position is beginning to show," said Putman.

Although the turn-out at the Cultural Fair was less than expected, those involved in organizing the event remained optimistic.

"We put about $150 into this thing," Coons said. "We should just about break even. But what's just as important is the fact that we've brought the school to the attention of a lot of people today."

Student teaches immigrants

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Correspondent

UMass student Steven Hamel, fluent in four languages, is teaching English to nine Vietnamese immigrants in a new course sponsored by the Continuing Education Department this year.

The course, designed to help immigrants adjust to American life, aids area residents who are taught on a one-to-one basis to get involved in the community, read and relay directions correctly, and adapt in their professional fields.

Hamel interpreted for one of his students, Nguyen Trong Hiep, who said "How can I ever get a job if I don't know how to speak English? This course will prepare me for the future in professional fields." At the present, he is only able to understand simple English sentences and can not yet speak it.

Hamel is using a series of government language books, published by the Defense Language Institute of Monterey, California, to help teach his class the English language. He selected these books because he used them during his own Vietnamese language studies.

"The course is taught like any other foreign language with reading and oral exercises. During the two and one half hour classroom period, each week, the students have made some improvements in comprehending the English language," Hamel said.

Hamel speaks Vietnamese, Phillipinese, French, and Chinese fluently. He spent three years stationed in Army posts in the Philippines, and later worked there with Vietnamese in refugee camps. While in the service he worked in Japan, Singapore, and Thailand, teaching English and other skills to Vietnamese refugees.

"I've seen people thrown out of their homes because of social discrimination and have watched intelligent laborers being demoted in their jobs just because they have had little knowledge of the English language," Hamel said. "That is why my survival English class has been set up."

Hamel is receiving three credits through the Asian Studies program, in addition to an average load of courses this semester.

"While at the present, I'm majoring in Chinese, I've made no further plans for determining my future. I'm just content to sit back and learn for the next few years," Hamel said.

Cervical cap availability down

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
and JANET SEEKEL
Collegian Staff
Editor's Note: This is the second part of a two-part series on the cervical cap.

A large percentage of importers of the cervical cap in the United States are centered in New England. There are nineteen clinics and doctors currently dispensing the cervical cap in New Hampshire and seven dispensers in Massachusetts.

A spokesperson for the New Hampshire Feminist Health Center in Concord, N.H. said their center has fitted 600 women with the cervical cap in the past year. They have also trained twelve of the 19 dispensers in New Hampshire and are very active in their support of the cap.

"We feel that the FDA classification requiring importers to have an Investigational Device Exemption will certainly limit distribution and be detrimental to women who have relied on its satisfactory performance up to now," the spokesperson said.

The cervical cap is a contraceptive device similar to the diaphragm, but smaller.

Smith College Health Services in Northampton dispensed cervical caps until Nov. 1979, when they decided to discontinue use of the caps. Gloria Russell, R.N.N.P., said the college would prefer to use FDA approved and verified methods of contraception at their Health Services.

Anthony Melchiondе, M.D., from the Hampshire College Health Service, said, "I would like to see the cervical cap on the market as an alternative form of birth control for those who can use it with more ease than any other method."

Melchiondе called the cervical cap "an issue that must be resolved." He has worked with women who have received the cap from the Hampshire Health Services in the past and said he "found that the majority of them had a positive experience with their use of the cap." I believe it is a valid form of contraception with about the same rate of effectiveness as the diaphragm."

Dr. Thomas McBride, Universlty of Massachusetts Health Services medical director, said UMass has never dispensed the cap to patients. "The Education and Health Services are aware of the cap and do support continued research, but they do not feel they should distribute it students any contraceptive method or medication that hasn't been thoroughly researched and FDA approved."

Since the Health Services only serves the medical needs of students, McBride said, they are not in the position to do the necessary research. "We leave that up to the Worcester campus, where the UMass Medical School is located," he said.

The cervical cap will be available for only the next three months. When it becomes necessary in January for distributors to have an Investigational Device Exemption, access will be limited. Until that time, women who are interested in investigating the option of the cervical cap as a contraceptive method can obtain a list of distributors in the Five College area from the UMass Health Services Education Department, McBride said.

Fire chief suspended for 'improper conduct'

Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty was indefinitely suspended from his duties Thursday by Town Manager A. Louis Hayward.

Hayward issued a statement Friday stating he had removed Doherty on grounds of "improper conduct."

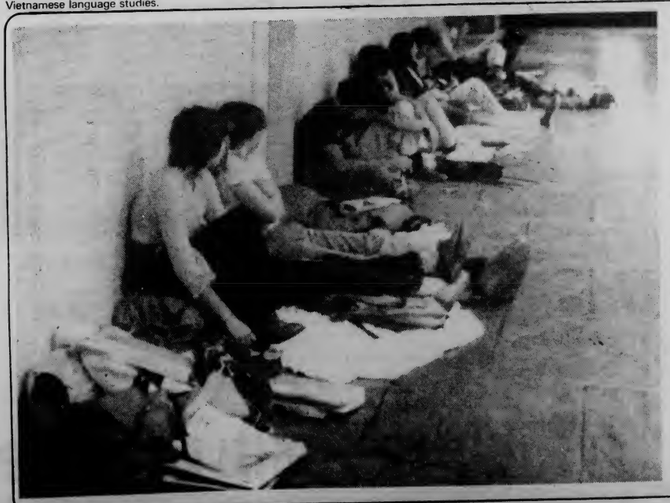
Hayward declined any comment or explanation beyond the information in the statement.

Hayward appointed Deputy Fire Chief Casmir Ziomeck as acting chief and Capt. Edward Markert as acting deputy chief.

Doherty, who was contacted at his home Friday, said he would not comment on his suspension until he had conferred with his attorney today.

Hayward's statement noted that Doherty retains the right to appeal the suspension before the town's personal board. He said the hearing could be held at Doherty's request.

Doherty, 54, has been head of the town's fire department for 15 years. He had announced his intention to resign on February 15, 1981 earlier this year.



People had already started to line up for tickets to the upcoming Bruce Springsteen concert at 6 p.m. yesterday. (Staff photo by Lisa Mead)

'Maria Braun' entertains but 'Left-handed Woman' fails

By SUSAN RING
Collegian Staff

The Marriage of Maria Braun is well worth the effort of reading subtitles for two hours. Directed by Rainer Werner Fassbinder, the film portrays a woman's effort to hold her marriage together through the horrors of WWII and its aftermath in American-occupied Germany.

Maria Braun, played with intelligence and wit by Hanna Schygulla, is a master of sexual diplomacy. At the end of the war, her husband thought dead, she gets a job in a bar whose clientele is composed of black American soldiers. The route Maria takes for survival dooms her and her marriage.

FILM

In an intense scene Maria's husband returns to find her about to make love to the American whose child she is carrying. Maria was "fond" of Bill (the American) but she kills him because her husband, Herman (her only true love) has been humiliated. Hubby, played by Klaus Lowitsch, takes the rap.

As her husband begins his prison term, Maria blocks out all emotion and sets aside her life while she puts in motion her ascent to the top of the business world in order to prepare a home for her husband.

The lives of the Brauns had begun to end as WWII began. The war did not end for them until their deaths.

When Maria and her husband are finally reunited, about 15 years or so after their wedding day, they are strangers who have only spent two days of married life together. After years of pain they are financially wealthy but poor in spirit. In a careless action, Maria blows herself up and, apparently, her husband.

The last line in Peter Hanke's The Left Handed Woman reads, "Have you noticed that there's only room for those who make room for themselves?" In his debut, Hanke has not made a place for himself as a director.

This film, dealing with a woman who tries to emerge as a person apart from the men in her life, is incredibly boring. There isn't an overabundance of subtitles to read (the film is in German), in fact, the main character doesn't say anything for the first 20 minutes or so that she is on screen.

The characters are Germans living a cold life in a suburb of Paris. Everyone is unhappy, particulary the "frau" (played by Edith Clever). No one cares she is unhappy, including the small audience, about 1/5 of who walked out before the film was half over.

Clever's son Stephan is well portrayed by Markus Muhleisen. The best scene in the film occurs as the unhappy Stephan and his goofy pal go through a slapstick routine, sawing playthings in half and dumping water over one another's heads. On the whole this film isn't worth your time.

The Marriage of Maria Braun and the Left-handed Woman finish their engagement Tuesday at the Academy of Music, Northampton.

USA vs. PREP

Far more interesting than any presidential debate or senatorial primary was this past week's campaign for the presidency of my dorm. A powerful testimony to the strength and beauty of the democratic process, the race pitted the Usually Stoned Anarchists (USA) party against the prestigious and well-dressed PREP (Party for the Re-Evaluation of Priorities).

The Anarchists set the tone for the campaign early on when nominee Rusk Bakunid seized the dorm PA system and formally announced his candidacy in an emotional address. While his running mate and staff softly hummed "Don't Bogart That Joint" in the background, Bakunid denounced the PREPs as a "bunch of second string Ivy Leaguers" who could only improve the dorm by "getting out of it." He emphasized his party's desire for "spiritual harmony between floors, constructive idea-sharing and bitchin' badass social functions." Any angry PREP representative demanded equal time, but Bakunid, a master of media manipulation, "accidentally" chewed through the PA's electrical cord after the speech, rendering it useless for the duration of the campaign.

The PREPs retaliated with a three page, four color pamphlet detailing nominee Lance Sherman's impeccable political credentials. A smiling Lance was pictured shaking hands with local honchos, hugging adoring DC ladies, and toiling in Abnormal Psychology lab. Intelligent upperclassmen were hip to Sherman's slick politicking, but to a majority of freshmen his affected cool seemed sophisticated and appealing.

In an effort to secure the male freshman vote, Sherman, at an impromptu rally in the second floor lounge, announced that, if elected, he could guarantee the attendance of at least ten of his Mt. Holyoke contacts at every dorm party. He also quietly alleged that as many as three of these are known nymphomaniacs. Bakunid and staff quickly caught wind of the Female Importation issue and, with dorm feminists, organized a rally outside Sherman's door at 3 a.m. the following morning. Feminist leader Amanda Kootz decried the PREP's "sickeningly sexist attitudes" and labeled Sherman an "asshole" for his inference that "Mt. Holyoke women are more desirable than our sisters in the dorm. Everyone knows what a bunch of snoots they are."

Within minutes, a sleepy but vocal group of male PREP supporters began to form at the other end of the hall. Calling themselves the Oppressed Masculists, they defended their "right to sleep our way to upward mobility" and lauded Sherman's party policy as "our ticket out of the middle-class suburbs." A dozen chanting masculists, after changing out of their pajamas, charged down the hallway and challenged Bakunid to a debate. Bakunid declined and charged the PREPs with "profaning our rally with your presence."

Emotions were raging by election day. Bakunid maintained that the disapearance of Sherman's hubcaps the day before was coincidental with his being spotted in the parking lot with a crowbar. Sherman's avowed revenge came when he and his staff painted an enormous LaCoste alligator on Bakunid's door. Tempers threatened to boil over just before the 10 p.m. deadline, when Sherman charged the Anarchists with harassing voters in front of the polling booth. Bakunid claimed that he was merely polishing his hunting knife and not attempting to "influence the residents of this great dorm in any way."

But the voters responded to Bakunid's soft-sell, and the Anarchists swept to a smashing 3-1 victory. Sherman was uncharacteristically gracious in defeat, stating, "He can have the goddamn job. I just needed something for my resume. You won't have Lance Sherman to kick around anymore."

Let us hope he learns from another man's mistake and remains true to that statement.

Rigging allegation 'groundless'

To the Editor:

Earlier this week, in an article on Spectrum magazine, the Collegian did not give a factual account of our organization.

In error is your reference to editors Carroll and Thomas rigging their own election. There is no basis for such an allegation. In fact, we, the editors, (including Hazel Wright) ran unopposed last semester because we were the only existing staff interested in continuing with Spectrum.

Also, we dispute any charge of improper or incompetent selection of material by the editors. The fact of the matter is the editors did not select any material for publication and all selections were by a unanimous decision of the entire respective staffs.

We might also mention that unlike other publications of the University, such as the Collegian, the editorial positions on Spectrum are voluntary and honorary, although often requiring a nearly full-time committment.

Spectrum invites any responsible and impartial review of our organization.

We also expect the Collegian to review our recent edition, Leaves.

Attorney General selection fair

To the Editor:

As Chairman of the Student Attorney General Search Committee, I feel it is my obligation to rebutt Edward Ryan's letter entitled "Elect Student Attorney General."

In Mr. Ryan's letter he made statements that demonstrate to me the lack of knowledge in the Attorney General Search process; statements such as "blatant example of abuse of political power," "student body was virtually ignored," "no popular input," "students...alienated from the selection of Attorney General." He called the goal of raising student involvement a "scam" and ended his article by stating "Let the Student Government know we will no longer tolerate undemocratic politics at the University."

The composition of the Attorney General Search Committee along with the total search process is approved by the Student Senate. The Student Senate is comprised of elected student representatives. The search process is one that is thorough and selects the best candidates. The Committee then make its recommendation to the SGA Presidents who interview the top three candidates. The Presidents then make their recommendation to the Student Senate. In order for the President's recommendation to be accepted there must be a two-thirds affirmative vote by the Student Senate (your elected representatives).

Dana Collier's appointment was, for the first time in years, an appointment approved on the president's first recommendation.

Mr. Ryan, there was no "abuse," "alienation"; there were no "students ignored" and the goal of the Attorney General is not a "scam."

Brian Burke, Chairman
Attorney General Search Committee

Gospel offers 'radical call'

To the Editor:

In his letters Bob Carrol (9/25) draws attention to a disturbing feature in U.S. politics—the rise of the "New Christian Right"—but his criticism reveals misconceptions about the Christian faith and fails to meet his opponents head on. I'd like briefly to try and cover these points.

Christians believe that God has given us minds and intends us to use them. Evangelical Christians regard the teaching of the Bible as authoritative, that is, as a true representation of God's will and character and the standard by which moral principles and theological propositions should be judged.

The Bible is not a substitute for thinking (nor, incidentally, a substitute for science). We must apply our minds to it as honestly as we can and try, with God's guidance, to understand its teaching and apply its principles to our situation today. Thus when Jerry Falwell says we should vote for Reagan, he has no "authority from God" and Christians shouldn't follow his commands like sheep, but should test his politics against their understanding of Scripture.

Thankfully, there is plenty of material in the Bible to provide a solid opposition to Reagan's politics (e.g. see Ronald Sider's "Rich Christian in an Age of Hunger") and which has motivated some Christians to act radically to achieve social justice, a notable example being the World Council of Churches Special Fund to Combat Racism, which supported the Patriotic Front during the war in Zimbambwe.

But there is a deeper problem. Christians differ in their politics because they bring different world views to bear on the "raw material" of the Bible and therefore draw different conclusion about the social implications of its teaching. Thus Reagan presumably believes that the unfettered market will solve the unemployment problem, and that massive arms expenditure is the best way to ensure peace. By pretending that they have no such world view, or worse, by pretending it is God-given, the New Christian Right can demand the support of all evangelical Christians.

For those of us who oppose them (the NCR), the task is to rescue our faith from its abuse as the opium of the people and to demonstrate that their world view has produced an imbalanced and castrated form of the gospel, which ignores its radical call.

Racial attacks in Amherst

To the Editor:

I hope this letter will bring to the attention of the community recent acts of racial violence that have been going on in Amherst.

Recently someone I know was followed and beaten by three white men in Amherst. The person told me that during the assault obscene and racist remarks were made by the men. The person attacked is Puerto Rican.

Within a five-day period three other people were assaulted, all of them non-white. At least one of these people was also Puerto Rican and assaulted by three white men. This person got the description and license number of the car the men were using. When these were reported to the UMass and Amherst police one officer responded by saying he didn't think he'd be able to locate the vehicle.

I have talked with many people about these incidents, some of whom are "activists" inside and outside of the University Community. None of them has heard anything about this string of beatings. From my conversations with one of the people who was assaulted by the three men, I gather that the knowledge of these thug-like, perhaps Klan-related attacks has spread rapidly through the Puerto Rican and black student community. (Thank God that it has!) They are watching out for each other, but what is everyone else doing?

My concern is three-fold: First, individuals are being terronized and beaten. It is being done systematically by groups of two or more white people against non-white and Spanish-speaking individuals.

Second, the UMass and Amherst police have failed to assist in locating the criminals. They have intimidated those seeking help and have therefore neglected to provide for the safety of everyone.

My third concern is that no one who is supposedly in a position to investigate and warn others about these beatings seems to have heard anything about them. It is crucial that people with "authority" be made aware of the situation and make a full investigation into all reports of violence.

It is even more important that all of us take responsibility for ending these racist, brutal attacks by warning others and providing for each other's safety. Our silence and neglect only perpetuates the fear that contributes to such violence.

In the second half, the visitors began to drive the Minutemen back into their own end. Maine took total control of the game, taking advantage of UMass' inability to move the ball.

With 25:39 remaining in the game, Maine's Meader took a feed from teammate Joe Miller. Meade broke through two UMass defenders, and drove the ball into the left corner for the game-winner.

"He (Meader) broke free through the middle," said UMass goalie Olsher. "It was a good shot. He put it right where he was supposed to. We just gotta bounce back," Olsher continued. "What we need is a big win."

COLLEGE SOCCER NOTEBOOK: From the "Keep on Rollin' Department": The UConn Huskies won their seventh game Friday, pulverizing the Cambridge Crimson 5-1. Harvard's only goal? A penalty kick by Mike Smith with 48 seconds left in the game...Harvard will be UMass' next opponent, Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. in Cambridge...Speaking of Connecticut, UMass may be credited with a win in their 4-0 loss to Southern Conn. It seems that the Owl's Mike Greene was found to be ineligible after an investigation of his records showed that Greene had failed to complete four years of eligibility since his entrance to a junior college in 1975. The ruling is now in the hands of the ECAC infractions committee.

sparkling diving grab of a Fontaine pass just before the half, good enough for six points and a hip-pointer injury. That touchdown was part of an 18-point barrage which UMass ran off in the last two minutes of the half, including a blocked punt by linebacker Scott Crowell which Dwayne Lopes fell on in the end zone for a touchdown.

The second half, eventful only for Edgardo Vargas' two interceptions and Harold Chaney's four-yard TD run, dragged on almost unbearably.

The chins are still being scratched, some doubtfully, some with a sneaking suspicion that it's all true.

Maybe, just maybe, it's all true.

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

On the face of it all, it was a pretty boring game. In a three-hour fiasco which saw two safeties, the losing team not gain any net yardage until the second quarter and the winning team pile up a school-record 171 yards in penalties, a lot of people decided to get home early and watch Marvin Hagler make mincemeat of Alan Minter's face.

What emerged from the University of Massachusetts' 39-0 debacle of Delaware State on Saturday was not a feeling of infallibility; far from it. The teams were mismatched, and everyone knows that. What emerged was far more significant. After watching the UMass defense allow just 142 yards in total offense, while the offense rolled up 431, people have had to sit back, scratch under their chins and say to themselves that maybe, just maybe, this team is for real.

The defense is for real, and showed so resoundingly as they literally shut off the Delaware St. offense until 3:27 of the second quarter, allowing just 11 yards the whole first half. Although a total team effort the play of defensive tackles John Allen and Eric Cregan and first-time starter Joe Graham at end stood out and exemplified the type of game it was.

"Even though it seemed so one-sided today, it was still very physical out there," said Allen, who also happens to be the New England wrestling champ in the heavyweight division. "They (Del. St.) got our respect.

The books on Allen, Cregan and Graham told the story: Allen — two unassisted tackles, a blocked pass, a fumble recovery and two sacks; Cregan — two unassisted tackles, two sacks, countless intimidation; Graham — three unassisted tackles, two assists, a fumble recovery and two sacks.

In addition, Cregan teamed up with Allen for a safety, and Graham got to eat one quarterback for two points himself.

"In felt great to start," Graham said. "I was nervous the night before and lost some sleep, but I was psyched for it when I got to the field this morning."

Allen wasn't surprised at Graham's outstanding spot-start.

"That's how our defense is," Allen said. "If someone gets injured, like George (Lewis) did this week, someone else can always step in and do the job."

What did not stand out quite as much as the strong performance by the whole UMass defense was the excellence of the special teams. Delaware St. returned three punts for a grand total of six yards. Six Hornet kick-off returns netted just 75 yards.

"We did a little extra special teams work this week and I think it showed," said Cregan. "We got great field position every time we returned a kick or a punt, and we kept them deep in their own end all day."

Of course, points had to be scored, and the Minutemen offense did so at will. All quarterback Tim Fontaine did was throw six passes, complete them all, three for touchdowns, then sit down and watch the fun. On their second possession, Fontaine hit split end Jim Ryan and a 41-yard touchdown pass, in which Ryan showed some good speed outlegging two defenders to the end zone. Fontaine then found tight end Mike Barbiasz for the first of his two touchdowns. Barbiasz came up with a

Kickers come back, beat Eagles, 2-1

By JEFFREY BILLARD
Collegian Correspondent

Senior Co-Captain Elaine Contant scored the winning goal at 27:58 of the second half, to lead the UMass women's soccer team to a 2-1 comeback win over Boston College Saturday.

"We had a team effort and came up with the win," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said. "We did not play well in the first half, but we came together in the second."

BC dominated the first half, but only came up with one goal when freshman Judi Feeley beat UMass goalie Kelly Tuller to the right side at 14:56.

"BC is a very physical team," Banda said. "We were not aggressive in the first half and they were beating us to the ball."

UMass (2-0) came back quickly in the second as junior Angie Caouette scored just four minutes into the period off a corner kick from Madeline Mangini.

Contant then scored the game winner twenty three minutes later, as she connected from the left side on a pass from halfback Stacey Fionis. Contant is the team scoring leader with 2 goals anda 3 assists in the first 2 games.

UMass goalie Kelly Tuller turned away 9 BC shots on the day and shutout the Eagles for the final 75 minutes of the game.

"Kelly saved us quite a few times," Banda said. "She played very well."

When asked about his team's second half comeback Banda said, "Our midfield was more offensive, we were more challenging and aggressive. The team showed guts.

COLLEGE NOTEBOOK: UMass has outshot their opponents 40-19 in the first two games while outscoring them 6-3, but coach Banda is looking for close games in the future.

"The top ten ranked teams are so even that any one of them can win (the division). There will be no more 5-0 games."

Standout halfback Nina Holmstrom saw limited action against BC due to a bruised foot and forward Natalie Prosser did not play at all due to a knee injury she sustained against Westfield State last week.

"Nina is coming along slowly," Banda said. "But Natalie is going to take some time."

The team will play sixth ranked Brown University Wednesday night at 7:00 in Rhode Island.

Maine squeezes by Booters, 1-0

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

Following a 3-1 victory over Williams College, the UMass men's soccer team was brought back to reality Friday, courtesy of the Maine Black Bears, who socked away a neat 1-0 win, on a late second half goal by midfielder Bill Meader.

The loss was the third at home in as many games for the Minutemen (2-4). Additionally, it was the third shutout that UMass has suffered at Boyden this season.

"We played the whole match today," related Maine coach Doug Biggs, whose club raised its mark to 2-2. "A lot of people have taken us for granted," he admitted. "But I don't think we'll be seeing much of that anymore. UMass has a good ballclub with a lot of talent, but I think we played better as a group."

Maine did to UMass what Davis and Elkins College, Southern Connecticut State College, and the University of Bridgeport had done previously. The Bears dominated the Minutemen in virtually every aspect of the game. UMass was outplayed, outhustled, outmuscled and of course outscored by an extremely team oriented Maine offense. The Bears played what has come to be known as "simple" soccer. Maine consistently beat the Minutemen to the ball, making excellent use of field position and ball control.

Conversely, the Minutemen tried to play one-on-eleven soccer, a strategy that so far has failed to work for UMass. The Minutemen tried to finesse the Bears with a lot of individual movement, failing to combine it with the necessary passing and setting of an offense.

"We just have to keep plugging," commented UMass coach Russ Kirdl after the game. "What we really need is a scorer. If a team has a valuable scorer, it makes that team look awfully good. This Maine team is a new ballclub. Fortunately for them, they were able to make good on their scoring chance."

As in all of their previous games, the Minutemen defense stayed tough in the first half, while the offense sputtered, making too many passes without really setting themselves up for good shots. Maine poured the pressure into the UMass end, but fullbacks Gary Deets and Scott Cooper, as well as goalie Brett Olsher, starting in his second straight game, stuffed the Maine offense. The first stanza ended in a scoreless deadlock.

Women golfers finish second in tourney

By MARK BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The Minutewomen opened the season last Friday finishing second to who else but Amherst College. The seen was similar to last spring when UMass finished second to Amherst four out of the five times they met.

The match was hosted by Mount Holyoke College at The Orchards in South Hadley. Amherst College, the winner of this four team match, posted a team score of 383. Amherst was led by Monique Romano, who had the lowest score of the day an 84. UMass finished with a 387. Mount Holyoke followed with a 416, and Springfield was next with a 425.

Judy Simonds, a senior on the UMass team, said "This course has narrow fairways and it's windy so the scores tend to be high."

The conditions were tough (weather) and this being the first match of the year nerves may have played a part. The scores were higher all the way around," said UMass head coach Jack Leaman.

The Minutewomen were led by sophomore, Marlene Susienka Susienka, the defending New England Champion, shot at 87. Her teammates, Robin Hayes and Karen LaVerdiere each posted scores of 97. Simonds finished with a 106 and Barbara Spilewski and Laura Gibbons each had a

Simonds thinks the next match against Amherst College may have a different out come. "We should be able to beat them, if we all play decently. We have three good golfers in Marlene (Susienka), Karen (LaVerdiere), and Robin (Hayes) and we have three that could do well. Barbara (Spilewski), and Laura (Gibbons) have the potential."

"Our team is a lot better than last year. This was mostly a warm-up for us, we should do better in our next match," said Susienka.

Susienka is pleased to have the first match over with. "I think everybody will be more settled down."

The Minutewomen travel to Springfield for a match on Wednesday. They will be playing at Oak Ridge Country Club.

Student judge accused of unconstitutional act; student senate committee set up to investigate

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate Coordinating Committee will set up an ad hoc committee to investigate on allegedly unconstitutional act by a member of the student judiciary the speaker, Lindo Geary onnounced last night after a closed executive session.

Dana Collier, the Student Attorney Generol, brought the matter to the committee's attention but refused to identify the justice. A high ranking student government representative confirmed that Michael Cohen, a resident of Southwest Residential Area, will be the judge under investigation.

According to Collier thejustice took it upon himself "to oversee judicial actions including serving an injuction which was by no means constitutional.

"An injuction was sent out before the case was heard before a tribunal," Collier said. A Tribunal is a panel of three justices, thot has the power to serve injuctions.

Cohen, who was unaware of the planned investigation before he was contacted by the Collegian, said he issued two temporary restraining injuctions Thursday: one freezing the transfer of funds to the Amherst Nursing Home strike committee and the Union Video Center and another preventing the erasure of video tapes of last week's senate meeting.

Lost Wednesday the senate appropriated $300 to the strike committee and $170 to the Union Video Center to have comeras on the strike scene.

Cohen said he withdrew the injuctions before they took effect due to his concern that there might have been some conflict of interest because he spoke against the appropriations at the senate meeting.

Cohen said a student approached him with a case Thursday which called the senate's appropriations into question. He said he was unable to reach Collier and although he had requested a list of the other student judges from her he never received one. He said he heard the case because he "was the only judge available."

Cohen defend his actions by saying, "The procedure that was followed thot night (at the senate meeting) came into significant question."

Collier said the allegedly illegal action is symptomatic of the disorganized state she found the student judiciary system in when she took office two weeks ago.

Conscientious objectors cut MSP aid to students

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

A $1552 deficit in Financial Aid Scholarships has resulted because eight University of Massachusetts professors have not paid their union fees.

Daniel R. Martin, teasurer for the Joint Coordinating Committee of the Massachusetts Society of Professors said the eight professors are "conscientious objectors" to the union.

The Union contracts states, "those bargaining unit members who, because of bonafide religious convictions, choose not to become members of the Union or pay a service in lieu thereof, must submit a dollor amont equivalent to the services fee to a campus scholarship fund."

Sixty-five conscientious objectors status were awarded this year. A committee reviews applications and is headed by Professor Kenneth Dolbeare of the Department of Political Science, a member of the New York Bar Association, and a former Army lawyer dealing with conscientious objector status.

Of the 65 objectors, eight have not paid their $194 fee this year resulting in a $1811 defecity in scholarship funds coupled with fiscal year 1979, said Martin.

"Peaple who refuse to pay into the scholarship fund — some, not all — applied for conscientious objector status in order not to contribute to the union. They thought they might hurt the union finoncially," Martin said.

However, $15,149 has been collected for the Scholarship fund which is disbursed through the Financial Aid office resulting in 50 scholarships for UMass students, he said. The uncollected $1811 is cutting out seven scholorships, Martin said.

Lynne Seymor, office manager of the Joint Coordinating Committee said that professors are unwilling to pay the collective bargaining clause of the contract.

The scholarship funds are totally separate from the union, she said.

Both Martin and Seymor declined to name the eight professors.

Mental Health lends ear

By JOSEPH BARRETT
Collegian Correspondent

Editors note: This is the first of a two-part series on Umass mental health.

Each year about 1600 University of Massachusetts students use the University Mental Health Services.

Mental Health Services, headed by Dr. David P. Kraft, helps individuals cope with a wide range of problems.

Difficulties include trouble with a relationship, difficulty adjusting to social and academic pressures at UMass, misuse of drugs such as alcohol, feelings of depression, anxiety, loneliness, shyness, fear, anger, stress and many others common to the student experience, Kraft said.

"The period between 20 and 25 years old is definitely the mast turbulent for most people," he said.

Mental Health Services, located ot 127 Hills North, is the primary personal counselling and psychatheropy facility for UMass students, but its services extend beyond just the student body. Faculty, staff, and state employees and their dependents enrolled in the University Health Services Valley Health plan also are eligible to use Mental Health Services.

"UMass has many of the same problems, you would find in a small city," explained Kraft, sitting in his office on the second floor of Hills. Two group therapy rooms are located on this floor also.

"The alienation and drug related problems can grow in the UMoss atmosphere, so students turn to us," Kraft said.

"Compared to most other large universities, our system is one of the best in the country," said Kraft. "I would say the peak times for us occur in mid-October trough the rest of the fall semester, and in the spring March and April are the busiest times. This has to do with students thnking about the future and maybe realizing they are flunking out."

Iran must bend

Fighting continues despite UN request for cease-fire

By STEVE K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq agreed yesterday to a U.N.requested cease-fire provided Iran did the same, but the fighting did not subside. Iraqi troops and equipment moved southward inside Iran toward the enemy's oil heartland, where Iranian resistance appeared to have stiffened.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein said in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim that Iraq would heed a Security Council appeal for a cease-fire if Iran also would. Hussein urged the council to "take necessary measures to urge the Iranian side to abide" by the resolution approved Sunday. Iran did not respond immediately to Woldheim.

In other diplomatic moves:

—Iran's ambassador to the Soviet Union, Mohammad Mokri, said at a Moscow news conference Iran might agree to a cease-fire if Iraq's president resigned, Iraq's army surrendered, the Iraqi city of Basra were turned over to Iranian control pending an election there, and Iraq's Kurds were allowed to vote on whether they wanted autonomy or to join with Iran.

—A special envoy representing Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr met in New Delhi with Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and said he urged her, as a leader in the non-aligned movement, to help end the war.

The envoy, Shams Ardakani, said Cubo, the current chairman of the nonaligned bloc, also was playing a role, but he did not elaborate.

—A "goodwill" mission from the Islamic Conference arrived in Baghdad. The mission — headed by conference leaders, President Mohammed Zia ulHaq of Pakistan and conference Secretary-General Habib el Chatti of Tunisia — was told by Iranian leaders earlier in Tehran that it would not be permitted to mediate the Iraq-Iran dispute, but could gather facts.

Iraqi army tanks move through the village of Qasr-E-Shirin in occupied western Iran yesterday as Iranian forces vacated the town following the continued Iraqi advance. (AP Laserphoto)

—Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadeh left here for New York to appear before the U.N. General Assembly and defend Iraq's position in the war, Baghdad Radio reported.

—In Washington, the State Department repeated assurances that the United States intends to remain neutral but said it opposes the seizure of territory by force by either Iraq or Iran.

AP correspondent Steven R. Hurst, reporting from near Qasr-e-Shirin at the northern end of the Iraqi invasion front, said the Iraqis were moving troops, tanks and armored personnel carriers southward toward the oil-rich Khuzestan province where heavy fighting has occurred since the border dispute erupted into war on Monday of last week. Qasr-eShirin, 15 miles inside Iran, is some 300 miles north of Abadan, the major Iranian oil refining port on the Shatt al-Arab waterway separating the two countries.

The implication appeared to be that Iranian forces had been offering stiffer resistance than Iraq had expected on the southern front.

Iraq reported ground fighting along 200 miles of the invasian front, running northward from Abadan to Mehran. Iraq claimed it captured the air force base and radar station at Dezful, 70 miles north of Ahwaz, the capital of Khuzestan province which Iraq claimed to have captured last week.

Tehran Radio carried a military communique saying an Iranian warplane shot down an Iraqi MiG after it attacked an Iranian army helicopter near Ahwaz. The broadcast said the pilot was found dead in the wreckage.

An earlier Tehran Radio broadcast said "all Iraqi pilots who have sought sanctuary in Iran, ar whose planes have been shot down, who baled out and who are being held by Iranian forces, are well and healthy."

The commander of the Iranian navy was quoted by Tehran Radio as saying his ships had forced the Iraqi navy to seek shelter in ports of other Persian Gulf nations.

Kelly says he is innocent

BOSTON — Former Democratic Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. pleaded innocent yesterday to a one-count indictment that charges he extorted $34,500 from Worcester's defunct Masiello & Associates Architects.

Federal Magistrate Peter Princi released Kelly in $10,000 bail, without surety, and set four dates in October for legal filings, hinting that the trial could commence in a matter of weeks.

Kelly, formerly of Oxford, said he now lives alone at 300 74th St. in Miami Beach. He said he is separated from his wife, who resides in Arlington, and said their seven children are "spread out in several parts of the world."

Fire was caused by grease

LEXINGTON — A blaze that drove 160 people Sunday night from the Shearaton-Lexington Motar Inn erupted when grease caught fire in the hotel's kitchen, fire officials said yesterday.

Three firefighters were overcome by smoke fighting the two-alarm fire, which was brought under control about an hour after it started about 10 p.m.

Fire Lt. Robert F. Walton said the fire apparently was caused by grease that had built up in air ducts. He estimated damage at about $300,000.

Guests at the hotel, including two tour groups, gathered and dozed in the lobby after firemen put out the blaze.

TV station to appeal ruling

DEDHAM, Mass. [AP] — A Bostan television station said yesterday it will appeal a court order to keep an investigative series off the air but will abide by court decisions in the freedom of press case.

Judge Francis W. Keating in Norfolk Superior Court ordered Baston Broadcasters Inc., operators of WCVB-TV, not to show a five-part series, scheduled to begin last night, until he could determine whether airing the show would prejudice a scheduled murder trial.

Lawyers for the station said they would appeal the ruling immediately at the state Appeals Court in Boston.

Ban on paraphenalia delayed

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. [AP] — A state law that would ban the sale of illegal-drug paraphernalia beginning Wednesday has been delayed temporarily by a federal judge to allow "head shop" owners to fight the law in court.

A dozen "head shops" that sell various articles including pipes and other devices that can be used with illegal drugs have joined forces with the New England Accessaries Trade Association to fight the law, Stamford attorney Emanuel Margolis said yesterday.

The shop owners claim the law would force many of them out of business.

Margolis and Denver lawyer James M. Smith were granted a temporary restraining order yesterday by U.S. District Judge Warren Egintan. Smith has fought similar laws in Colorado and elsewhere.

Carter says Reagan spells nuclear doom as president

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK [AP] — President Carter suggested yesterday that putting Ronald Reagan in the White House could lead to a "doomed nuclear arms race" and threats of "ill-considered, unnecessary" military intervention around the world.

Resuming his effort to portray his Republican challenger as a warmangering would-be president, Carter did not mention his opponent by name when he said the nation faces a "stark" choice this fall.

He outlined the alternatives this way, in an address to business and labor supporters:

"Will America continue to build military power and strang alliances in a steady and responsible way — or will we throw away our wealth, security and world respect, and perhaps our peace, on a doomed nuclear arms race?

"Will America keep laboring to strengthen the fragile bonds of peace among nations — or will we threaten them and our own safety with ill-considered, unnecessary interventions around the world, as have been advocated repeatedly in the past few months?"

The president was attacked sharply last week by his political rivals when he said the choice this fall is between war and peace. Press secretary Jody Powell conceded the president had overstated the case, but made it clear Carter would keep raising the issue.

Earlier, in another attack on Reagan that avoided mention of the GOP nominee's name, Carter told a union audience that modern-day opponents of the Equal Rights Amendment are direct descendants of past "enemies" of women's suffrage and civil rights.

Carter said the "new Republican leaders" say they want to leave women's rights to the states. "That's just what the enemies of women's suffrage said 70 years ago ... that is what the enemies of civil rights said 20 years aga — leave it to the states."

Reagan, stressing that he favors equal rights for women, does not support the proposed ERA, which would write into the Constitution a ban on sexual discrimination.

The president also hinted broadly that the United States would withdraw from the United Nations if Israel were expelled from the international organization.

Anderson has hope despite polls

HARTFORD, Conn. [AP] — Despite being stuck in the polls behind Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, John Anderson has a strategy to win the November presidential election, his wife said yesterday.

Keke Anderson was beginning a two-day campaign trip through the state when she stopped for lunch at a Hartford restaurant with about a dozen college-age supporters of her husband's campaign.

Mrs. Anderson was asked about her husband's continued poor performance in the polls.

"It does not distress me one bit," she said, adding that polls don't reflect the Anderson strategy — to do well in a few key states.

She said Anderson is concentrating on states like New York, Massachusetts, California, Florida, Ohio, Washington, Connecticut, Vermont and Maine. She said he can win those and thus win the electon.

Notes of regret instead of notes of music will come from the Metropolitan Opera House this season. The directors of the New York City opera house announced the cancellation of the 1980-81 season because of failure to reach an agreement with the musicians union. At a press conference held in New York yesterday, Anthony Bliss, executive director of the 97-year-old company said, "We simply cannot afford to put on a patched together season and expect to live up to the artistic standards of our audience and contributors demand."

Veep debates are cancelled

WASHINGTON [AP] — The League of Women Voters, its invitation rejected by two of the candidates, yesterday canceled the vice presidential debate the organization had planned to hold in Louisville, Ky. later this week.

League president Ruth J. Hinerfeld said she will keep trying to arrange two remaining planned among the presidential candidates.

Republican George Bush followed the lead of GOP presidential nominee Ronald Reagan in turning down the debate invitation. Vice President Wolter F. Mondale said he would debate only if Bush accepted.

Independent vice presidential candidate Patrick Lucey accepted the invitation unconditionally, as did John B. Anderson, the independent presidential candidate who debated Reagan in Baltimore in the league's first debate Sept. 21.

President Carter boycotted the Reagan-Anderson debate in Baltimore, saying he wanted to debate Reagan alone first.

Reagan has since refused a one-onone debate with Carter, insisting there also be a Carter-Anderson debate.

Hinerfeld said the league will continue its discussion with the presidential candidates to work out an acceptable debates package.

Pot confiscated from local farm

An estimated two and a half tons of marajuana was confiscated by State and local police at a farm on Sunrise Avenue in South Deerfield Sunday afternoon.

Two brothers , Royal Hadfield, 36, who lives at the farm and 33-year-old Robert E. Hadfield of New Hartford, Conn., were arrested and charged with possession with intent to sell a class "D" drug (marijuana), State Police Trooper Edward Ashman said.

The arresting officer, Trooper Peter Higgins, found handguns, rifles, and ammunition which were also confiscated.

State police who described the haul as one of the largest ever in western Massachusetts, cut down the marijuana plants andthrew them onto Department of Public Works dump trucks for transport to Northampton Barracks.

Apparently the pot was grown on the farm, and packaged in several buildings before it was shipped out for sale, State police said. "It's a factory," Higgins said.

State police raided the farm at noon on Sunday after getting a tip from South Deerfield police. Three hours later, the state police arrested the Hadfield brothers.

The police have no idea as to the streer value of the confiscated pot, they said.

"I have no idea what the impact on local drug traffic willbe," Ashman said.

The Hadfields were arraigned in Franklin County District Court yesterday afternoon. They are being held in the Franklin County House of Detention on $2,500 cash or $25,000 surity bail each , Ashman said.

The pre-trial hearing hasn't been scheduled yet, but it will take place within the next ten days, he said.

Students to request input to regents

By LAURIE ZUCKER
Collegian Correspondent

A special assistant to the Student Government Association presidents will testify before the newly formed Board of Regents today in Boston, for the implementation of a six-member student advisory committee to the board.

Ronald Keefe Jr., the new assistant said, "I want to see a formalized student boardat the meetings so that our needs will be taken into consideration, and the Regents will see that students are concerned with policy and budget decisions made by the board.

"I want to see the board giving strong support to the Public Education system. I don't feel this is the case now. One of the members of the board said to me, 'they want to help Public Education, but not at the expense of private education.' I don't feel this is a proper attitude for the Regents to take," he said.

Keefe also said he would be testifying against the legislatures' allocation of funds for Public Higher Education.

"It's a question of numbers," said Keefe, "the Legislature and the Board of Regentshas to see a number of students objecting to the cuts in funding. Students have to become educated about issues that concern their welfare. They should write to the Legislature."

This year, only 10 percent to 25 percent of federal monies are allocated for the Commonwealth's public education system. Severe cuts in financial aid will be made due to schools' reduced budgets, and projections for next year are worse, he said.

The SGA, in conjunction with the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy, for which Keefe is a policy planner, and RecognizedSrudent Organizations, is planning and Education Day for students. They also plan to bring interested students to Boston for the Regents' meetings. The Board of Regents meets the first Tuesday of month.

Area experts see FDA overreaction

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

"I think this is somewhat of an overreaction by the FDA although they are serving their purpose of warning the public," said an area gynecologist yesterday in reaction to the Federal Food and Drug Administration's recommendation that all tampon manufacturers put warning labels on their boxes.

It is absurd that these poor women will really worry about this every time they use tampons now," said Dr. Sam Topal, a staff gynecologist at the Hampshire Obstetrics and Gynecological Association in Northampton. "I'm sure it will scare a lot of women."

"The statistics of one to three women out of every 100,000 women makes the incidence of TSS very rare," said Topal, "But it is important to remember that the FDA must warn the public of the chances of any complications that may occur with medications they approve, even if the chance is only one in a million."

Dr. Daniel Clapp of the UMass Health Services said while there is "no one answer" for the tampon user, the medical staff at the Health Services is recommending several preventive measures.

Clapp said careful insertion is important since "it seems to be the case where the rigid plastic applicators of some tampons cause abrasion of the vaginal lining. We are also recommending that women use tampons during the day and switch to use of a sanitary napkin at night as a safety measure.

"Basically, we are advocating a more discriminating and careful use of all kinds of

FDA recommends labels to warn about tampon use

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Food and Drug Administration said yesterday it is "strangly recommending" that five major tampon manufactureres put warning labels on all boxes and brands of tampons.

The agency said it plans to propose a rule requiring a label warning women that tampons pose a risk of the rare and sometimes fatal disease toxic shock syndrome. Meanwhile, it has sent telegrams to manufacturers asking that they add the warning now "as a reponsible consumer protection step."

The agency suggested this wording:

"Toxic shock syndrome TSS is a rare but serious disease that can occur in menstruating women. TSS can cause death. The disease has been associated with the use of tampons. You may therefore want to consider not using tampons or alternating tampons with napkins.

"If you develop high fever and vomiting or diarrhea during your menstrual period, you should remove your tampon immediately and talk to a physician."

FCA spokesman Wayne Pines said the telegrams went out over the weekend to the heads of International Playtex, maker of Playtex tampon; Tampax, maker of Tampax; Kimerbly-C'ark, Kotex; Johnson & Johnson, ob; Campana, Pursettes.

A sixth manufacturere, Procter & Gamble, has recalled all its Rely tampons and is launching a major advertising campaign to tell women not to use them.

tampons," Clapp said.

"We are certainly not recommending that women use the Rely tampon and are also recommending that they do not use the super absorbent type of tampon," Topal said.

Topal said this type is more apt to dehydrate the vaginal lining to a greater degree and create the environment for the breeding of the bacteria. This bacteria, staphlococcus areaus, creates a toxin that enters the bloodstream through a laceration in the vaginal lining, thus producing the symptoms of toxic shock syndrome (TSS).

"Out of all the patients I have seen who are tampon users, I have only encountered two cases recently and one was a UMass student who was referred to us by the Health Services," Topal said, emphasizing the rarity of the disease.

"Both were long term users of tampons and had tried using the Rely brand and were beginning to show symptoms of TSS," Topal said. "They since stopped using that brand with our recommendation.

"We are also suggesting that women change their tampons more frequently and certainly not leave them in for any period of time longer than eight hours.," Topal said.

KKK reflects bewilderment

By ANNE AMOUR
Collegian Correspondent

Two University of Massachusetts professors agree the recent interest in the Ku Klux Klan, a white supremacist organization, is the result of bewilderment in America and society's search for simple answers.

"There is social discontent and unrest in America, said Howard Quint, a UMass historian.

Similar Klan revivals in the past have happened because of similar social disappointment, he said.

Afro-Amercan Studies Professor John Bracey said, "Americans have an expectation to achieve in this country and suddenly they realize they may not reach their goal because things are too complicated. They then reduce things down to simplistic ideas."

Bracey said the Klan's simple "ideas appeal to the discontented members of today's society becuase they greatly reduce issues.

"Things have gatten so complicated that people are going back to basics, like fundamentalism and white supremacy. The whole idea is to make

Prince house seeks refund for evacuation

By FRANCINE MINTZ
Collegian Correspondent

The students of Prince House in Southwest Residential Area, the only dorm which in not receiving refund for the weekend of the water shortage, are trying to negatiate a settlement with Legal Services, Scott Johnson, a Prince House resident said.

Most students are entitled to a refund due to the water shortage and the resulting evacuation on Thursday, September 4. Students will be sent a refund check for the following credits: Rent: $8.80; board: 10 meal plan—$5.29; 14 meal plan—$8.52; 19 meal plan—$9.16, UMass Bursar Robert Mishol said.

Chris Shedd, the assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Finance, said Prince House, which houses approximately 290 students, was the only dorm on campus to remain fully operatianal during the water shortage; the students were housed and fed. She said the dorm housed basically international and far out-of-state students.

Lisa Cilwick, a resident of Prince House from New York, said students were urged over the intercom to go if they had a place to go to, and the dining commons handed out flyers also requesting that students cooperate if possible. Cilwick left campus in an effort to cooperate with the University's request, and it cost her about $40.00, she said.

It was figured out by some students of Prince Hall that the cost to the University would be only $2000—$2500 in addition to the $183,500 it is currently refunding.

"A drop in the bucket," Cilwick said.

Out of state students who remained in other dorms will be receiving refunds, Johnson said. He said he felt "ripped off" and that when he went to Whitmore to talk to someone about it, he got "the runaround."

Jarret concert enthralls audience

Fine Arts Center
September 28

By MICHAEL KENDRICK
Collegian Correspondent

The Fine Arts center Concert Hall was filled with the glowing tone of a superb musician Sunday night, as Keith Jarrett treated a near full house to a memorable evening of sight and sound. Playing solo piano, Jarrett gave a performance of great merit, and left the audience quite enthralled by his highly original improvisations.

In an evening filled with many surprises, the concert started as the introductory applause had barely died down. It appeared as if Jarrett was very anxious to begin without delay. He opened with a long series of arpeggiated chords, intermixed with a highly complex counterpoint. He continued to wander aimlessly through a section of modulations that sounded more like a very difficult excercise than an emotionally-wrought piece of music. After this introduction, Jarrett settled in on a slow blues. Using the traditional twelve bar form, he added his own very non-traditional harmonies, accompanying himself with a stomping foot and moaning voice, as he introduced the first melodic playing of the night, churning out steaming hot lines that would have done Charlie Parker proud.

Throughout the concert, Jarrett seemed as if he was in a trance, created by his own music. While playing, he became swept up in the sound, and simply could not keep his body still. When sitting at the piano stool (which was not very often), he would jerk his back, stomp his feet, and even stand and contort his body in movements that had as much sensuous grace as his music. He even sang a long to the piano melodies, and often moaned at the beauty of the music. One has to wonder if it is agony or ecstasy to improvise such rhapsodies.

The music continued for about forty-five minutes, as Jarrett segued from theme to theme. He ended very suddenly and dramatically in a long rhythmic section, and was halfway off the piano stool before the applause began. The second half of the performance made up for the few shortcomings of the beginning, as Jarrett opened with a very dramatic phrase. After improvising a series of melodies, he pulled the most pleasant surprise of the night as he left the keyboard to pluck the strings of the piano. He became even more percussive as he started to gently slap the inside wood, eliciting the unusal sounds of a log drum. This drew the first interrrupting applause of the night. Unable to resist, he repeated this technique twice, and ended by clapping his hands. Presumptiaus, yes, but he most certainly deserved it! Even this proved not to be enough for either him or the audience, as he gave two encores. The second encore showed Keith at this very best, as he created one of his most characteristic romantic melodies, later dedicated to the late Bill Evans.

Band energizes audience

Robin Lane rocks the Nail

The Rusty Nail Sunderland
September 26

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Illuminated by the emotive fervor of Robin Lane's stage presence, Thursday evening's performance by Robin Lane and the Chartbusters was nothing short of intense. The group's melodic music radiated throughout The Rusty Nail, obliterating the club's cramped and murkey atmosphere.

The Chartbuster's playing was tight and professional, yet it flowed naturally, happily. The band enjoys what it is doing and the crowd responds similarly, dancing and bopping to the tunes, happily. A good time for all.

Robin Lane was a bundle of energy, mirroring the music both physically and emotionally. As each song reached a peak, so did Lane. She bounded and bopped around stage like a female Iggy Pop, just barely under control; chaatic to a point. Her singing range was considerable, conveying a variety of feelings. The Rolling Stones may plead for an "emotional rescue" but Robin Lane lives it in her songs. She means it when she sings "many years ago/you could live a simple life/and not be so frustrated." Robin doesn't distance herself from her audience.

The band knows how to play and their enthusiasm matches their deftness. Tim Jackson's high-pressure drumming provides a firm beat which bassist Scott Baerenwald accentuates. Jackson's playing keeps the audience on its feet, especially on the rollicking favorite "Many Years Ago."

Guitarists Leroy Radcliffe and Asa Brebner are excellent. Their instrumentation provides a fine melodic middle ground bewteen Jackson and Baerwald's rhythm and Robin's vocalization (and occassional guitar playing.)

It was a night of music, both familiar and new. The band performed most of the songs from their Warner Brothers' debut album Robin Lane and the Charbusters. The audience went wild when favorites such as "When Things Go Wrong", "Without You", "Waitin' In Line", and "It'll Only Hurt A Little While" were performed. The positive feelings the audience held for the band were further heightened due to Jackson's energetic drumming during "Many Years Ago" and the impassionate singing of Robin during "Don't Cry." The whole place was up and dancing.

Intermixed with the old material was fair amount of new songs with titles such as "Caught In The Act," "When You Compromise" and "Solid Rock." All were very danceable. One tune in particular, "What People Are Doing," was unusually slow and less melodic, relying heavily on Baerenwald's wavering bass.

The all new inconvenience

On the second anniversary of the Library Tower's closing due to hazardous building defects, the University published a leaflet this fall that helpfully explains to the University community how to use their new library system. This account of where and how one can find books and periodicals is necessarily lengthy and explicit, owing to the strange complexity of the new library system. Of particular intricacy is the description of how to use the new system's main resources: the Goodell Library and the Library Tower.

Following the leaflets guidelines, one might, for example, find a periodical listed in the card catelogue, located in Goodell. Once this is done, another listing, a red-covered, multivolume computer printout must be consulted to determine whether the periodical is in Goodell or in the Library Tower. If it is not "designated in the Pioneer Valley Union List by the location UMAS-UNIV and the phrase 'volumes held since 1965 or later in Goodell' " then one should head off to the Tower to find it. If it is nowhere to be found, then for advice one should return to Goodell wherein "reference materials and staff" are contained. Back at Goodell one may be told that because the periodical in question is not listed in the Goodell printout by call number nor with UMAS-UNIV periodicals shown in the Pioneer Valley Union List or the blue-covered computer printout in Goodell, it must be back in the Tower and go look again.

All serious libray users—especially earnest scholars—might, with what is left of their reservoir of indignation, look at this explanation of where's and how's and ask the University, "Why?" Other than a one line mention in the leaflet's first paragraph of books being transferred to Goodell from the Tower in 1979 "following the discovery of building defects in the brick facade of the University Tower Library," there is no comment on what is being done to correct the building's defects. The "library system" is merely an adaptation to an inconvenience—not a solution or, as the leaflet implies, an orderly arrangement of cataloguing and materials for the convenience of users. They might ask and they might get an answer.

If an auto manufacturer sold a car with a design flaw that caused the windows to jam permanently open, would owners let the company get away with calling this a "ventilation system"? Probably not. They would demand to have the defect repaired. They would sue for compensation.

Letters

Israel unfairly singled out

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter [Collegian 9/26] sign- ed by a whole host of Third World organizations. Upon reading the letter I was horrified and indignant that such bla- tant falsehoods were printed in a newspaper that supposedly serves an intellectual community. I suggest the authors of that letter review the facts — both past and current — before submitting a letter to a newspoper.

First of all, the authors claim that the so-called "threatening phone call" was "one of the terrorist methods used by the Zionists." As far as terrorism, the P.L.O. and other groups organized for the liberation of Palestine have a far greater documented history of terrorism — which entails more than threatening phone calls. Remember Munich, Ma'alot and countless others? Zionism is indeed a movement with deep historical roots but it is certainly not a racist movement. It is a legitimate liberation movement of the Jewish people.

Isn't it odd that there are countless oppressive regimes in the world, but only the Jewish state is singled out for condemnation. Do I detect the underpinnings of anti-Semitism?

As far as Israel's "full support" for racist South Africa, not only does Israel deal with South Africa on a minimal basis [less than 1 percent] but many other nations have relations with South Africa. Once again the state singled out for condemnation [along with the U.S.] is Israel. The authors of course do not mention the countless Israelis who work in the under-developed nations of Asia and Africa sharing their technological and agricultural knowledge with those who can benefit from it.

Another claim is made that "the Zionists, by blocking emigration to the U.S. and to other European countries, made the number of Jewish settlers enough to establish the state of Israel." I can only wonder where the writers got their information. It was not the Zionists, but the leaders of the U.S. and European nations who restricted the emigration of the Jews into their countries. In the early 1900's, Palestine was under Turkish rule and the Turkish sultan told Herzl that he would allow only minimal restricted emigration of the Jews. In 1903, the British were the ones who proposed the "Uganda Scheme" to Herzl. They were willing to let the Jews emigrate in large numbers to British East Africa, which is now the country of Kenya. Herzl was concerned only with securing a place on this earth where the Jews could live without the fear of persection. However, the Jews had and always will have a deep religious and historical affinity with the land of Israel and did not want to establish a Jewish state anywhere else. The land acquired by the Zionists in Palestine before 1948 was purchased legally from the wealthy Arab and non-Arab landowners.

To say that the Zionists "conducted their own program of genocide against the Palestinian people" is another blatant misuse of facts. The Palestinians were never forced to leave Palestine by the Zionists. Rather, they were urged to leave by their own Arab leaders, who were confident that they could drive the Jews into the sea and claim all of Palestine for themselves. There certainly was no genocide and to use a term as strong as that is unfair and untruthful. The current situation of the Palestinian refugees is unfortunate, but the Arab leaders of today are adding to the situation by using these people as pawns and keeping the wound open in order to propogate their own interests.

The Palestinians rejected partition plans on more than one occasion, determined not to coexist with the Jews, who have always had a community in Palestine. The Jews have taken a barren wasteland and transformed it into a beautiful, flourishing, fertile industrial nation. I have just returned from seven months in Israel and have seen the accomplishments that have taken place. I am a Jew, yes, and I am a humanist as well. I feel greatly for the Palestinian people, having also known what it feels like to be without a home...

I suggest in the future references to Israel and Zionism be tempered with a knowledge of history and a wider understanding of the current complex variables that affect the situation in the Middle East. I also hope that the rampont anti-Semitism comes to a halt. There is no reason to assume that the Jews are a morally superior people or that their state is flawless — obviously not. But to constantly condemn only the Jews and Israel for the misfortunes and oppression of the world's people is a result of ignorance, anti-Semitism and scapegoating. The Jews, as history shows, have been the world's scapegoats long enough. Israel has many problems, but is trying to solve these in the ways best for her and her people, while being careful not to inflict on others what she herself has borne for the past 2000 years.

Perhaps the Palestinian supporters and the Zionists on campus can get together and share not only facts, but emotions and thoughts as well. The segregation and the bantering back and forth through letters in the Collegian does more harm than good, and serves only to divert our attention from the real problem at hand. Personal interaction between the two groups is the first step toward helping all of us acquire a more mature, intellectual understanding of a complex and emotional problem. I, for one, am ready for such an interaction.

Preachers and Politics

To the Editor:

I am writing this in response to Bab Carrol's letter [Collegian 9/25.] In it he condemns Christian leaders for getting involved in the political process and making suggestions to voters. The author isn't the only one with such opinions, however, it seems to be in vogue to criticize religious leaders who care about the moral and spiritual welfare of the U.S. I cannot speak for these leaders but it appears to me that as leaders, they have the obligation to stand up for their beliefs, whether grounded in Church doctrine or the Holy Bible.

Cardinal Madeiros' postoral letter was to Catholics in the Boston area, not to everyone in the nation, warning them about the sinfulness of supporting abortion, or candidates who do. The Catholic Church and Evangelical-Fundamentalist Christians believe that abortion is murder. Jerry Falwell and other Christian leaders are concerned with the decline of American morality, of which abortion is one aspect.

Rape, violent crimes, divorce, 'child neglect, and abortian, as well as other crime, is increasing at a very rapid rate. One of the reasans behind this is the overall lack of morality and discipline in our society. Many conservative candidates have similar outlooks and opinions about these issues as does the "New Christian Right." What is so awful about people like Falwell bringing to their followers an awareness of these candidates and their standards?

Rev. Martin Luther King was an outspoken and respected civil-rights activist. Fr. Joseph Drinan and the Berrigan brothers spoke out against our involvement in the Viet Nam war. There weren't many people upset with them when they tried to create an awareness of, and salution to, those issues. Why then, criticize Falwell and others for speaking out against abortian? If they spoke out against nuclear power, for example, and brought to our attention the candidates' records would this be too audacious?

As citizens of a free country, we can reject their ideologies if we chose, but you can't prevent them from exercising their political and religious rights. Theologian Dietrich Bonhoffer spoke out against Hitler in pre-war Germany. He was later sent to prison and executed. The press at the time condemned him for his "interference in politics." Is this to be our mentality today?

Jerry Falwell and others want to put an end to "murder" as they see it. They are practicing their constitutional right and spiritual authority by raisng an awareness of issues that go against God's word and church teachings. I feel we, as voting Americans, sho- ve a thorough knowledge of all issues. If my pastor suggested that I vote for a certain candidate, I would take into consideration his spiritual authority and political and scriptural knowledge of the issues before I voted as an individual, not as a robot.

Fresh fruit propagates fresh ideas

The Dead Kennedys
Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables
Cherry Red Records)

By STEVEN WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

I think that this new album by the Dead Kennedys, Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables, is really good. Now, some people who don't like punk rock in the first place will disagree with me. They'll think all the songs sound the same, or the band can't play their instruments, or even that the whole thing is in bad taste. Who cares about those people? Certainly not me. Anyway, they probably only pick up the Collegian for the comics, and since all the comics suck this semester, we don't have to worry about them.

Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables picks up where the 1977 Britpunk groups like the Sex Pistols and Clash left off. It retains their sense of disgust with modern people and the modern world, as well as the anarchic/leftist political overtones. Basically, the Dead Kennedys' attitude is: People nowadays have become docile and weak, like unprotesting sheep. As such, they are being pushed around by exploitative politicians and capitalists. This is wrong, but people are too dumb to either notice or do anything about it. This, of course, is nothing new. In fact, in the hands of lesser bands, this stance sounds tired and dated. But the Dead Kennedys make it work.

Then there's the music. It's loud, fast, three chord ramalama stuff, i.e., pure rock and roll. The constantly varying (though never slow) tempo keeps the songs from becoming monotonous, and the combination of snarling guitars, ripping vocals, and a powerful rhythm section make this record a delight. The band consists of Jello Biafra on lead vocals, East Bay Ray on guitar, Klaus Fouride on bass and vocals, the Ted(ha-ha-ha) on drums. Also, a few other musicians play on various cuts.

The Dead Kennedys know the true value of offensiveness and use it to the hilt. With a name like Dead Kennedys and songs like "Kill the Poor, Holiday in Cambodia" and "I Kill Children" they are obviously out to offend. Why? Simply stated, offensiveness makes you think. When you are offended you become angry. When you are angry, you justify your anger by thinking about why you are angry, and in doing so, you learn something. This makes music like Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables infinitely more valuable than all the easy listening and southern rock slush drifting around. Naturally, certain rotting vegetables among us would disagree, but I tend to doubt that they've even read this far, so again, who cares?

> Basically the Dead Kennedy's attitude is: People nowadays have become docile and weak . . .

Although the Dead Kennedys are from California Fresh Fruit For Rotting Vegetables is available only as an import, and as far as I know there are no plans to release it in this country. This makes it somewhat difficult to find; however, by all means persevere. This album is well worth the effort. A dose of fresh fruit is great after all those rotten vegetables.

Split Enz

True colors show through

Split Enz
True Colours (A&M)

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

As prelude to this review, I must confess that I love gimmicks. From giant rolling papers in Cheech and Chong albums to Jethro Tull's Stand Up, with its 3-D effects, there's nothing like a record that gives you something to do besides just listen to it.

Bearing this in mind, the new Split Enz album True Colours is just the coolest thing in the world. Much more desirable, say, than a Rod Stewart picture disc, J. Geils on red vinyl, or even Elvis Presley's 8 record set. True Colours, you see, is pressed on a laser-etched disc, which gives varying prism-like effects in increasingly hip designs as it spins on your turntable. I would advise strobe light owners and drug users to buy two copies of this record—even if it means trading your Pink Floyd collection or limiting your incense allowance.

Unfortunatly, some of True Colours didn't get laser etched enough, and indeed deserves to spend time under rock and roll's "cone of silence." But d espite the unevenness and occasional blandness of this record, there is no question that when the Enz hit, they're right on target. "What's the Matter with You," the strongest cut on this album, has the power and straightforwardness of an early Who or Small Faces tune, as well as treating listeners to a blistering organ solo by Eddie Rayner. This song singlehandedly makes up for two really boring ones—the pseudo Eurodisco "Choral Sea" and the hopeless "I Hope I Never."

Of course the most striking thing about his album for those of us who've followed this band through their six LP career is how much they've toned down their image. I mean these guys used to look stranger than Skafish! Nowadays they just look like so many other whimpering new wave types—a move that along with the refined commercial sound of True Colours is helping them to garner a larger following in their native New Zealand, as well as world-wide.

Split Enz' wardrobe still contains 150 costumes, but songs like "I Got You" and "Nobody Takes Me Seriously" are straightforward pop. "I Got You" is the single, and is memorable as such thanks to a sing-along chorus and Noel Crombie's unexpected percussion during the synthesizer solo.

I'll always respect Split Enz for the chances they've taken, and for the fact that they hang around with Roxy Music's Phil Manzanera; but I sincerely hope they don't keep trying so hard to "make it." Group leader Tim Finn has said: "Now we are simpler and more effective? We are trying to get across the board, but we've only scratched the surface." With luck, the success of True Colours will encourage the Enz to expand on their new slick pop sound, and help redefine "Art-Rock" in the years to come.

Fair offers activities display

By TRICIA DONOVAN
Collegian Correspondent

A unique opportunity for students to explore the different organizations and groups on campus will be presented on Wednesday during the annual Campus Referral Fair.

Sixty-five University of Massachusetts agencies and organizations will be represented, said Joanne Gravell, public relations director for the fair, which is a cooperative effort between the Information Data Bank and the Campus Resource Network.

A Coordinating Committee was formed in August to plan and cultivate this year's fair. The committee consists of representatives from the Student Activities Board, the Campus Resource Network, the Information Data Bank and Health Services. Gravell represents the Health Service on the committee.

The Referral Fair which will run from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium for members of the campus community to become familiar with the extracurricular activities and facilities available to both students and faculty, such as student exchange programs, Gravell said.

Twenty of the groups involved in the fair have donated prizes for a free raffle, Gravell said. Anyone who stops by the fair can sign up for any number of prizes that are being raffled. The drawings for the prizes will start at 2 p.m., she said.

The Outing Club is donating two nights for two at the club's cabin in the White Mountains and the Student Senate is offering a gift certificate for the Campus Center store, said Gravell.

Women harriers down Springfield

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

UMass's Tricia Moores surprised both herself and her teammates last Friday by finishing first overall and leading the women's cross-country team to a 21-38 win over Springfield College at Springfield. It was the team's first victory of the season and the first time Moores has won a cross-country race in her three years of running for UMass.

Moores ran an 18:23 over the 5000 meter course and was followed closely by UMass's Judy McCrone who finished second in 18:27. After McCrone was junior Cathy Petrick taking eighth place with "Dill" Wilson and Caroline Gardner coming in fourth and fifth respectively for UMass.

"It's something I never imagined doing. Judy and I ran together the whole way and I knew by the pace that I could stick with her," Moores said. Moores, a junior, was the fourth or fifth runner for the team last year.

Friday's meet saw the return of senior "Dill" Wilson to competition after recovering from the flu. "I think I was still weak, but I feel a lot better," Wilson said. Wilson was a top runner for UMass last year.

The team's next meet will be this Saturday in New Jersey at the Rutgers Invitational. The top teams in the East are expected to duel in their first major meet of the season at Rutgers.

"It will be our first chance to see how we stand up to everyone else and should be our best performance so far this season," Judy McCrone said.

Boston College nips netwomen

By ANTHONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team was defeated tis past Saturday in a close match against Boston College 5-4. The contest took place in Chestnut Hill and dropped the netwomen's record to 6-2.

The match got off to a very disappointing start for UMass, when number one singles, Barbara Mills, sprained her anke mid-way through the first set. In spite of the injury, Mills continued to play and subsequently lost to Bernedett Diaz 6-4, 6-2. The injury occurred when Mills tripped on a ball left on the court.

"The worst thing abut the injury was that there were no medical trainers at the match so it took a long time before we even got ice," said coach John Beal. "She could be out for as much as three weeks."

The UMass singles players lost five of their six matches including a closely contested match involving UMass's Elizabeth Sullivan and B.C.'s Kathy Lynch 7-6, 6-3. "Liz played very well against Lynch who used various tactics, including an underhand serve, in order to win," said Beal.

The netwomen's only winner in singles competition was the number five Paula Natalia who won her match in a though three setter 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

In doubles play, UMass cleaned up by winning all three matches. Number one doubles, Kathy Burke and Carolyn Tarbell, started it off by winning 6-3, 6-3. Next were number two doubles, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian, who won 6-4, 6-2. Finishing up was the third team, Lynn O'Sullivan and Tamby Mincer, who also won 6-4, 6-2.

"B.C. rearranged their line up, just for us," said Beal. "I think that reflects the respect the other teams have for us. If not for Barbara's injury we would have won."

Coming up on Wednesday will be a home match against the University of New Hampshire. The match will be played on the NOPE courts at 3 p.m.

Spikers go 2-2 at Invitational

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Experience is coming to see the UMass women's team, as well as separate victories within the tournaments it plays, but the overall taking of a tournament remains elusive. At last weekend's Central Connecticut State College Invitational, the Minutewomen defeated its first two opponents, while losing to the following two.

UMass rolled over C.W. Post 15-11, 15-4 and the University of New Haven 15-6, 6-15, 15-8. The Minutewomen put together a team drive much like its performance at the UMass Invitational—good overall defense, especially in blocking and in passing.

The Minutewomen stalled against the University of New Hampshire, losing 3-15, 2-15. They then fell to Providence College 15-17, 2'15.

"Everything was flowing well," said senior Brenda Simmons, "but after the New Haven match, we couldn't get going. We lost concentration, and every tem was out to beat us. We lost, but we weren't beaten."

The JVs open its season tonight with a match against Mount Holyoke College at MHC. Game time is 6:00 p.m.

Rams crush netmen, 8-1

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

The men's tennis team traveled to Rhode Island Saturday and suffered their first defeat of the season at the hands of the Rams. The loss evens the Minutemen's record at 1-1. Rhode Island, second place finishers in the EAA's, took the match by a convincing 8-1 tally.

UMass entered a line-up that had Sergio Strepman at #1 singles and Neil Mackertich hitting #2. Both went down though, Strepman 6-3, 6-2, and Mackertich 6-1, 6-2. Matt Modlish, hitting #3 singles and in his first match since the EAA's, beat his opponent to gain the Minuteman's only point for the day. His triumph ended up 6-4, 6-7, 7-5.

Because Rhode Island notched the necessary five points in singles play, the Doubles matches became academic and Coach Steve Williams inserted two alternate teams. It was Mike Jordan and Mark Gelinas at #3, Neal Westerman and Greg Sanders at #2, and Neil Mackertich teaming up with Matt Modlish to hit #1. As it turned out, all three doubles pairings went down to defeat.

Coach Williams wasn't surprised by his team's loss, but felt there were some factors contributing to it. "Mark Huetteman and Mike Harrelson didn't make the trip and they both would have seen action and could have helped. And if we took the #5 and 6 singles, I would have kept my first doubles teams intact and we could have masterminded a 5-4 victory."

Instead, they sit at .500 and look at a schedule having three matches in four days. It's home this Wednesday at 2:30 vs. Connecticut on the Boyden Courts. Then it's Westfield State on Thursday also at home, and Vermont away on Saturday.

Stickers beat Vt.

"It was just one of those days," said Judy Strong of the UMass women's field hockey team as they beat the University of Vermont Saturday, 1-0.

"We did a lot of good things; we moved well and outshot them, but they were everywhere."

UMass had a total of 14 corner shots and 18 shots on the Vermont goal, but Vermont played "hit-n-run" field hockey covering the field well and playing a very fast game.

Strong, herself, was disappointed with her game. In the first 3 minutes of the game, UMass received a penalty flick on the Vermont goal. Strong usually takes these strokes, and she took this one only to miss it; not just the goal, but the net.

"I couldn't believe it, I've never missed a stroke before!" said Strong.

The sole goal was scored by Tina Coffin in the first half of the game.

The next game for the women in today at 3:00 p.m. against Mount Holyoke. The game will be played at NOPE field.

Old and new Minutemen shut off opponents

By STEPHEN FREKER and DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

There are some new faces and also some seasoned veterans on this year's defensive squad. When they are put together it is obvious that the UMass defense is a formidable combination which will cause problems for opposing offenses.

Delaware State had problems with the overpowering defense Saturday afternoon in their 39-0 walloping at the hands of the Minutemen. Problems like Joe Graham, Eric Cregan, Scott Crowell, John Allen and the entire defensive unit for that matter.

Together they shut down and shut out the Delaware State offense which did not cross their own 20 yard line until midway through the second quarter. The only first down that Delaware State could gain up to that point was on a broken play during which quarterback Bret Weber scrambled for 12 yards only to be crunched by strong safety Max Jones.

"They're doing a fantastic job. A lot is expected of them and they're doing a great job living up to it," head coach Bob Pickett said of the defensive squad.

Last week against Villanova, the defense played well, holding their touted offense to just 12 points to UMass' 24. Against Delaware State, the defensive unit was a dominant force, holding the Hornets to 11 yards in total offense in the first half.

With a 32-0 lead at the end of two quarters of play, Pickett took most of the starters out and got a look at their backups.

There might have been some anticipation of a letdown this week against Delaware State after such an emotional first-game win over Villanova.

"I didn't feel that we'd have a letdown," said defensive tackle Eric Cregan." "We saw films all week of these guys and the coaches warned us that we couldn't take advantage of them. We can't start looking ahead. We try to take them one at a time."

Cregan created serious problems for Delaware State all afternoon. He sacked quarterback Weber twice and was involved in both two-point safeties, tallied by the defense, scoring one and assisting on the other.

The tandem of Cregan and defensive end Graham, a first time starter, was a major weapon used by the Minutemen to pull the plug on Delaware State's offensive attack.

Each time the Hornets attempted an offensive maneuver to the right strong side, they were met by Cregan and/or Graham. The two accounted for five sacks in the game.

"He (Graham) played really well today, especially for a first-time starter. I think that shows how deep our defense is. If someone gets injured, like George Lewis did this week, somebody else can always step in and do the job," said John Allen.

Allen, playing alternately with Scott Rose in place of the injured Ray Benoit, also had a standout game, consistently fighting off double team blocks and quickly penetrating into the Delaware State backfield. The senior nose guard had two unassisted tackles as well as a fumble recovery early in the first quarter.

"I got to play quite a bit last season and so far this season. I've been alternating with Scott Rose. We're not competing against each other. We just do what we have to do to help the team. This team is really together this year and I think that helps," said Allen.

Allen and other defensive stalwarts such as first team All Yankee Conference tackle Dan Petrie and senior co-captain Frank DiTommaso and Crowell patrolling the line as well, the UMass defense was a tough one for any opponent to crack.

"Defensively, we wanted to dominate this team. We had a pretty good showing as a unit last week against Villanova and we were looking to improve this week. People were fired up today and that's how it's been since camp. It's a real emotional ball club," said Cregan.

On the day, the defense chalked up seven sacks, four interceptions and three fumble recoveries. They also scored ten points with two safeties and a touchdown in the second quarter when Crowell blocked a Delaware State punt and Dwayne Lopes recovered it in the end zone for six points.

"Coach (Jim) Reid (UMass defensive coordinator) is tough," said Joe Graham. "Every practice seems just as intense as the games. But it pays off like it did today. We were ready for this game and we'll be ready for URI next week."

Booters face Crimson

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Coming off a 1-0 loss to the University of Maine, the UMass men's soccer team travels to Cambridge tomorrow to battle the Crimson of Harvard.

The 2-4 Minutemen will be looking to end their scoring drought against the Crimson who are also off to a shaky start with a 1-3 record.

The Minutemen, whose largest offensive output came against Williams last week when they scored three goals, have been shut out three times this season. The Crimson's best performance came in a 4-1 victory over MIT.

Harvard is led by captain Mike Smith, a forward from Leicester, England. Two other major forces for the Crimson are Mauro Keller Sarmiento (Buenos Aires) and Lance Ayrault (Seattle). Smith banged in two goals in the MIT contest, while Keller Sarmiento and Ayrault each scored one.

"They're a good team," UMass coach Russ Kidd said. "They're not having a successful season but they're always tough."

UMass is having a frustrating season thus far. But there are bright indications that the Minutemen can and will break out of their slump.

The UMass defense is a solid one. Goalies Matt Esteves and Brett Olsher, who has started the last two games, have both proven themselves as top rate tenders.

"What we really need is a scorer," Kidd said.

The Minutemen need someone to take charge offensively. Tony M. Dias, who raised is goal total to four by striking for two scores against Williams, is the likely candidate. The junior Ludlow native has been playing along side Tony G. Dias since high school.

"We're a frustrated team," Kidd admitted. "We'll see what happens."

The Minutemen of Massachusetts are still very much in the running after the first round of the New Englands yesterday at Glastonbury Hills Country Club in Connecticut.

The UMass team is tied for fourth place in a field of forty-two teams, with the University of Connecticut. Each team has a score of 319. The Rhode Island Rams lead the tournament with a score of 308. In second is Central Connecticut University with a score of 310. They are followed by Bryant University which posted a 316.

The UMass team was led by senior Marty Hunt and sophomore Steve Midttun. Both had 79s. Other UMass scores were Bob Grassetti with an 80, Bob Gladchuk with an 81, and Jay McConnell with an 83.

"We're definitely still in the hunt. Rhode Island is very strong, and they've been playing well all year. I think if we get a couple strokes better with each man we have a shot," said UMass coach Ed Vlach.

UMass will be looking to make its move in the second and final round being played today at Ellington Ridge Country Club in Connecticut.

Ultimate team now 9-1

By JOEL ZUCKERMAN
Special to the Collegian

A pair of come-from-behind triumphs this past weekend over Harvard and Tufts brought the UMass ultimate team record to an awesome 9-1, with the team winning their last eight matches.

In the first game Saturday in Boston, Tufts jumped out to a 4-1 lead. Crisp, short and precise offensive passes proved to be they key and by the half, Zoo Disc had closed to within one goal.

Tufts, a team that beat Zoo Disc last spring by the score of 12-3, came out strong in the second half. They widened their 7-6 lead to 12-8. A poorly thrown disc ricocheted off of the foot of an unaware Tufts defender and into the hands of Larry Denaro in what was the start of a UMass come back. Denaro parleyed the fluke into a quick Zoo Disc goal, and to keep the momentum up, a fresh team was sent in.

With minimal substitution, co-captain Buzz Ellsworth, (returning from a foot injury) first year Zoo Disc'er Dean Cretsinger, and solid veterans Denaro, Gary Rotatori, Jack Foley, KR Boardman, Tom Baylock and Jim Melody brought Zoo Disc back from a three goal deficit to a two goal advantage. UMass won, 16-14.

Against Harvard, Zoo Disc found itself with a slim one-goal halftime advantage, 7-6. UMass remained lethargic at the start of the second half and Harvard managed to score the first four goals, taking a 10-7 advantage.

It was then that Zoo Disc applied the pressure. Senior Tom "Headlock" Baylock threw two touchdowns, cast-laden Reggie Mimms caught two TD's and Denaro and Cretsinger contributed one of each. Zoo Disc outscored Harvard 9-2 in the last 15 minutes to insure against the upset. They won their second match of the afternon 16-12.

Saturday's efforts marked the second consecutive weekend that the Zoo Disc team has swept the field and won the tourney. Next weekend two dozen teams will be descending into Amherst from all over the Middle Atlantic and Northeastern states. The Ivy's will be there, (Brown, Dartmouth and Yale) and the powers (Boston Aerodisc, The Knights of Nee and Middlebury) will be there.

The New England Invitational Frisbee Championships will also be held at UMass this weekend.

Are raindrops more important than team support?

It is May of 1981, a day not too far away for some, a time always approaching in the minds of most on this campus, for it is one day of the week after graduation.

Two recent graduates stroll by the Student Union Building by the truck where they had recently picked up an "Index," the UMass yearbook.

Maureen Sullivan

They complain about the hot weather, talk about the summer ahead and the future of their lives in general. Peering into the yearbook, they stop at the sports section.

"Hey, there's Gary Pearson," says one with an appropriate admiration, "he did pretty good, didn't he?"

"Yeah," says the other, looking at the stats, "did you see him against Villanova?"

"No. I didn't go to any of the football games. I had to watch the grass grow."

"Yeah, I guess being in Plant and Soil Science can really take up a lot of time."

"I wasn't in that. I was a History major."

His friend didn't notice that remark, for he was continuing to thumb through the sports section.

"Hey, remember when we were freshmen," he said, stopping at the basketball pictures, "And we had to wait three hours at the Cage just to get a seat? God, those were the days . . ."

"I don't remember waiting at any dumb game at the Cage," replied the other, "I never went to the Cage. I had to watch the clouds go by."

"I thought you said you were a History major."

"I was. I just had a thing for clouds."

The two wandered past the Grad Research Tower and past the NOPE fields. As if by coincidence, the kid with the yearbook turns to some of the women's sports.

"Can you believe how fast the women's sports grew on this campus when we were here? Look at this—some of them have gotten national recognition. There's a person on the field hockey team . . ."

". . . who made the Olympic team. Yeah, I know that. Just about everybody knows that. Judy Strong, yeah. She's the one."

"Did you ever see her, or were the clouds too important that day?"

"You know I never went to those games, but it wasn't because of the clouds."

"Was it because of classes?"

"No—I had to count the raindrops."

"Are you a nature freak or something?"

"No, it just game me something to do."

His friend could not believe this. "Jeezus, if you didn't have anything to do, why didn't you go to a game, if not to support the team, at least to give you something to watch? You missed a helluva lot—soccer, volleyball, gymnastics, tennis, swimming, baseball, softball, lacrosse, football, basketball—and now it's too late! You'll be gone soon, and the only things you'll remember about UMass sports will come from this yearbook."

"I never went to the games," said his friend, "only because I found other things to do. I like these teams, but I had more important things to do. Now if you'll excuse me, I must tend to my grass. It's grown so much."

Student Senate panel sets rules for probe of Judge's injunctions

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The special committee looking into the conduct of student Judge Michael Cohen met behind closed doors yesterday to lay down the ground rules of the investigation, Student Government Officials said.

Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Lindo Geory said the four committee members — Robert Cleory, Porticio Molumphy, Kenneth Moore and Kevin O'Leory — met to discuss how the investigation would be conducted, but neither she nor the committee members would reveal any details of the noontime meeting.

"People don't be talking about it. It must be done fairly. This is a very serious situation," Geory said.

The committee was created by the senate Coordinating Committee monday night to investigate the conduct of a student judge who had allegedly violated the SGA constitution. While Cohen, a resident of Thoreau House in the Southwest Residential College, was not specifically named by the committee, and SGA official confirmed monday that Cohen is the Judge in question.

Another SGA official also said that Attorney Generol Dono Collier brought the matter to the attention of the Coordinating Committee following Cohen's issuance of two injunctions on Friday.

According to Cohen, the temporary injunctions, which he said he withdrew before they took effect, were issued against the student senate for actions they took at last week's meeting.

The first injunction would have frozen the transfer of senate funds to support the Amherst Nursing Home strike and to the Union Video Center for videotaping of the picket line events, Cohen said. The second order would have prevented UVC from destroying videotapes of last week's senate meetings, he added.

Cohen said a student had filed a petition with him expressing concern over the procedures used by the senate to allocate $300 to a fund in support of the strike and $170 to videotape the strike activities. Cohen said he issued the "preliminary temporary injunction" to prevent the money from being spent or the senate meeting tapes, which could be used as evidence, form being destroyed.

Cohen was present at the senate meeting and vehemently spoke out against the strike support measure. At one point during the debate, Cohen was refused recognition to speak because he is no longer a senator.

According to the SGA constitution, a "tribunal" of three judges must be formed to hear a case after a complaint has been filed with the clerk of the Judiciary. In this case, an SGA official said, no complaint was filed with the clerk and no tribunal was formed. and no tribunal was formed.

In addition, the constitution also bars a judge who has a personal involvement in a case from hearing the case.

Cohen said the petition was filed with him because no clerk exists, and he chose to act quickly to prevent the funds from being spent. He said his action would have preserved the case until a tribunal could be assembled and the case heard.

"I didn't hold court. I didn't hear the case. I didn't claim to act as a tribunal," Cohen said, "I just wanted to allow the rights of the student to file a petition and have it heard."

Cohen also said he withdrew the injunctions after being informed that enough judges existed to form a tribunal, which he did not previously believe to be the case.

Board of Regents:
Student membership opposed

BOSTON (AP) — The state's higher educational "superboard" does not want a student member, but it deferred a final decision yesterday, after objections from former Gov. Foster Furcolo.

And the 15-member Board of Regents recommended that students be members of less powerful boards in the new reorganization of public higher education.

At one point in its monthly meeting, the regents seemingly voted against having a student member.

Regent David J. Beaubien of Sudbury said views from students would be provided through "interface" monthly with an advisory panel of students from other boards.

But board member Furcolo, of Chestnut Hill, quickly stated his opposition and said, "I think there should be a student on this board."

The remark touched off a new debate and it was finally decided to postpone a decision until the next session, Oct. 14.

Arnold S. Friedman of Longmeadow cited the "difficult task" of finding one student who could represent the views of 100,000 students.

An Wong of Lincoln, another regent, suggested that instead of a negative recommendation, the board could leave it up to Gov. Edward J. King to decide.

The board voted unanimously to ask King to recommend a statutory change that would put a student on the other boards which represent segments of higher education.

The regents authorized the search committee for a chancellor to place advertisements in several publications. Dr. Charles A. Sanders of Woyland is chairman of that subcommittee.

The regents were told that they could expect 200 to 300 applications for the new post temporarily filled by Paul Guzzi, King's chief secretary.

The screening committee announced it will also consider "nominations" from the academic community, as well as formal applicants.

Anderson's spouse brings campaign to Smith College

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

"Ronald Reagan clearly misled the American people during the Presidential debates," said Keke Anderson, wife of presidential candidate John Anderson.

Anderson spoke yesterday at her husband's campaign headquarters in Florence, Massachusetts.

Anderson was in Massachusetts, a key Anderson state to reinforce the support her husband's campaign has gained in the Commonwealth.

Anderson said Reagan misled the American public by apparently answering when in fact he failed to do so. "Jane Bryant Quinn asked both candidates if they would be willing to release information on what the effects of their economic proposals would be on inflation. My husband said he would be willing to do so. Candidate Reagan said he already did so when in fact he had not," she said.

"Jane Quinn wrote a column the next day saying that Reagan had not released these figures and their effects," Anderson said.

Anderson said she believed Reagan debated her husband because he was forced to. "Reagan was forced into accepting the debate after the political incident in Nashua."

On February 23, Reagan debated Bush in Nashua, New Hampshire. Reagan wanted to debate the other presidential candidates (Baker, Bush, Crane, and Anderson) and Bush refused. He said he would only debate Reagan. The other presidential candidates showed up, however, with Bush almost ignoring their presence.

Anderson said the debate disproved Carter's claim that there would be two Republicans debating and that he would not debate two Republicans.

"The debate shattered Carter's rhetoric. It was clear that there were not two Republicans debating," she said.

Anderson said the debate demonstrated that Reagan was going back in time while John Anderson was alerting people to the problems we are facing today.

"Reagan kept referring to the 'shining city on the hill', I kept wondering what state that city was in," she said.

Anderson said that she believes college students are responsible for the success to date of Anderson's candidacy. "I think students have brought him to the point where he is today. They have been the soldiers. I cannot commend them highly enough, Anderson said.

Anderson said that only an independent president could govern. She said, "John would bring a coalition government. He would have Democrats and Republicans in his cabinet."

US sends radar planes for Saudi Arabian defense against Iran-Iraq war

By BARTON REPPERT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States is rushing four speciol early warning rodor planes to Saudi Arobia to help strengthen the oil-rich country's oir defenses against o possible spreod of the war between Iraq and Iran, the Pentagon announced yesterday.

In announcing the shipment of the highly sophisticoted planes, U.S. officials said the deployment is temporary and stressed thot the move does not meon the U.S. is taking sides in the Iron-Iroq wor.

"The United Stotes government unequivocolly reoffirms its position of neutrolity," said Pentagon spokesmon Thomos B. Ross.

"This deployment is purely for defensive purposes. It is designed to trock aircraft for the purpose of providing additional warning for Saudi Arabian defenses," Ross said.

Saudi Arabia has indicated its support for Iraq in the fighting with Iran. However, U.S. defense officials said they have no reason to believe the Saudis will be relaying to Iraq any military data provided by the American radar planes, known as AWACS.

Ross told a Pentagon press brieting the decision to deploy the aircraft was made "in response to a request from the government of Saudi Arabia."

Defense officials said one of the big AWACS planes already had taken off from Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma and that the remaining three would be leaving for Saudi Arabia within hours.

They said the planes were to fly directly to Saudi Arabia with in-flight refueling, covering the distonce in 17 to 18 hours.

The deployment will invalve a totol of about 300 military persannel, defense ofificials said. They added that American cargo planes would be making flights to deliver supplies to Saudi ground focilities being used by the AWACS aircraft.

The AWACS plones, which are modified Boeing 707 jets, carry a flight crew of faur plus up to 24 Air Force technical personnel to monitor radar and other electronic gear.

Defense officials said that after the AWACS plones reach Saudi Arobia, they would be flying their early warning patrols wholly within Saudi airspace. They declined to identify where in Saudi Arabia the planes will be based.

The AWACS deplayment came in response to a formal request made by the Saudi government on Monday, Pentagon officials said, noting that the request followed several days of intensive consultations.

The U.S. officials said the AWACS planes, with a "lookdown" radar range of 250 nautical miles, will be particularly helpful in bolstering Saudi Arabia's defenses against any possible attack by law flying aircraft.

The range of the sophisticated AWACS planes gives them the capability to monitor the vital Strait of Hormuz, through which much of the oil exported from the Middle East to western countries passes.

In case of any threat to the American radar planes themselves, the Saudi air force is to provide air defense with its U.S.-built Hawk and F-5 fighters, defense officials said.

House, Senate work overtime on emergency spending bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators rushed to finish work by midnight last night on an emergency-spending bill needed to avert a shutdown of nearly the entire federal government, except activities to protect "life and property."

By mid-day, the negotiators had plowed through less than half of the 48 differences between the House and Senate versions of the bill. The legislation would finance the government between the midnight deadline — the end of fiscal year 1980 — and Dec. 15.

Although disagreements remain on same sensitive issues, Sen. Warren Magnuson, DWash., Appropriations Committee chairman, expressed confidence that a compromise would be reached in time to prevent the threatened shutdown.

Keke Anderson debates Reagan representative

By JOAN MCKENZIE
Collegian Staff

What started out as a press conference developed into a debate yesterday between Keke Anderson, presidential candidate John Anderson's wife and Doctor Gloria Toote, an attorney from New York City, representing presidential candidate Ronald Reagan.

The debate took place in the alumni house at Smith College in Northampton.

The major topics of the debate included the ERA, Anderson's proposed 50 cent gasoline tax, abortion, and the place of government in business.

Anderson started the debate by stating, "It is clear that this is a two candidate choice. Candidate Carter did not win in the New York primary; he cannot win in New York or California in November. It is either Anderson or Reagan," she said.

The Equal Rights Amendment stirred the first instance of debate. Anderson asked Toote the legitimacy of the Republican party platform failing to support ERA, an issue it has supported for years. "Polls have clearly demonstrated that a majority of women are in favor of the ERA. How can you explain a presidential candidate who refuses to acknowledge this amendment?" she said.

Toote said that it was the party platform that failed to support ERA. "The party platform represents the decision of the men and women of the platform. The American women will have an adequate opportunity to express their opinions," she said.

Toote said she also questioned the laws concerning ratification. "I question the legality of allowing additional states to ratify the ERA, without allowing states who supported ERA in the past to rebuke their support," she said.

Anderson then spoke of her husband's 50 cent hike on gasoline. She said the proposed plan would generate 60 billion dollars in revenue per year. "The money from that tax would be put into Social Security funds. A worker would be taxed 3 percent instead of 6 percent. Every worker in this country would bring home a higher paycheck," she said.

Toote disagreed. "You're talking about a tax program where a person will be taxed for going to work."

Toote asked where Anderson would get the 50 cents from. "What are we playing, musical chairs?" Toote said that Reagan's solution for dealing with the problem of gas consumption was more realistic.

Toote listed three major parts to the solution: Encourage conservation, alternate means of energy, and drilling in the U.S. "It still would be cheaper than importing from the Persian Gulf," she said.

Bella Abzug, guest speaker at Smith College's "Mock Presidential Convention 1980" last night, stressed the need for instatement of the Equal Rights Amendment.

"Women over the years have made breakthroughs in the job market. We have seen the first woman anchorman, the first woman bank president and the first woman Alaskan pipe liner. So what do we want?" Abzug asked. "We want seconds and thirds and fourths." (Covered by Lillian Singer; staff photo by Vince DeWitt)

Health Center provides options for in-patients

Editor's note: This is the second in a two-part series an UMass mental health.

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University Mental Health program cares for mast patients an an out-patient basis, but is capable of handling individuals on a more intensive level, said director Dr. David Kraft.

"It happens infrequently, but we do have cases every year where we have to take control of the situation and give the patient 24 hour supervision. Out of that seven percent of the students coming here, maybe five to sevent percent might need to stay in the infirmary for a few days, and maybe one to two percent might need to stay in an off-campus hospital. "We do our best to see that those patients get sent to what we would consider a good hospital," Kraft said.

Kraft went on to emphasize the proportion of students here with serious problems is a relatively small one.

"The type of problems we're talking about here, are ones where the patient has demonstrated a 'reasonable intent' to harm either themselves or someone else," Kraft said.

In a situation where the problem involves suicidal or homicidal life endangering, the Mental Health Service will put the person in a hospitol.

He said McLean Hospital in Belmont is typical of the type of hospital they try to place these people with psychotic problems. He said Franklin County Public Hospital in Greenfield and Bay State Medical Center in Springfield are also places they refer people to. Generally, a two to three week stay is necessary he said.

Dr. Kraft said the twenty five percent or so of these special cases go to Northampton State Hospital.

"I wouldn't classify Northampton as one of the better hospitals, but even with those who go there, we try to keep in touch and get them transferred to a better hospital as soon as possible," he said.

Those sent to Northampton can stay for a maximum of 10 days by law. A court order is necessary for a longer stay.

For those with a previous history of mental health problems, the facility keeps some form of re-entry contact so the transition here can be smooth, and to let the student know the facility is here, Kraft said.

A current program being organized is the topic-focused groups program, targeted at more common problems for students. Five groups are scheduled to meet in early October. Topics will include coping with your Family, Relationship Skills, Couples Enrichment Workshop, Self-esteem Workshop, and How to Survive the Loss of a Relationship.

"Hopefully we will make ourselves more accessible with these programs, as well as create a more personalized atmosphere on campus," said Kraft.

Rick Trunfio, Head of Residence in John Adams Upper dormitory in Southwest said Mental Health does a very good job with students here.

He said a resource person from Mental Health meets with a group of HR's once a week to discuss emotional problems and how to deal with them.

Trunfio said that unlike many of the other unwieldy bureaucracies on campus, Mental Health is effective.

"Our resource contact person is able to cut through the red tape if quick action is necessary," he said. "That's important, and their quick responses are why I feel they do a good job. I think the personnel they have is also very good."

Trunfio said the RA's also participate in workshops from Mental Health. Heads of Residence also provide referral and counselling help to RA's. Training skills are reinforced with the RA class, he said.

Kraft said when working with a patient, the idea is to teach the person the method of solving their own problems, instead of just providing a solution. By helping them develop their own answers, Mental Health makes a success out of a crisis.

"You can never do enaugh and surely there is room for improvement," Kraft said, "but certainly we do a lot better than many of our peers."

Citizens discuss Proposition 2½ using campus center as forum

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

About one hundred people from surrounding communities and representatives from various citizen action groups attended an open meeting to discuss Proposition 2—1/2 in the University Campus Center yesterday. The meeting was organized by the University Co—operative Extension service.

Proposition 2—1/2 is a tax reduction plan written by the Citizens for Limited Taxation (CLT), and is designed to lower local property taxes and motor vehicle excise taxes. CLT is a citizen action group based in West Springfield.

Diane Troderman, a member of CLT spoke at the meeting and described Proposition 2—1/2 as a viable means of reducing what she called the enormous tax burden placed on the Massachusetts taxpayer by a wasteful state government.

A question often asked by opponents of Proposition 2—1/2 is how money lost by cutting property and motor vehicle excise taxes will be replaced. Money generated by these taxes help pay for local services, including schools, police and fire protection, and road and highway maintenance. Opponents say the proposal does not provide money from any other sources to make up for the loss of revenues in these areas.

Supporters claim that municipal budgets and services will not be reduced by Proposition 2—1/2. They say there is nothing in the proposition that would prohibit the state legislature from increasing local aid where it might become necessary if Proposition 2—1/2 is voted in.

Steve Linsky, area coordinator of the "Vote No on Question 2 Committee," described Proposition 2—1/2 as another move by those people who would allow the rich to have what they want, and keep the poar from having anything.

Another concern of opponents to Propasition 2—1/2 is the number of people who have been initially receptive to the tax cut proposition, but after looking at it mare closely have seen taa much potential far the "little man" getting hurt by cuts in municipal services and eventual increased in other taxes.

Debate on Bilingual School Programs

CUMBERLAND, R.I. — Rosa Fino's dark eyes flashed as she scooted forward in her chair, then spoke fervently in defense of bilingual education in public schools.

"Without it, I would have quit school right away," said the 17- year-old immigrant from Manguolde, Portugal. "I came here to school when I was 14. They put me in all-English classes. I didn't know what I was doing."

Miss Fino, now a junior at Cumberland High School, said she learned nothing until she entered Cumberland's new bilingual program. There she took the usual high school courses from a teacher who taught in Portuguese, giving Rosa time to master English.

But Rhode Island state Rep. John Assalone, whose father came from Italy as a boy, contends bilingual education programs are a waste of taxpayers' money:

"It's been shown that when you hand people something, even language, on a silver platter, it doesn't work. immigrants should learn English like my father did, without burdening the American taxpayer to support expensive and failing programs."

Assalone and Miss Fino reflect two sides of a debate taking place in many states. This month, the U.S. Department of Education concludes heorings on a plan to broaden bilingual education in public schools for an estimated 3.5 million pupils whose primary language is not English.

Bilingual programs, which have sprouted in schools across the nation since 1968, are under attack from opponents who, like Assalone, campaign under the banners of tax relief and local government control.

Proponents are having to fight for programs once considered secure.

"One of our biggest problems is the lack of hard data on either side to prove whether bilingual programs work. We can see they work, but we have no real studies to confirm that," said Virginia da Mota, a consultant for the Rhode island Department of Education.

The controversy flared in Rhode Island last winter, when backers failed to win passage of a bill to expand bilingual education at a cost to the state of $2.6 million. Assalone led opponents.

The eight programs in Rhode Island are supported by a combination of federal and state funds. Similar programs can be found from Alaska to Maine and Minnesota to Texas, where immigrant children are taught in languages ranging from Japanese and Spanish to French and Navajo.

Many of the programs have been around since 1968, when Congress enacted the Bilingual Education Act.

The Department of Education's proposed new rules, which aim to address "one of the most serious barriers to equal opportunity education," would require schools to spend more money — between $176 million and $592 million — on bilingual instruction for children who score below the 40th percentile in standardized tests.

The federal government now spends about $160 million a year on bilingual education demonstration projects. Schools spend about $169 million to $325 million for 831,000 students in bilingual programs. The idea of boosting that figure has aggravated an already sore subject in many states.

In California, for example, bilingual proponents recently fought off an effort to revise the state's program and are girding for a fresh attack next year.

Opinion is also divided in Rhode Island, which draws large numbers of Portuguese, Colombians and other Hispanics to work in its textile and jewelry industries.

"I see the new swing away from bilingual instruction as another sign that the New Right is gaining a foothold in this country," said Charles Santos, director of Cumberland's bilingual education program, which offers 215 Portuguese students classes in their native tongue.

"Statements like that do not address the issue," said Assalone. "The fact is that studies show these programs do not work. Taxpayers are wasting millions of dollars to fund a Job Corps for bilingual teachers."

"We can show results here in Cumberland," countered Santos, who said about 50 Portuguese students have been "main-streamed" into all-English classes since his program began two years ago.

Assalone said he favored some kind of language instruction for immigrant students but nothing as expensive as the current method.

"My father was thrown down the stairs of a New York City school for not speaking English. I'm not for that. But i am for a little bit of self-reliance, a little bit of self-help among these immigrant groups," he said.

Dora Gomes, 17, another bilingual student at Cumberland, said "I don't understand what he has against programs like the one at this school."

Said Miss Gomes, whose Portuguese family came to the United States from Argentina five years ago: "You can't learn math or history in a language you don't understand. You've got to learn the language first. I don't see why people can't understand that."

Paul's Confusion: Part Five

by Eric Janszen

What sounded to Paul like "Sympathy for the Devil" blaring from an immense, submerged transistor radio was his professor commanding him to find a seat at once, castigating him for his lateness, rude interruption and interference with his fellow students' learning and on and on.

"Farizza dristeznih suzzssha plithcesteh!" his professor roared. Paul cound not make out a single word he was saying and, with only about five more stumbling moves to a seat and anonymity, couldn't have cared less. He plunged into the spring—cushioned seat, fumbled his notebook and feigned deep concentration as he wrote Econ 333 — 9/4 on the top of the first page. His professor resumed the lecture. Paul strained as if he was receiving commands from the battle front.

"I have described the purpose, structure and requirements of this course," his professor said, "and now I would like to give my personal view on its main topic: you." This preface conveyed a certain not—on—the—examness that set the student on Paul's right to reading the Globe comics and focussed the eyes of the woman to his left on something long ago and far away.

"All of you sitting here are probably very decent people. Some of you may be occasionally disrespectful toward your poor, bedraggled parents or kick your dog because you didn't make the team, but most of you try to be good — even to people you don't know. There's a difference. When you help a friend, you are being good. When you help a stranger, you are being polite. The first carries a sense of duty, conscience. The second is optional and depends on your prowess. Does anyone know who Ambrose Bierce was?" he asked the class suddenly. The crowded auditorium was motionless.

"He was a journalist and writer during the latter half of the last century. He wrote as the definition of friendless, 'having no favors to bestow'. Perceptions under capitalism.

"Anyway," he continued, "only overly nice people are polite to everybody. And we all know there must be something wrong with them for that. Maybe they're feeling guilty about something they did, but more likely they are suckers — too stupid to understand that not everyone is their friend, that almost everyone is competing with them and each other for anything of any value, and as we all know things of value are always in short supply. The self—compromising, like the compromised, are not going to make it. They are inferior.

"So we are all taught to be polite — that we are polite — but not to a fault. That way we can get what we deserve without feeling bad about having to take it from someone else, somewhere, who is not so strong about taking." He paused and, after untangling the microphone cable which had wrapped around his leg, glared out over the class.

"We are not polite. We are not even nice, because we have hurt our friends as we have tortured strangers. We do this to get what we want — a struggle for scarce resources, which are not reolly scarce at all. There just isn't enough for everyone to use the way we do — gluttonously. True, we are not the first nation in history to be ordered by greed and indifference. But our nation is special. And you, in this classroom and others like it across the country, are a special part of this special nation. Raised in the affluence of its over thirty years of worldwide pillage, your nation spared you both the insecurity of omnipresent violence and the indignity of poverty to which it subjected most of your fellow countrymen and the people of a hundred other nations, binding them all into a tangle of pain and incapacity. In this comfort you were taught to believe in your country as you would in God. This is appropriate because, like God, your nation was the first in history to have the power, through its knowledge and technology, to relieve all human suffering on the planet. With this power we administer pain, rage wars on innocent people — the strangers — to rob them of their land, their labor, their lives. We send food to India and call ourselves gentle.

"We give to the weak, we taketh away. You and I know our nation is better — superior and innocent. We are the fittest, making the world's turns of life and death for so much of humankind. And we do it for comfort. Before me sits — some listening and scribbling, some reading newspapers, some asleep — the children of the most brutal civilization ever to have inhabited the earth."

Pentagon's 'first strike' means policy of suicide

To the Editor:

It's time that the recent policy initiatives of the Carter Administration, in the realm of "military superiority," were subject to scrutiny by the UMass community. This is especially important given what was reported about the large positive response to G. Gordon Liddy during his recent visit, since Liddy represents the extreme right—wing on the question of "military preparedness."

Carter's recent "Presidential Directive Number 59" is a good place for us all to start. This is a policy that proposes "limited nuclear war" as a viable option in the effort to maintain the United States' leading role in the capitalist world. It sounds all right to many people on the face of things since it calls for aiming US nuclear weapons not at Soviet cities but, rather, "just" at military installations, particularly nuclear installations, hence the term "limited nuclear war."

But we must look deeper at the consequences. The strategy behind this concept is the desire, on the part of Pentagon planners, to develop a first strike capability. This means they would be able to strike the first blow against the Soviet Union's weaponry, thus demobilizing them militarily and providing the conditions whereby the US could walk right in and take over.

Sounds OK? No way. It is the most dangerous proposal around. It is based on the notion that the United States can start a nuclear war and win it! It has nothing to do with "defending" our country. It is part of the Gordon Liddy—type ideology which says that the US should "Walk into the other guy's neighborhood carrying a gun in one hand and a club in the other." Aside from being based on an overtly militaristic expansionist notion of the world role of the US it is also a policy of SUICIDE.

The "feasibility" [as they say in the Pentagon] of a "limited nuclear war" with the Soviet Union, given that we can't even control the nuclear warheads in our own country is, to say the least, highly unlikely. It could only seem realistic to the glassy—eyed generals and think—tankers who occupy places in the Pentagon and deal with human beings as if they are statistics.

Few people know, however, that when a nuclear war breaks out the Air Force has a plan to load the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the President and other high placed officials onto nuclear powered planes so they can direct the war from above while we all perish on earth. Sounds crazy, but that's how far removed our leaders are from the every day concerns of the vast majority of Americans. We must stop this insanity.

Pseudo-Christians and red-neck friends

To the Editor:

Well, my redneck friends [some of whom own guns] in the Grad School threatened to arrange an accident for me if I looked at a Collegian again, but I did it anyway, and found Bob Carol's article on the New Right [Collegian 9/25].

Bob's fear of this grass roots politico-religious movement is understandable; any movement that challenges one's own concept of political and social morality appears terrible indeed when it enters the political arena. At such a time one must have confidence in one's own beliefs, otherwise one might be tempted to start throwing around terms like "cutthroat," "vulgar," "religious hocus-pocus," "coward," "robot," "Bible-toting rednecks," "dogmatic" and "war-monger" [implied].

Perhaps the article in question could have raised questions about the propriety of certain false statements made recently by Jerry Falwell in the Moral Majority about a meeting with the President, but it did not.

Of course the "New Right" and the politically active evangelicals do not rely on Jerry for their inspiration. The Democratic Party has provided enough inspiration all by itself on issues such as the liberalization of criminal law. Did you know that the Japonese actually put people away in prison for injuring or killing people with large metal objects called automobiles. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire the Judges can barely bring themselves to ask the drunk or hit-and-run driver to pay $500 in blood money. I don't mean to praise the Japanese too much; they have fewer qualms about abortion.

Speaking of the law, Bob's attack on the Ayatollah was hardly fair. The Iranian state has the right to make any laws on morality that it wants and the Koran isn't a bad place to start. As often happens in violent revolutions, the quick hand of justice was turned against real and imagined political opponents. It is non sequitur, however, to argue that the "Iranian Way" will become the "American Way" if the Republicans win in November. This is not to deny that the Republicans smell blood or are strong in intolerance—more power to them. How have the weak managed to stay in power in Congress for so long?

I also wish to make a comment on Rich Lewney's article "Gospel offers 'radical call'" [Collegian 9/29]. Lest the reading public be misled, the World Council of Churches and its affiliate, the National Council, is a pseudo-Christian organization representing pseudo-Christian churches and pseudo-Christians. As Rich himself conveniently pointed out, the Council is interested in social action at home and violent revolutions abroad. This has little to do with the Gospel. As even a superficial reading of the New Testament would show, the call is primarily to a profound spiritual change, a "rebirth."

Naturally there are strong moral implications, and the real "Church" or churches have the right to confront all candidates with those implications. Christians and non-Christians have real issues before them: abortion, education, conventional morality and family relationships.

Psalm 9:8 says: "And He [the Lord] shall judge the world in righteousness..." In the 1630s the Massachusetts Bay Puritans began utilizing a weapon, imperfect as it was, that now makes it possible to turn liberal officials into unemployed liberals. OOOPs! I'm trying to make a pun.

Debate then shifted to funding for abortions. Toote said that while it is her personal opinion that each woman should be allowed to choose abortion, she supports Reagan's position that abortion should not be federally funded.

Toote added that it is not a president that decides this issue, but Congress. "The power rests in Congress. It is not the president who votes in this issue," she said. Toote said that Anderson did not introduce legislation into Congress calling for funding for abortions.

Keke Anderson said that although the power rests in Congress, a president should express his desires to Congress.

Anderson also said that her husband continually voted against the Hyde Amendment, legislation that opposes federal funding for abortion.

Anderson said Reagan is unclear about his position concerning government in business. "There seems to be an inconsistency here. My husband's opponent feels government has no place in business. On one hand he says the government should be building bigger bombs. On the other hand he is saying bring the government into the private and public sectors and into the families," she said.

"My husband feels there is a legitimate place for federal government in business. He supports an alcohol and cigarette tax that would bring billions of dollars of revenue into the inner cities," she said.

Toote said "it is clear that Anderson has not successfully implemented legislation in Congress dealing with housing and health programs. "If he had I'm sure Mrs. Anderson would have brought them with her. Since she didn't I'm going to assume that they don't exist," she said.

Toote said Anderson's refusal to discuss Jimmy Carter's programs will cause him to lose the election. "He refuses to discuss Jimmy Carter, and that's why he is going to lose, she said.

Anderson said the American people are being asked to make the same mistake they made four years ago. "Four years ago we were asked to elect an ex-governor. Now, we are being asked to repeat that same mistake and elect a governor with no experience. I hope the American people do not make that mistake again," she said.

BRUCE ON THE LOOSE— Now this is for all you folks who read last week's column and were somewhat less than ecstatic about the "missing" itenerary. The reason you got only what cities he would do on the East coast, and no gig dates, is because this whole tour is the biggest piece of hype I've seen during my tenure at the Collegian. No one seems to know all that much about when Hurricane Bruce will hit until he hits. Besides the two givens (East Lansing, Michigan this Friday and Hartford December 12), everything is still either undetermined or being kept under wraps. The CBS (Springsteen's label parent company) spokesperson in Hartford didn't even know about the Civic Center date until it was announced on the radio last weekend. Well, anyone who knows anything about these smelly, little creatures knows that they're afraid of people. Do they really think that these cute little animals are going to come near all those obnoxious, loud and drunken UMass students? Why, the bouncers alone would turn them away. And I must say that I think it's really cruel to discriminate against them just because they stink. After all, I've been in the Hatch on nights with all those people jumping up and down, sweating all over the place, and I really don't think they emit many pleasant odors either. All you good citizens should call the SPCA and protest against the banishment of our fine furry friends..." Announcer: "Emily, Emily, I think you need a hearing aid. You got it wrong again. Last week's commentary called for the banning of punk, not skunk, from the Hatch. Punk, the corruptive and violent influence upon our University's young people. News Bureau links University and the world

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Correspondent

"We are the media link between the University and the world," said Anne Wood of the University of Massachusetts News Bureau.

Woad, who is staff assistant, editor, and spokesperson for the bureau said even though they are the organization which lets the rest of the world know what's going on at UMass, "Most professors do not know about the existence of the Bureau either."

However, Wood sees no need to publicize the News Bureau to the University because she looks at the Bureau as just a press service covering the campus.

The UMass News Bureau began as an established function on campus in the early 1960's in response to the rapid growth of the University at that time, said Arthur Clifford, the present Director of the Office of Public Information.

Today, the News Bureau has the primary function of facilitating "the flow of information of University activities to the press," said Clifford.

Clifford outlined two primary functions of the News Bureau as: Answering questions for the press about the University, and developing feature and hard news stories about UMass for the press.

Clifford said news coming out of the News Bureau goes to the local, regional, and statewide newspapers as well as media outlets such as radio, television and the two major wire services.

"The press relies on us to know what's going on on campus," Clifford said.

Besides the breaking news which the six Bureau staff members collect about the campus, they also send out other information.

The stories that receive "marvelous attention from the outside press" are the ones that come out of the Astronomy department, said Wood.

The Bureau receives stories from professors who receive various awards and grants for their studies. They also send out news releases about UMass students, to their hometown newspapers said Clifford.

Besides news releases, the Bureau produces other materials such as the "University Notebook," which is edited by Wood, a weekly publication about various UMass campus happenings.

The "Science Journal" is written by Richard Shanor, another staff member and contains weekly reports on science and technology from UMass science and engineering departments.

The News Bureau also puts out a weekly radio program, titled "Commonwealth Journal," produced by Bureau staffer Jeanne Hopkins. A magazine-format news program, "Commonwealth Journal" can be heard on WFCR radio, and is syndicated to many other radio stations, Clifford said.

Student input to the News Bureau is very small, Wood said. "We would be delighted to hear from students about news."

"Anything that can be construed as a campus event, can be processed through us," she added.

The Boston Globe is one of the many newspapers regularly receiving information from the Bureau.

Muriel Cohen, Education Editar for the Globe, said although the Globe does not use most of the material the Bureau sends them, they do appreciate tips about developing news stories at the University.

Comparing the UMass Bureau with other university news bureaus, Cohen said she though it was fairly effective.

However, she though, "the Bureau is clearly a Public Relations operation for the University, because it never says anything bad about UMass."

Wayne Fanaff, an Assistant Managing Editor of the Springfield Daily News, said "the News Bureau helps our newspaper cut through the bureaucracy at the University."

"He also said the Bureau was very helpful in sending out useful information during the recent water crisis at the University.

Fanaff said the News Bureau serves two functions for UMass. First, the Bureaus is a Public Relations arm for the University. And second, "the News Bureau is an area that the media can plug into for information about the University," he said.

WHYN Radia, in Springfield, is another media outlet the News Bureau sends information to. Newsman Tom Connell says most information they receive from the Bureau is feature information about the University.

Golfers falter in tournament finish eighth in competition

By MARK P. BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

It was a day that the putter, the irons, and the woods should have been left in the closet at home. The Minutemen just plain ran out of steam in the second round of the New Englands. They did finish eighth in a field of forty—two, but the team not only hoped for better, they expected better.

UMass was in fourth place trailing first place Rhode Island by just eleven strokes after round one, but by the time the end of round two came, UMass was in eighth place thirty—seven strokes behind the winner, Rhode Island.

"Eighth place is not shabby, but I expected better things. There is no reason why we should of played so poorly, the course was in good condition," said UMass coach Ed Vlach.

UMass had a 319 on the first day at Glastonbury Hills Country Club and looked for things to improve on the second day at Ellington Ridge Country Club. Of the twenty—one teams that played the second round at Ellington Ridge, nineteen of them posted scores that were better than the day before.

UMass was one of the two teams that didn't improve. The Minutemen were thirteen strokes worse, having a 332 and ending the tournament with a 651.

The University of Rhode Island had a 306 for the second round giving them a total of 614 for the tournament. The 614 was just good enough to nick second place Central Connecticut University which posted a 615. Providence College finished third, twenty strokes in back of Central Connecticut. Maine finished fourth at 641. Fifth were Bryant College and Boston College, both teams having a total of 644. Next came the University of Connecticut with a 645, followed by Salem State which posted a 649. Then came the Minutemen, who had a 651 to finish eighth.

Jay McConnell, a junior at UMass and the only golfer to improve his score on the second day, called the tournament, "disheartening,".

"I was really hoping that we could at least keep ourselves in fourth. I was really surprised. I thought the scores would be better on the second day," Said McConnell.

UMass was led by Marty Hunt and Bob Grassetti who had 162s. Next was McConnell who went from an 83 to an 81 to finish with a 164. Steve Midttun had a 165 and Bob Gladchuk had a 167.

Gary Sykes of Rhode Island won the tournament with a 148. Sykes fired a 74 on both days. He was followed by Brian Kelly of Quinnipiac College who shot a 149. There was a tie for third, between Joe Barbato of Central Connecticut and Jim Hallet of Bryant. Each shot a 150.

A beautiful flick from the top of the circle by Sue Caples, gave the Stickers their third goal of the game.

Within 1:32 of the previous goal by Caples, Tina Coffin came rushing on goal with 21:00 left to score UMass' fourth goal in the game.

The women stayed on the Holyoke side of the 50-yard line to come back with a corner shot which led to another penalty flick, taken by Chris Coughlin. Coughlin gave UMass a 5-0 lead.

The final score of the one-sided affair came from Tish Stevens with 12:00 posted on the boards.

"This was not one of the stronger teams we've played; they are not a Division 1 team," said Hixon. But Hixon added that they were just like the Vermont team (played the previous Saturday), "you have to watch out, because anything can happen."

UMass dominated the game with a total of 27 shots on the Holyoke goal; 20 corner shots; and, 4 saves on goal.

Holyoke came out of the game with a total of 4 shots on the UMass goal; 2 corner shots; and, 19 saves on goal.

The Stickers will try for their sixth win of the season this Saturday, as they face Colgate University, 3:00 at NOPE field.

Sub-varsity football squad is ready for Milford

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

Did you know that two of the three varsity football tri-captains were once walk-on players for the junior varsity team? Both Fred Read and Bob Manning came to the Minutemen as j.v. walk-ons, and eventually became "star" players for the varsity squad.

Unlike many other schools, the UMass sub-varsity football program is comprised solely of freshmen. These players are mostly walk-ons who were not heavily recruited out of high school. They're not on scholarships or receiving any kind of aid from the UMass Athletic Department. The other players on the squad are freshmen varsity team members who are on the j.v. team to gain playing experience.

The sub-varsity philosophy is that everyone plays. The principle being that participation leads to invaluable experience. One of the important duties being that participation leads to invaluable experience. One of the important duties of the j.v. team is to act as a "look team." That is, simulating the personality of upcoming varsity opponents. This is a critical phase of the varsity squad's preparation for future opponents; it enables them to see the opponent's offensive and defensive strategies before actually facing them.

Varsity defensive end coach, Clarence Brooks, also doubles as the sub-varsity coach. This will be Brooks' fourth season at this position. Under Brooks are four graduate assistants; Jay Kelly, Kevin Sullivan, Matt Mees, and Steve Wojes. Sullivan and Wojes are former UMass varsity football players. Also lending a hand is Ray Benoit, a senior middle guard, who is unable to play this season because of a knee injury.

NAIADS: the water spirits at UMass

By LINDA REYER

A brassy Sousa march echos to the sounds of splashing water while a single voice chants, "left...right...left," to a group of soaking wet students. No this is not a description of the UMass Minuteman Marching Band trekking through the mud on a rainy day but a scene from a NAIADS practice up in NOPE pool.

These water ballet students are swimming in synchrony, using graceful freestyle strokes, to the distinct beats of the patriotic march, to create an X formation across the pool.

The NAIADS are an RSO club made up of students who enjoy learning and performing the art of synchronized swimming. The name for the club was adopted by the swimmers because "NAIAD" is the greek word for "water spirit."

Although this swim club has approximately 25 members and is considered an RSO club it gets absolutely no funding from the RSO or the UMass Athletic Department. RSO contributes nothing because the NAIADS are an athletic club while the athletic department will not fund the NAIADS because they do not participate in competition. The NAIADS could have become a competitive sport at the university, but the members decided against it. Club president Sandy Goodrich feels the swim club is made for the enjoyment of the sport and says, "Having a release like this is important for a student."

Although the NAIADS don't compete they do prepare two water ballet shows annually.

One show is produced in the fall and the other is scheduled in the spring.

The Fall Show runs for only one night and consists of 10 water ballet routines. The routines are choreographed by the older and more experienced group members to different pieces of music that revolve around a basic "theme." An example of a theme that was used in a past NAIAD show is "Casino Night."

The synchronized swimming routines incorporate different swimming strokes, floating patterns and various aquatic stunts. The NAIADS have a sound system which includes special underwater speakers which enable the swimmers to hear the music when they perform the different underwater stunts so they can keep in time with the pulse of the beat.

Spot lights are used to create special lighting plots for some of the routines. The swimmers also wear costumes for the shows. In the past years different costumes that were worn during routines included the use of stockings, longsleeved shirts, head bands, gloves, and goggles. "We even did a routine using flippers once," said Goodrich while reminiscing over the clubs past shows.

This year the fall show is scheduled for December 5. The theme of this fall water ballet concert will be "Fantasy."

The annual Spring synchronized swim show is a much larger production. This show gives four performances and contains a program of 14 routines. The dates of next year's Spring show have not been set yet.

The NAIADS are composed of all female members with the exception of one courageous male member. The club is looking for more male members because this would allow choreographers to incorporate more aquatic moves that contain lifts in their synchronized swim routines.

The NAIADS club offers students an opportunity to learn a challenging sport that combines speed swimming with dance movements, to express themselves artistically and to perform.

Strong scores 2 in UM shutout

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's field hockey led a strong defense in their 6-0 win over Holyoke yesterday at NOPE, allowing the Lyons only two shots on the UMass goal.

Starting out slowly in the first half of the game, the UMass women played good stick ball hustling to their positions on the field. The UMass shots from out-of-bounds penetrated the Holyoke women's defense well allowing the first goal of the half by Judy Strong.

Coming off a corner shot the UMass women received a penalty flick on goal because of an advancement by the Holyoke goalie on a UMass player. Taking the stroke was Strong, but she missed on a great save by Holyoke's goalie. But Strong came back with the first goal with 11:00 left in the half.

After five UMass corner shots on the Holyoke goal, Strong posted her second score of the game with a slim 5:20 left on the scoreboard.

"It was a slow first half, we seemed to play better the second half," said coach Pam Hixon. "But it was a good opportunity to get everybody into the game."

At the beginning of the second half, UMass lead 2-0, coming on strong with 3 corner shots on the opposing goal in the first 6 minutes.

An intramural state of mind

Ken Lasker

Time seems to move ever so slowly on these days of autumn, as temperatures slowly drop and the long sleeve shirt becomes the dominant article of clothing once again. The campus pond becomes a haven for Physical Plant workers and memories of the beauty that relaxed there slowly drifts into the past.

Yet the passage of time that seems slow now becomes a speeding blur when one thinks of events that happen annually. For this is the time when men across campus, once again, remove their "student" costumes (wash those alligator shirts now fellas!) to don what we see beyond Boyden, those costumes associated with men's intramural football.

Yes folks, it's that time of year again (my how it crept up, eh?) where the battle of egos from across campus come together for a glorious fun-filled hour of "touch" football. Get the guys together, march on down to the fields, and have a nice relaxed match. Right? Well...

It seems that to get involved in these games means you must carry with you an inner toughness, or should I say, a will for survival. You must be very agile (elbow-ducking is quite an art). You must have good peripheral vision (getting blindsided by a six foot tall blitzing defensive back isn't all that pleasant). You must have good sense (wear a cup for heaven's sake!). It appears that you also need to be smart (don't get the other team's monster mad at you and, if you do, stay off the kick-return team). And, most importantly, become close friends with your coach (stay off the offensive line). These aspects of the game, unexplained in the intramural rulebook, seem, quite literally, to be vital.

As a player for a playoff-bound team last year, many things came to mind. In whatever sport that you play recreationally, there will always be those who will play for blood. And in a physical sport such as football this "win at all cost" attitude can become somewhat brutal. This is not to say that I am opposed to physical contact. Knocking someone down with a good block was, surprisingly to me, quite satisfying. And bouncing back after receiving a clean shot could somehow be invigorating. However, not everyone can supress their animal tendencies all the time. (Thus providing documentation for the increase in sales of Extra-Strength Tylenol at the Health Center). And because of that, counting one's bruises at the game's end has become as important as the game itself.

The importance of winning in our society carries itself even to the athletic field. No one likes to lose. It's easier to identify yourself with someone considered to be a "winner." Yet on the intramural level, should winning be so important? To what extent should we let our "letting off of steam" on the football field wander?

It seems to this writer (mucking through my own sarcasm) that having fun should be the most crucial aspect of the game. However, someone else's fun (like running me over) may interfere with what is my own, which is why I am comfortably sitting at a desk writing this article. So bang heads guys, go for it! Win, Win, Win! But don't look for me on the offensive line. Roll on.

Equal Opportunity and Respect

The Five College system in the Pioneer Valley is an educational center of a high caliber. As a member of the five college community, one has a very distinct opportunity to examine the goals of Amerikan society as it is reflected in a cooperative of educational institutions - the Five College System. In this system the societal values expressed also include various forms of oppression. This oppression is felt no more in its direct effect, than it is felt by Afrikan-Amerikan and members of other minorities. For these people the experience of being part of these institutions can and often is one of being caught in the machinery or totally rejected by a system that pretends to want them. In many ways the system is a monster, a monster which is relentless is its effort to oppress and divide Afrikan-Amerikans, all other minorities, and all people -in a more general sense- from each other.

Since the late sixties drive to increase the enrollment of Amerikan minorities (particularly Afrikan-Amerikons) into the five college system, some progress has been made. However, a good part of that progress made has been lost, and this is most apparent in the percentages of enrollment which has been decreasing yearly for Afrikan-Amerikans. Another area of decline has been in the number of minority faculty and with it staff support for minority students has also declined. Over the decade of the seventies the tern "Equal Opportunity" has gained greater emphasis. Unfortunately, the pathways to reaching that opportunity for minorities have been cut off in the process.

Whenever I entertain the idea of being an Afrikan-Amerikan student within the five-college system in this valley, I think first of being proud of my "blackness". I think of the sacrifices that it took from me as an individual and my people collectively to make this opportunity possible. I am grateful. However, I also think about feeling stranded and isolated in this college-oriented, but very "white" community. In this community an Afrikan-Amerikan must struggle for the very maintainance of their own "selfhood". Scanning the pages of the Collegion for the academic year of 1968-69, it is nat very difficult to see that my very thoughts are a reflection of those shared by the students who took over a dorm called Mills House - which has since been known as New Afrika House.

Difficulty is a fact of life in the valley of the five-college system. A central and most common difficulty has been in inability and near impossibility for minorities in general to gain recognition. This is a problem which is shared by students, staff, and faculty. Recognition as a community is no different, and equal recognition individually or as a community has never happened and indeed appears a long way into the future. How can minorities expect equal opportunity without equal recognition? The difficulty which attaining "equal recognition" proposes is further

Racism in Georgia

On the 5, November 1979, Richard Lomax, of Springfield and Perry Owens were arrested for alledgedly robbing a Blairsville Georgia store. The circumstances surrounding their situation casts a shadow of extreme doubt on the validity of the charges levied against Lomax and Owens. In a letter written to Keith Johnson of the Black Mass Communications Project, Lomax explains their plight:

Sept. 10, 1980

Dear Mr. Johnson:

I hope this letter finds you in the best of health and doing well. My name is Richard W. Lomax, and I am a resident of Springfield Mass., and was once a student at UMASS in Boston. Miss Cindi Jones of the Advocate informed me that she has been in contact with the Black Mass Communications Project concerning a present struggle me and a friend of mine Mr. Perry D. Owens are facing, and that they have taken an interest in our plight and may be able to help us in raising a much needed defense fund.

KKK: A Threat to Everyone

The Klu Klux Klan is the most well organized and vicious "hate group" in the United States. In the current period of economic and social crisis it is experiencing a resurgence which threatens Blacks, Jews, Hispanics, Catholics, the labor movement, and all progressive minded people. It threatens the very existence of these people and groups in an immediately physical sense, because the Klan advocates their actual destruction. We need only look ot the recent events in Greensboro, North Carolina; Decatur, Alabama; Sylacauga, Alabama; Carbon Hill, Alabama; and Tupelo, Mississippi in each of these places innocent people, Black and white, were physically attacked and in severol cases murdered in cold blood. The potential exists for this type of brutality to continue an a larger scale in the South as well as the North, East and West, if people do not organize to combat its influence.

The Klan represents more than a backward-minded "fringe" group in the sense described above. It reflects a current in society which would like to roll back the gains in civil rights, social welfare programs, the labor movement, and other progressive causes which have benefited all people, white and Black This trend is being funded and mounted by some of the richest and most powerful people in this country. If Successful this right-wing movement will have a devastating impact on the lives of the working people, and especially the nationally and rocially oppressed peaples

Therefore, although the Klan directs its most immediate attacks on Blacks, Jews, and all progressive-minded people, its influence is part-and-parcel of the general attack on the multi-racial, multi-national working class. Ronald Reagan, although not himself a member of the klan, is to be placed within this generol trend to roll back the standard of living and quality of life for the masses of people in this country. It is no coincidence then that one leader of the Klan was quoted as saying that Ronald Reagon's program, and the platform of the Republican Party, could hove been copied from a Klan pamphlet!

In order to fight the influence of the Klan, and the right-wing trend in this country, a

LERONE BENNETT SPEAKS AT DUBOIS DEDICATION

On 19 Friday and 20 Saturday, September, at the University of Massachusetts in Amhers, teh papers of Dr. William Edward Burghardt DuBois were dedicated ot the world. At the conclusion of the two day ceremonies, Dr. Lerone Bennett Jr. delivered the keynote address. Bennett, senior member of the editorial board of EBONY magazine spoke to a crowd of nearly 300 at the Campus Center auditorium.

NUMMO presents that speech in its entirety.

To my good brother and friend Mike Thelwell, thonk you so much, brother. Chancellor Kaffler,friends, students and disciples of W.E.B DuBois as long as I can remember, I have lived within the grovational field of Dr. DuBois's genious and it is an enormous honor for me to salute him here in Massachusetts and it seems to me that this is a day of jubilee for 'Massachussetts and Americo, a day of jubilee not only for scholors but also for peasents in South East Asia and workers in Bolivia and poor black people in Roxbury and poor white people in the Appalachia.

This is the day anticipated by the poet who said no barrier is fatal. This is the day anticipated by the philosopher who said the maximum hope is always close to the maximum danger. I would like to begin my brief remarks by expressing congratulations to Micheal Thelwell, the Afro American Studies Department, Dr Bromery, Mrs Emerson, Dr Aptheker, who served and worked with Dr. DuBois so long,and that great soul,Shirley Groham DuBois and all those living ond dead who had the decency ond the courage to recognize that truth by making it possible for the United States of America to make this small down payment on the massive debt that this country owes William Edward Burghardt DuBois.

The first point I want to make here today is that this is no ordinary dedication,but W.E.B. DuBois was no ordinary man. One of the greatest minds of the twentieth century , one of the greatest activists and seers of the twentieth century,DuBois was also one of the most maligned and misunderstood men of the twentieth century.Because he refused to bite his tongue,because he demanded light and air for all the peoples of the world, because he demanded full and total and immediate equality for black people and poor white people, he was horrassed and persecuted and arrested. A massive attempt was made to write him out of history. We cannot be true to W.E.B. DuBois,or to the DuBois collection, or to ourselves, if we do not begin this day by remembering with shame the c: of W.E.B. DuBois, if we cannot be true to ruth , if we do not end this day by remembering with joy the triumph of W.E.B. DuBois. For he rose above his persecutors like an eagle in the oir.

When historians come a hundred years from today to set down names of men in our time who served freedom and peace and truth the name of W.E.B. DuBois will be at or near the top. We come here today to say in so many words that dreams cannot be assassinated and men the size of mountains cannot be hidden. That-statement murt be taken literally for Dr. DuBois was a mountain no black person nor white person, for thatmatter,can ignore. It can be said in fact that no onecan understand Massochusetts of the United Stotes of America without some understanding of the man who turns and twists and challenges and dreams in the papers collected here. An intellectualgiant, the most Catholic and ecumenical thinker produced this side of the seas.

An activist, a seer, o prophet, Dr. DuBois discovered the shores beyond the West.He wos perhaps the first block to say with all his heart and all his soul that the world did not belong to white people. He was perhaps the first black to say inomtion to civilize it, to negritude the African personality, protest Africa for the Africans,for Africa the sociology of the slums, the souls of black folks, the souls of white folks the sorrow songs all this and more can be found in the world view of Dr. DuBois. There will be no peace, no love, no joy,no salvation by this guilty lond, until it climbs to the high ground staked out of these papers by this traveler to the dark. Perhaps it should be said here that this great spirit was a world soul and he belonged, and belongs to the world and to the ages. We who live within the vail, to use his phrase, knew him within his vailness. I speak here today from behind the vail.The vail thot shaped and molded him and mode him what he was, a black man, who saw further than almost all of his contemporories, not as they say despite his color, but because of it. He tells us today from the grave that the darkness is light enough and that in the willow in which we live the darkness he reflects is about the only light we have left.We say that here without reserve or apology and we say further that there is o parable here.

One hundred and twelve years ago a black boy was born in this state by a golden river. In the shadow of two great fields that black boy, born in a white fire,rose to the heights by the sheer toughness of spirit met and defeated his adversaries on their own ground and never forgot the poor and the defenseless. Ninety-three years later that fighter and hunter of truth was practically hounded out spokesman for the struggles of Afro-Americans for self-determination and he continues to speak out against the oppression and injustices of this society. Baraka had been savagely beaten by four New York City policemen on June 8, 1979, in an unprovoked attack on the street in Greenwich Village. When his wife, Amina, protested, she was also beaten. The Barakas were taken away, leaving four of their children alone in the street. Baraka was then arrested on phony charges of assaulting a police officer, assaulting his wife, resisting arrest, obstructing government processes, disorderly conduct and possession of a dangerous weapon. During pre-trial hearings, supporters packed the courtroom, and all the charges were dropped except for "resisting arrest." The two-week trial last November 6-18, 1979, was a classic "kangaroo court." The Prosecution stopped the admission of evidence that showed that two of the policemen who had attacked Baraka had been indicted previously for brutality by a Grand Jury. Important photographs taken by an eyewitness to the beating were "lost." Baraka and his family were victims of slanders and character assassination by the D.A. throughout the trial. Under such circumstances, the conviction was a shock and even more so the sentence of 90 days at Rikers Island. Amiri is appealing unjust trial and conviction. The date for the hearing is expected to be set some time in September.

Georgia

I wanted to write you personally to let you know how serious our situation is; and how important it is that we get support. This whole precarious ordeal started back on Nov. 5, 1979, when Mr. Perrry Owens and I got lost and stopped at a store in Blairsville, Georgia to get directions and some refreshment. While in the store I was confrontred with racial names by some of the white patrons, this made me very uncomfortable so I left the store and sat in my car. Shortly after this I noticed a gang of white males coming around the corner of the store with sticks and heading toward my car. I got scared and locked all my doors and left. That's how it started, Mr. Owens and i ended up getting arrested and alledgedly charged with theft by taking. We were confined in the Union County Jail, where we were denied access to the telephone,attorneys and the courts, while being physically and mentally exploited daily. This put us in fear of our personal safety and well-being which led to our escape from the jail on Nov. 29,1979. Mr. Owens and I are the only blacks in the jail, town or county, ana there are no blacks in any of the surrounding counties.

This makes us a whipping post for the local authorities to do what ever they want with us, or so it seems. But what makes our situation even worse is the fact that Blairsville is an isolated place way up in the mountains of Georgia. They only hold court twice a year and it is so small they don't even have a bus that runs up here or a Western Union office. Another bad thing is that everything from the Court to the majority of the people are run by racist bureaucracy, in which everyone seems to exercise a Jim Crow mentality towards blacks. There is no set precedent for procedures and a man is just put in a cell without being issued any items to take care of his personal hygiene, is given no receipt for his property, is not told when he goes to court, and more often than not, isn't given a bail if the Sheriff plans onrailroading you to prison. In short, you are left at the mercy or the sherrif because he runs the county as well as the jail, he even sets bail in a lot of cases. So you can imagine where that leaves us.

Our situation has worsened since our escape because now they have added a whole slew of trumped up charges to us such as, armed robbery, aggrevated assault, stolen car, and escape. All these charges they are saying resulted from our escape from the jail. The bad thing about this is they all carry 20 years, and the armed robbery charge is a capital offense punishable by death in Georgia. There is no telling what these mountain Rednecks might try to pull; it's obvious that they are trying to railroad us by the fact that we are kept in the dark about everything along with being denied regular use of the telephone, plus our mail is being tampered with. Because of these Jim Crow tactics it has taken us 5 months to find a competant outside attourney to handle our cases. it also took us five months for them to set a bail on these charges and it is ridiculous. $20,000 on each charge, and they did not set a bail on the armed robbery charge. This brings our total bail to $80,000 apiece, and we would not have that if our lawyers weren't interested why we were not given a hearing and a bail was not set. They have been doing alot of shuffling with the papers now that we have competant at-

ZIONISM IS RACISM

On September 16, the Collegian ran an announcement about an organizational meeting of the Palestine Solidarity Committee. As usual, listed in the announcement was a phone number to call to request more information about the meeting. During the afternoon and evening of the 16th, I received threatening phone calls form an anonymous caller. He repeated, "Taleb Bizri, you Palestinian, I am a Zionist and I am going to kill you."

This incident exposes one of the terrorist methods that has been used by the Zionists against people of different political ideologies. Zionism is an ideology which, in practice, is a racist movement having deep historical roots.

In moving the Jewish people into Palestine, and away from the murder and genocide perpetrated by the anti-semites in Europe, the Zionists conducted their own program of genocide against the Palestinian people. Theodor Herzl, the founder of Zionism, had the help and support of the very same anti-semites such as Cecil Rhodes of Britain in finding "a land without people for a people without land." However, the lands they were proposing were inhabited by people--but Herzl and Rhodes meant a land wihtout white people. They proposed Argentina and Uganda before Palestine. The Zionists, by blocking the way of Jewish emigratin to the United States and to European countries, made the number ofJewish settlers enough to establish the Zionist state of Israel. However, the structure of this Zionist state is a racist structure that practices genocide against the Palestinian people and discriminates against the Arab Jews, Oriental Jews, Black Jews, and other non-white European and American Jews.

When the Zionist state of israel maintains its support and full relationship with the pro-Nazi regime in South Africa, it shows not only the racist ideology of Zionism in terms of its full support to racist South Africa, but also shows that the Zionist state of Israel does not hesitate to have strong ties with the very same racist forces that massacred millions of Jews. This exposes the false myth that Zionism is dedicated to the protection of the Jewish people.

Although this incident represents an attack on the Palestinian liberation struggle, instead of posing any real threat, it exposes the fundamental weakness of Zionism. The Zionists are using any means they can to try to maintain their dying power, and to attack the Palestinian liberation movement and its supporters. The threatening phone calls I have

Development of Capitalism

Important to the development of capitalism was the modern European American slave trade. It was part of a larger system of European international economic activity better known as the triangular trade, which featured the importation of raw materials to Europe from European colonies in North and South America and the Caribbean islands. "The New World". The raw materials were products of African slave agricultural work and consisted of tobacco, sugar, cotton, lumber, metal ores, and certain foods. The last part of the triangular trade was the exportation of European manufactured goods to Africa in exchange for more slaves to send to the world. Huge profits were extracted from every step of this process. Investors found double, triple and quadruple returns over their initial investments, which in turn created vast surpluses of wealth (capital) for Europe and America. The triangular trade widened the international markets and by 1750 there was not one British meritime or industrial town, not connected with the triangular trade in some way. Industrial manufacturing, textiles and metal products, agricultural production, meritime and inland transportation, ship-building, insurance, were some of the economic areas expanded by the profitability of the slave trade. Prior to this period in Europe, racial differences mattered little but with the conquest of the new world, and the development of the slave trade, an idea, an excuse was needed to justify the destruction of entire cultures and civilizations and the enslavement of millions. Thus, the development and cultivation of the ideology of racism began. In 1540 the Spanish argued that the Indians were beasts rather than men, "that they were naturally lazy and vicious, melancholic, cowardly and in general a lazy shiftless people." In July-August 1975 an article in Black Scholar entitled, "The Shockley-Jensen Thesis': a Contextual Appraisal" by Cedric X (Clark) explains even further the development of the ideology of racism. He states that in 1799 an American professor by the name of Charles White wrote the book, "An Account of the Regular Gradation in Man." In it he viewed that (Africans) Blacks "occupied a place in the 'great chain of being' as one step above the apes." He claimed that Blacks had "small brains, larger sex organs, an ape like odor and an animal immunity to pain." Cedric X also notes that Thomas Jefferson believed that "the Blacks, whether originally a distinct race or made distinct by time and circumstances are inferior to whites in the endowment of body and mind. Jefferson's opinions echoed the view of the class of the slave holding "founding fathers" of the United States. The major focus of the first part of Cedric X's article objectively demonstrates how, "science" was even employed in the systematic creation of a racist ideology. In 1824 a psychologist, one George Combe created a standard reference book in his field which claimed that "African skulls show a higher stage of development than those of American Indian or Australian aborigines, but lower than Europeans." In 1869 a more liberal opinion was expressed by another distinguished scientist, a Francis Glaton. His book "Hereditary Genius argues that "Negroes are...childish, stupid, and simpleton like..." It is not hard to see how these ideas came from Europe, which already had virtually an inflexible system of class oppression and exploitation, ie. Feudalism. Furthermore, the false racial inferiority theories grew, inter-linked with capitalism. Racism that we experience in our daily life is much more than simply a "societal illness" that can be cured with the adoption of an academic course or legislation. But it is an important part of the American social psychology. It's main expression is in "white skin privilege." That is, whites believe they have an inherent first right to the privileges and wealth of the society because they are white. Another fantasy they believe is that no matter how bad off they may be, at least they are still "better" than Blacks. The selective distribution of certain privileges and legal consideratins, along with discriminatory admissions, hiring and promotion policies in favor of whites by those in power reinforces and affirms "white skin privilege." The racial theories mentioned before and the belief in white skin privilege are also reinforced daily through every form of the media. Even the Black controlled media. T.V., radio, cinema, magazines: Eboy, Jet, Essence, Players all play an active or passive role in the cultivation and spreading of racist symbols. The white controlled media by projecting everything white and whatever they project Black is always in a white context. Example: the Pepsi Cola and McDonalds commercials. Too large a section of the black media project white symbols in black enhanced by the inability of Afrikan-Amerikans and other minorities to come together collectively to deal with community concerns. Students, staff, and faculty division surrounds to almost a "caste system". Minorities divided themselves from one another socially and fail to demonstrate an adequate interest in each others' problems and differences. A lack of cohesion has caused an open exposure to greater setbacks, leaving us divided and almost conquered; we can ill afford to maintain this course of abeyance.

As a result of our difficulties and abeyances we begin to irritate one another in the inidst of our deeper frustrations. As one problem builds on another and disunity increases, an exaggerated sense of individualism serves to further divide us, through useless attitudes and understanding which whos a total lack of comprehension. Lack of comprehension is the greatest irritant to those who strive to remedy our situation. Abeyance within our community is most specifically caused by a "selfish, illiterate understanding of this environment." it has been said, "The eye cannot see what the mind cannot comprehend." Without understanding there can be no vision and without a vision the future is never inevitable. Our abeyance leaves us open to pick up some of the negative traits of the system, and we ourselves begin to do such things as stereotype situations and people. The net result of such stereotyping has caused us to inflict the ne oppression the system places on us, each other.

Here in the Valley of the five-college system, as community our greatest need is to find out what are our unifying forces and build upon them. This valley is a college community and thus the student body organizations are capable of projecting a strong influence on the environment and affecting change. Unity among the Afrikan-Amerikan student population becomes essential to the goal of affecting change. The solidarity of (racial) minority student organizations individually, as weel as their solidarity in a collective sense, must be present to create any lasting change in the five-college system, particularly a lasting change in the enrollment of minority students and the hiring of minority staff and faculty.

Afrikan-Amerikan student and minority students as a whole should offer services to the greater minority community, such as a co-op, day care, counseling (i.e. academic, career, personal), etc... Providing these services will provide them in return with a greater sense of purpose, self-respect, and direction in life ahead. These students should give to the entire valley the message that they are proud of themselves, have hope for the future, that they strive on the unity they themselves build...and the greatest messag of all, that they want "equal recognition and the respect that goes along with it".

In the spring of 1942, the government of the United States forced approximately 112,000 persons of Japanese ancestry residing on the West Coast to leave their homes and enter concentration camps. Two thirds of these were Nisei, second generation American citizens by birth. The rest were Issei or first generation, born in Japan and forbidden by American law from becoming citizens. This uprooting of an entire racial group happened during World War II when the U.S. was at war with Japan.

This incredible event can best be understood by examining the history of agitation and discrimination towards Asian immigrants as they came over during the middle of the 19th century. There were many individuals and groups that were active in creating anti-Asian feelings and attitudes. The Oriental Exclusion Act of 1924 prohibited Japanese immigration. Alien land laws were passed restricting Japanese immigrants from owning land. These are some of the many octs passed by Congress which restricted Japanese political, economic and social activities.

Immediately after Pearl Harbor, selected enemy aliens, including 2,192 Japanese, were arrested by the FBI. The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor provided the final straw for the forces opposing the Japanese in America. One vital and crucial force was the Hearst newspapers which presented the issue through "yellow journalism". For example, the Los Angeles Examiner on December 16, 1941, led off with the headline "All Japanese are Traitors". Henry Maclemore, a syndicated columnist wrote "let'em be pinched, hurt, hungry... Personally I hate Japs. And that goes for all of them." These anti-Japanese rumors and slogans spread and reached a national level.

Eventually, orders replaced the rumours and notices appeared for the Japanese evacuation. On February 19, 1942, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066, which (1) gave military commanders power to round up "suspected enemies" and (2) authorized the construction of relocation camps to house the enemies.

On March 22, 1942, the first large group of Japanese, both aliens and citizens, were moved to assembly centers in California. From then on, all evacuation duties were performed by the Army, and by August 7, 1942 more than 112,000 West Coast Japanese had been removed from their homes. The evacuation took place in two stages-first into assembly centers at such places as Tanforan and Santa Anita racetracks in California, and then to permanent comps (ten in all). The permanent camps were located in Utah, Arizona, Wyoming, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho and California. Camps at these sites were created from old racetracks and fairgrounds. Livestock stalls were converted into living quarters. The walls inside were whitewashed with manure and hay. Guard Towers with armed soldiers and barbed wire surrounded each camp.

Ironically, many interned Japanese had children fighting in the war for the United States. A total of 33,000 Japanese-Americans served in World War II. The 442nd Regimental Combat Team consisting of all Nisei personnel was the most decorated outfit in the army. Senator Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii is a wounded veteran of the 442nd.

There was no justification for the internment of the Japanese. Guilt was assumed, the charge being that "they looked like the enemy". The imprisonment of the West Coast Japanese poses a real threat to the freedom of every American citizen.

This historical event must be studied by all Americans who are interested in maintaining a free and democratic society.

Hopefully, some valuable lessons can be learned from the unfortunate experience of the Japanese in America. The words of Pastor Martin remind us of our responsabilities in a democratic society. "When they came for the Jews, I didn't speak up. Then they came for the Communists and I wasn't a Communist so I didn't speak up. Then they came for the Catholics and I didn't speak up because I wasn't Catholic. Then they came for me-and by that time there was no one to speak up for me."

Fu Manchu: racism 1980's style

Reprinted from Unity

by Eddie Wong

I was about nine years old when I saw Charlie Chan on television. I can still remember the flash of anger and humiliation at that foolish caricature who bor no resemblance to any self—respecting Chinese. "Stop that bowing and scraping." I cursed at the TV. "Cut out that Confucius—say crap !" But no matter where I turned, Charlie Chan and Fu Manchu (the evil Chinaman stereotype of the 1930's) showed up again and again as the only images of Chinese in the media.

Today, Hollywood is pumping new life into these racist stereo-typeswith multi-million dollar movies such as the just-released Warner Bros. production of The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu.

Fu Manchu insults and degrades Asians

This version of Fu Manchu is supposed to be a comedy, but there is nothing funny about it. The plot, which revolves around Fu Manchu's search for a youth elixir and his eventual transformation into a young rock band leader, uses every conceivable racist stereotype about Asians.

The dialogue ridicules Asian language by having the Asian actors and the whites, made up to look like Asians, talk in chop-suey English or meaningless sing-song noises that are supposed to sound like Chinese. The only characters played by Asian actors are portrayed as shuffling idiots and buffons. There are 17 references to "Chinks," all made by white authority figures such os the FBI agent. Fu Manchu himself makes references to his stereotyped Chinese henchmen by saying, "All Chinese look alike." Jokes about Chinese laundries and Chinese food and restaurants are woven throughout the movie. The entire movie, from beginning to end, makes fun of Asian peopl and depicts Asians as inferior.

Through movies like this, stereotypes like the "evil Chinaman" and "all Chinese look alike" become deeply embedded in the American psyche as the sole context for relating to Asians. This same racist mentality leads a group of white tourists in San Francisco Chinatown to identify an innocent Korean man, Chol Soo Lee, as a murderer - based on a fleeting five-second glimpse. The mass media plays a big role in justifying national oppresion, and creates an atmosphere where Asians and other oppressed peoples are fair game.

These movies wage ideological warfare against minorities by picturing us forever as servants,fools, villains, outcasts, inferiors, sellouts and foreigners. They wipe out our true history and try to make us ashamed of our nationality, while promoting a white standard as superior.

The big producers would not have dared to make movies like Fu Manchu during the 1960's and early 1970's the rise of the Black, Latino, Asian and Native American movements. But today they are reviving these movies for profit.

To make the 1980 versions more acceptable,Fu Manchu and the remakes of Charlie Chan, Tarzan and Jane, and the Lone Ranger and Tonto are repackaged as nostalgic entertainment, tongue-in-cheek comedy or fictionalized history.

"Liberal" actors like Peter Sellers, Paul Newman and Ed Asner (Fort Apache: The Bronx), and Peter Ustinov (Charlie Chan and the Curse of the Dragon Queen) are being hired as big box office draws. Fu Manchu was Sellers' last movie before he died, and movie producers hope his reputation as a famous British comedian will draw many of his fans. Some even defend Sellers' role as Fu Manchu by asserting that Sellers' brand of humour says it's OK to make fun of anything and everything; to them, laughing at oneself and laughing at whole nationalities is the same thing.

But the original purpose of the Fu Manchu character of the1930's was to create a mistrust of Chinese people, and the effect of the Peter Sellers remake is no different today. These movies coincide with the U.S. rulers' chauvinist campaign to "unify" the country based on false patriotism, by creating an "enemy"- whether it is iranian students, Japanese auto workers, Arab oil producers, or the oppressed nationalities here in the U.S.

Free Speech is not the issue

The "free speech arguments of liberal film critics PaulineKael and columnist Nat Hentoff is a wrong argument. Just as free speech should not include the right to yell "fire" in a crowded theatre, or the right of the KKK to march in public, it should not include the right to promote racism on the mass media.

Amidst all the sanctimonious cries about censorship, Hollywood will continue to make racist films as long as it is politically possible and profitable. Therefore, people organizing against these films are targeting the movie producers' pocket-books, since money is the only thing they value. Delaying productions, pressuring companies to cancel racist projects and finally demonstrating at the theatres for a boycott are all ways of exerting mass pressure.

These actions won't get rid of stereotypes-they'll exist so long as the system needs them to help keep oppressed nationalities down. But the mass protests can discourage producers and mass educatioanl campaigns can convince film viewers to take a stand against racism and nationaloppression by not spending their money to see these movies. And the protest movement is generating national pride and mass scale resistance by the oppressed peoples who are determined to stop these racist films.

California Asians Picket Fu Manchu

San Francisco-Over 50 demonstrators from the Coalition of Asians to Nix Charlie Chan (C.A.N. Charlie Chan) piketed the Cinema 21 theater here on Friday, August 8, to protest the opening of The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu, starring Peter Sellers.

C.A.N. Charlie Chan, which formed out of the San Francisco Asian communities' opposition to the recent local filming of the latest Charlie Chan movie, plans to continue its protests of the Fu Manchu movie by holding informational picket lines. "A movie like this perpetuates offensive, racist images of Asian Americans and insults the dignity of our people," explained spokesman Forrest Gok.

Sixty to seventy people decided to heed the picketers' message that "film makers who make racist films should not be encouraged at the box office," by not seeing the movie. Several patrons walked out of the theater after seeing the first few minutes.

The Southern California chapter of C.A.N. Charlie Chan organized an opening night picket of 40 community activists, Asian artists and students, at the Hollywood Pacific Theater in Los Angeles.

In Sacramento, the Asian Coalition Against stereotypes picketed theaters on opening night and passed out leaflets explaining their boycott throughout the movie's opening weekend.

of America. He left here fighting poverty and injustice , economic inequity, stupidity and greed. He left fighting and he returns today fighting. It is with that understanding and in that spirit that I approach the subject of listening to the blood of W.E.B.DuBois and the dreams of the dead.

Allow us to say that I approach the subject and the occasion with some trepidation. I am uncomfortably aware that DuBois probably anticipated this day as he anticipated so many other things. They say he started collecting and anotating his papers for posterity at the age of fifteen. I am sure that there is a note somewhere in these papers that comments acidly on what some fool would say on the day of dedication.I hope to avoid that by speaking in so far as possible in DuBois's words. I want to begin with the words he wrote in the gift of black folk, words that should serve as a permanent warning to anyone who handles or uses these papers.You know the quotation,"listen to the wind, oh God,the reader that wail across the ripe cords stretched taunt on broken human hearts. Listen to the bones, the bare bleached bones of slaves that lie in the lanes of seven seas and beat internal tom-toms in the forest of the labering deep. Listen, listen to the blood, the cold quick blood that spills its filth across the fields of the flowers of the free. Listen to the souls that wing and thrill and weep and scream andsob and sing about it all. What shall these things mean, oh God,the reader •", and DuBois answered his own he said, "you know, you know" What that means on one level is what DuBois tells us today from the grave is that you read these papers at your own risk. You understand what I'm saying• I'm saying on one level that DuBois was a dangerous man in life, and he is dangerous in death, but he is still relevent and still on the case. I am saying on another level that there are challenges, imperatives, exigencies, urgencies in these papers and that no man, no woman, no child should defile them if he or she is not willing to deal with those challenges, with what Dr DuBois called, in anticipation of his death, "the dreams of the dead"

Now there are obviously many challenges in these papers, to many to deal with in the time alloted here and I would like with your permission to deal with three general challenges of DuBois' dreams and his papers. The first challenge, is the challenge of the new land , the challenge of creating a land beyond unbridled greed and mindless materialism a land that belongs to all the people, and is ruled by all the people, the challenge of the new land. The challenge that Dr. DuBois offers here, in and through his papers, is the challenge of trying Democracy, something that has never been tried in the United States of America: political democracy, economic democracy and cultural democracy.

In a long, fruitful and creative life, this prophet of the new land called for proportionate representation in physical and spiritual form and a new policy based on the idea of the greatest good for all. Not only all blacks, but also all whites, not only all men but also all women, and the challenge he presents us today is the challenge of creating the new land, the new hope, the new dispensation of his dreams. " Behold the beautiful land which the Lord, thy God, hath given thee." When Dr. DuBois had quoted that line he was talking about the South, but the words had meanings far beyond the boundaries of that region, for he said in another place that we must want the wants of all, we must get rid of the idea, the fascination for exclusiveness and he went on to say, in his book, Black Reconstruction," What an idea and what an age for its realization in this land of riches, fertility, natural resources, such as earth seldom exhibited before a population infinite in its variety of unequal gift burned in the forest of poverty and cast, yearning toward the unknown God, what an idea and what an age for its realization," and it seemed to Dr DuBois that the struggle for the realization of this idea, on this land was the "supreme adventure" and the last great battle of the West:the challenge of the new land. That is the first challenge.

The second challenge flowing with, and out of it, is the challenge of a new vision. Particularly in the area of scholarship, which is visiated in our time as it was in his, by race and class biases against the poor, the black and the driven against the water. Dr. DuBois raised in his life time, and he raises, in these papers the fundamental question of the meaning of scholarship: What is scholarship for• Can scholarship serve the many instead of the few• Can it address itself to the problems of bread and peace and racism and militarism• Can it serve the poor and the lowly, or is it destined to go on forever serving the rich, and the white and the powerful• These were his questions, and they are now our questions, and we must answer them with the understanding which was also his understanding, that scholarship is not an end in itself, but a means by which men and women address other men and women and assume responsibility for them.

"Justice and Truth", he said," 'lie with the lowest, the plight of the lowest man. The plight of the black man deserves the first answer and the plight of the giants of industry the last." From this stand point it is easy to see that the whole life of this exemplary scholar was a devestating practical critique of the short comings of American scholarship. When almost all American scholars were wrong, when Beard was wrong, and Dunning, and Philip, and Woodrow Wilson, two black scholars, DuBois and Carter G. Woodson stood almost alone in the path of truth. That fact testifies, it has a pedagogical value It calls us to a confrontation with the continuing failure of American scholarship in its appraisal of race, class, and economic inequities, and it is important to understand things have gotten worse, not better, since Dr. DuBois' death.

As we all know, it is fashionable today for scholars, brilliant scholars, to create elaborate defenses of slavery and to openly question the idea of equality in public education. " We should never have a science of history", Dr. DuBois said, "until we have in our colleges men who regard the truth as more important than the defense of the white race, and who will not deliberatly encourage students to gather thesis material in order to support a prejudice or to buttress a lie."

There is no point really in talking about the DuBois papers unless we are willing to do something within our own lives and within the context of our own work about the continuing betrayal of his dream and his idea, and let it be said here, that the idea was linked to the much meligned idea of black studies which Dr DuBois perceived correctly as a necessary corrective to the white studies of American education. It will be recalled in this connection that he proposed many years ago a serious one-hundred year study of black America.

Let it be said here brother Thelwell that the ideal was linked to the much maligned idea of black studies which Dr. DuBois pAmerica. The 100 years Dr. Clark are almost up with the exception of few islands we have not begun to deal seriously with Dr. Dubois' insights on this question. There is another point here which we cannot ignore without dishonoring ourselves and Dr. Dubois. That broad, multi-national, multi-racial people's movement must be constituted. History shows that the periods of social and economic crisis in which the Klan and the right flourished were times when a broad progressive movement of the people did not exist On the other hand, history also tells us that in similar periods of social and economic upheaval, such as the 1930's and 1960's, that the Klan's influence was minimal due to the existence of strong mass movements which advocated real and progressive answers to social and economic problems. (Next week we will examine the history of the struggle against the Klan from the Civil War to the present)

We see a resurgence of the Klan today from a membership of 4,000 in 1971 to a present membership between 10,000 and 15,000 because we are in a period of social and economic turmoil. Today's crisis has the makings of something worse than the great depression of the 1930's. Our economy is in trouble, there are not enough jobs for the youth, our cities are becoming wastelands, our educational systems are deteriorating, and so on. Simply put, the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. The struggle just to survive is becoming more and more difficult. The powers that be in this society have no intention of trying to influence its direction in a way that will meet the needs of the vast majority of the people. When you are unwilling to make progressive change in a society, and things are becoming more and more intolerable for the great majority, then youbetter find a way to control and stifle the discontent of the majority. If nothing else, you must redirect their anger away from the propertied classes and their representatives in government.

In order to control people you must provide an explanation of their problems. The explanation must, however, push them away from the real reasons for their distress. In other words, you must direct the majority of people away from the corporations and big business politicians. Instead, you must give them a scapegoat for their problems. This is where the rulers of our society are moving. This is where the Klan fits into their plans. If the rightward push is successful, the basis exists for a mass fascist movement. If a fascist movement emerges in full force then we will also have a police state to act as enforcer. This is in no one's interest, white or Black.

Because of the pervasiveness of racist ideology, the potential scapegoat already exists: Blacks and other minorities. If we understand this we understand the role of the Klan and why it is experiencing a resurgence. The Klan is not the cause of the problem, although they are a terror and a menace and must be stopped. The cause of our problem rests in the ivory halls of our Capital and the skyscrapers of Exxon, General Motors, etc.. They represent the real backbone of the assault on the people's livelihood and the racist terror of the Klan, the Nazis, and other right wing groups.

We cannot expect this trend to dominate the political and social life of our country in the 1980's however. This movement does not have to grow. There is no inevitability to it

It is definitely whithin the realm of necessity, to build in the 1980's a people's movement that deals with the real problems. This movement must unite all progressive-minded people from the Black Liberation, Women's, Labor and Youth movements, and other anti-monopoly, pro-people groupings if we are to turn this nation around in the coming period. At the foundation of such a movement must be the unity of Black and white people. In order to make such a movement a success we must fight the influence of the Klan and the Klan mentality• RACISM. In order to successfully fight the Klan and the racist ideology in the current decade we must promote the unity of the broadest segment of the people, Black, white, Hispanic, Native American, Asian-Pacific, etc..What is at stake is the future of our country.

BOLIVIA IN TURMOIL

The country of Bolivia is frequently associated with tin, llamas, the Andes mountains and coup d'etats. It would seem that this association is a stereotype which ridicules a poor country torn by its internal politics, plundered by foreign economic interests and containing a massive forgotten Indian population. This article does not deal with coup d'etats per se, but it uses the topic as a means of stating basic issues regarding the political instability in Bolivia.

The bloody coup of July 17 this year, carried out by the present dictator General Luis Garcia Meza, was the fourth military coup in a two-year period wherein elections were held three times, each time aborted by military interventions. The electoral project was initiated by the dictator General Hugo Banzer in July 1978. Banzer manipulated the media in order to show the electoral process as "an opening to a true democratic process", thus trying to take the credit for this demagogic maneuver (congruent with Jimmy Carter's foreign policy). The alleged project involves a tactical withdrawal by the armed forces, leaving the state apparatus in the hands of the agro-export and medium-mining bourgeoisie. The overall strategy consists of institutionalizing by constitutional means the economic hegemony of this bourgeoisie, using political channels, and at the same time keeping the armed forces as an inconditional power factor.

At the end of these three aborted electoral attempts, Garcia Meza's violent coup is still regarded by some as a violation of a democratic process. It should be recalled that since 1964, eight coups were carried out by the armed forces. An electoral program is not synonymous with a democratic process. In Bolivia a significant proportion of the total population (about 60 percent) is made up of native people, who have never been relegated to any role in the political and economic life of the country. Political parties and fronts have not seriously formulated and pushed for the class interests of these huge masses.

Since the first electoral attempt back in 1978, efforts were exhausted in order to consolidate the political control of the state by a powerful economic group that evolved as a consequence of the degenation of the revolutionary process ignited in 1952, the revolution led by the Revolutionary Nationalist Movement (MNR). Two of the MNR's leaders Victor Paz Estenssoro and Hernan Siles Suazo, proto„onized together with the ex-dictator Banz.r the electoral ply versions of 1978 and 1980.

Making no attempts to elaborate on the political history of Bolivia, due to the scope of this article, we would like to mention some causes that were behind the military takeovers in the country. We will use a simple argument: contradictions and tensions of a political nature, between the working class (composed of miners, peasants and other workers) and the dominant bourgeoisie (composed of techno-bureaucrats, a part of the middle class and the powerful medium-mining and agro-export group) have influenced and shaped the armed forces in a political context.

face. All that needs to be donē is to pick up any black or white magazine and compare the advertisements;ie, Essence and Cosmopolitan or Players and Playboy or Ebony and Esquire. But the most obvious reasons is that large sections of the Black media does not actively combat racism hence its passive role. This article centers on the history of racism, why and how it is cultivated and reinforced today. It explains the "real forces" behind the existence of racism. Black students along with other anti-racist struggles have not influenced the real forces, the roots of racism. And they will not be able to defeat them if Black student activities are confined to reforming institutional racism. However, the foreward movement, the progression of history is forcing us into confrontation with the roots of racism, the source of our exploitation and oppression. Soon we will have to choose sides, to take a stand either for or against our oppressors and exploiters. The challenge of the 80s is: will we meet the forces of racism, exploitation and oppression prepared and organized, or will we continue to sing "We shall overcome all the way back to the back of the bus received are a product of the growth of Zionism throughout the Valley. But what appears to be the growing offensive power of Zionism in this community is really only a defensive reaction to the growing support for the Palestinian people's struggle for self-determination. The threatening phone calls are an attempt to prevent, through the use of intimidation tactics, the formation of the Palestine Solidarity Committee which represents the uncovering of the Zionist racist ideology. While the Zionist element is becoming more active and seems on the offensive, in actuality its support is rapidly declining among people in general and the Jewish community in particular. The struggle against Zionism and for the liberation of Palestine is being taken up by people all over the world who are struggling to defeat imperialism. The struggle of the Palestinian people will be victorious!

The Palestine Solidarity Committee is taking the task of making the Palestinian point of view known to the American and non-American public. That point of view which has been kept systematically away from the world consciousness for more than thirty years. But the world started to recognize the reality of the Zionist state of Israel and the fundamental links the Zionist state has with imperialism, South Africa, the deposed Shah of Iran, Somoza, Chile, El Salvador and many other Latin American dictatorship regimes. We, the Palestinians, will continue the struggle despite all threats, and the victory will be ours as well as for all oppressed people.

I call on all the progressive people to support the Palestinians and the Jewish people against Zionism and other oppressive and racist forces.

point spoken to so eloquently by Dr. Aptheker last night is that Dr. Dubois brings Marx and Mao and the peasants of the world into this hall. He also brings the people of the world into this halls. The challenge he presents here is the challenge of believing in the people and using our minds and our monographs and our computers to emancipate the people, particularly the people who have been excluded for so long, the brown and black and yellow peoples of the world.

We see now through a glass whitely, we see now with white eyes. The challenge of Dr. Dubois, is the challenge of seeing with new eyes, new hearts and new souls the challenge of a new vision. That leads inevitably to the third challenge, the challenge of a new world order the challenge of opening the doors of the world and the petals of our minds to Africa and Asia and the first, I almost said the Third World, the challenge of creating a world without war, a world without militarism and racism, a world in which the resources of this earth are distributed fairly and equally among all the people's of the earth. In order to deal with that challenge we have got to deal first with two related questions. The first is a reduction, a world wide reduction and military expenditures and the creation of a new world economic order. The second is the pitiless challenge of race not only in the first world but also in the first world corridors of Massachusetts and other states of the Union.

It has been 74 years now since Dr. DuBois walked barefooted up the mountain with the Niagara movement. It has been 71 years now since he help found the NAACP. The world has turned on its axis many a times. But Massachusetts and America and the world are still cursed by the sin of racism. If we ever loved Dr. Dubois, if we ever held him dear in our hearts we would do everything we could possibly do now to rid Massachusetts and America and the World of this dread disease."Most of the peoples of the world", Dr. Dubois said once, "are colored people, a belief in humanity is the belief in colored people." Dubois brings that challenge with him into these halls and that challenge defines him and us and will define everyone who uses these papers. Thus finally the fourth and final challenge, the challenge of a new humanity, the challenge to get right down to cases of creating man and woman. Now that sounds mad and will almost certainly be interpreted as madness for almost everyone believes that man and woman have been created. But it was the genius of Dubois to understand that the men and women we see walking on this earth are only pale shadows of what men and women can be and must be when their possibilities are free ."What a world this would be," Dr. Dubois said "when human possibilities are freed. When we discover each other. When the stranger is no longer the potential criminal and the servant inferior." We are called in and through these papers to the high and dangerous air of the breathtaking vision. Out of our arrogance and out of our ignorance we talk of the Renaissance which should be called the white Renaissance. For the real Renaissance, the Renaissance of all the peoples of the earth has not yet come. We do not know yet what man is or what woman is. How could we know when three fourths of the peoples of the world have been excluded from the definition of man and woman.

The task we face now at this critical junction in the history of the world is the task of joining hands with black, brown , yellow and white people everywhere in order to define for the first time the full c mensions and the full height of man and woman. It is on this deep level and within the context of concrete and personal responsibilities that the dreams of the dead assume their true meaning. It would perhaps be useful here at the end to let Dr. Dubois tell you himself of the dreams and the urgencies of the dead. Finally here are two quotations, the first is from Dark Water, listen:"If we were not dead, we would lie and listen to the flowers grow, we would hear the birds sing and see how the rains rises, blushes and burns and pales and dies in beauty . We would see spring and summer and the red rite of autumn and then in winter beneathe the soft white snow sleep and dream of dreams. " But we know', Dr. DuBois said, " That being dead our happiness is a fine and finished thing and that 10 a 100 a 1000 years we should lie at rest, unhurt in the Court of Peace " But this was not by any means his last words on the subject. And he returned to the thought in that remarkable prayer in his autobiography, "Suffer not", he said," eternal dead, to stew in this evil , the evil of South Africa, the evil of Mississippi, the evil of evils which is what we hope to hold in Asia and Africa, in the southern Americas and the islands of the seven seas. tourneys, because they did not have enough probable cause for indictments on some of the charges, but we were indicted anyway.

The state appointed attourneys did not do one thing to try to defend us, so this leaves alot of legal work that has to be done and a short time to do it in. We are scheduled for arraignment Sept.19, 1980, and trial in early Oct.1980. One thing is sure: we need a change of venue; this will take some expert testimony and may call for the use of (The National Jury Project), plus there is need for alot of investigation and research. All this requires funding and time. We have an uphill battle on our hands mainly because of the racist environment"we are in. I have tried to highlight briefly the grave situation we are presently faced with so you will know first hand why we are asking all concerned parties to support us in raising this much needed defense fund. My attorneys have asked me not to discuss the case with anyone, but to have all concerned parties contact him as soon as possible as they would like to explain the situation personally along with the defense strategy and the need for a defense fund.

Miss Cyndi Jones of the Advocate has been diligently campaigning in our behalf to gather the much needed support. Other people who have expressed an interest are Mr.John Thompson, law professor at Western New England College, Mrs.Ethel Bunting of Harambe Holiday Inc., Brothers from the S.T.C.C. Radio Station, Attorney Arthur Serata, and yourself, both Perry and I would like to thank you for your interest in our plight, and will greatly appreciate any assistance you and the Black Mass Communications Project can offer in helping us raise this much needed defense fund.

In conclusion, for any further information concerning this matter please feel free to contact attorneys Bruce Harvey or Mike Brown, P.O.Box 906, Clayton, Georgia 30525. Their telephone number is (404) 782-4575. Please acknowledge this letter as soon as possible so that I will know you received it.

Las ultimas semanas la coalicion ha pasado por unos momentos de poca actividad aunque hemos estado planeando nuevas estrategias. Y ahora es muy urgente que se integren nuevas personas para llevar a cabo la tareas que nos conduciran a la victoria.

El trabajo mas importante del momento es colocar una persona en el comite de busqueda para un nuevo - una nueva productor-a. WFCR esta buscando una persona que produzca programas hispanos. Se puede solicitar hasta el dia 10 de Octubre en Hampshire House donde se encuentra la estacion. Despues el comite de busqueda mirara las solicitudes y eligira una persona.

Tenemos que influir en este proceso para asegurarnos de que le den el trabajo a una persona hispana calificada, y que tenga en cuenta los intereses de la conumidad hispana y que tenga una vision politica progresista. Ademas no se puede confiar en las raras intenciones del Mr. Goldfarb ese Goldfarb esta usando la radion y la prensa para manipular la opinion publica y para obtener apoyo ya que su trabajo esta en peligro. Se deben escribir cortas a la oficina del Senor Dan Melley, Office of Public Affairs, UMass, exigiendo que no le renuevan el contrato a Goldfarb.

Si eres hispano, si te interesan las problemas de nuestra comunidad, si quieres programacion hispana, si quieres que nuestra cultura sobreviva y crezca, lucha, encuelvete, unete a nosotros.

The Coalition for Public Involvement in Radio will be having its next meeting this Tuesday. The Coalition has not been very active the past few weeks because not enough people have been involved. But new strategies have been formuloted and now it's urgent that new people participate in order to carry out the tasks that will take us to victory.

The most important work at the moment is getting someone on the search committee for a new producer of Hispanic programming on WFCR. The deadline for applications is October 10 in Hampshire House, where the station is located.

We have to take part in this search process in order to insure that the job is given to a qualified Hispanic person who has the interests of the Hispanic community at heart and has a progressive political outlook. We all know that we can't trust Goldfarb. He is using the radio and newspapers to manipulate public opinion in support of his job, now that he has been informed that his contract may not be renewed. Letters should be written to Dan Melley, Office of Public Affairs, Whitmore, demanding that Goldfarb's contract not be renewed.

These are critical moments for the future of Hisponic programming on WFCR. The Hispanic community and its supporters must take immediate unified action.

For more information call Ahora 549-2479 or Betty 549-5977.

Una gran parte de la comunidad hispana en UMass se dio cita el domingo 21 para disfrutar el concierto de la cantante puertorriqueña Joey Lotorre. El programa consistió en canto y verso de la Nueva Cancion de Puerto Rico y otros paises de America Latina.

Bolivia Pais en Naufragio Parte II

Por Quispe Huistoyud

+ En esta segunda parte ilustraremos, por medio de sucesos historicos, el papel politico represivo jugado por los militares golpistas en Bolivia.

Con la toma del poder en 1952 del Movimiento Nacionalista Revolucionario (MNR) las fuerzas armadas, reorganizadas bajo la tutela del estado popular-nacionolista, se empopan del fervor y doctrina nacionalistas. Es decir que oficiales de rango adoptan la mentalidad MNR-ista de crear un estado con una politica economica dual: la de propulsar industrias basicas para el pais (produccion de mineroles; creacion de agro-industrias, de infraestructura de comunicaciones y transportes, etc.) y fomentar y regular a un mismo tiempo una burguesia asociada con una industria liviana, comercio de exportacion-importacion, distribucion, etc.

Aunque el MNR consiguio apoyo popular en un principio, el apoyo de trabajadores fobriles y mineros fue disminuyendo a medida de que el aparato de estaao se deshacia de la participacion popular en el gobierno hasta tornarse en un organo de control y represion del proletariado. Durante los anos 1954-1960 del periodo de Hernan Siles Suazo las fuerzas armadas son utilizadas para detener violentamente las avanzados proletarias en demanda de mejoros salariales y de condiciones de trabajo.

El golpe del .Gra. Borrientos en 1964 derroca a Victor Paz Estenssoro (1954-1960). Este golpe se da en condiciones en la que el fervor MNR-ista estaba diluido en sus bases, las avanzadas pequenoburguesas cuestionaban la politica economica cloudicante del gobierno, y el soporte popular se habia convertido en reistencia militante. El dictador Borrientos abre las puertas del pais a un flujo considerable de inversiones caspitalistas extranjeras, las cuales canalizadas por el estado, fortifican y alimenton el crecimiento de la buergesia incipiente de mineria mediana y agro-exportadora en el Oriente boliviano. Al mismo tiempo, Barrientos se entrega a los dictamenes de la Alianza para el Progreso, Cuerpo de Paz; y recibe ayuda economica y tecnica militarista de los EE.UU. Esta asistencia reprcutira en la eficacia y efectividad con que el ejercito neutralizara y reprimiro en adelante a los trabajadres organizados y mobilizados.

Barrientos muere en un tragico accidente aereo. El Gral. Ovando toma el poder de Siles Salinas, sucesor de Barrientos. A Ovando le animan convicciones nacionolistas que se mencionaron con anterioridad: Su administracion consolida la fundicion de estono electrolitico de Vinto, nacionaliza la Gulf Oil Co., inicia una reopertura de canales democraticos asociados con los sindicatos. Su termino en el poder esta acondicionada par la presion de la derecha militaristo. Ante la vocilacion de Ovando entre un gobierno popoulista y un fascista, se sucede el intrincado cuartelazo del cuol el Gral. J.J. Torres saldro controlando el gobierno. Torres o su vez encarna tendencias populistas y nocionalistas y logro conseguir cierto apoyo de las masas proletarias las cuales atraves de sus poderosos organos sindicales toman una limitado participacion en las decisiones politicas del estado. La caida de Torres se decreta apenas este sube al poder; en agosto de 1971 el Coronel Banzer, auspiciado por la burguesia agro-exportadora del Oriente (mayormente la poderoso colonia alemona industrialista) arrebata el poder del Gral. Torres.

El dictador Banzer no solamente acelera la penetracion de inversiones extranjeros hacia el Oriente agricola, sino que entrega las finanzas del pais a las demandas del IMF. Se devalua el peso boliviano, se congelan salarios se reducen los gastos publicos, etc. Banzer permite la masacre de campesinos en Tolata quienes se concentran paro exigir mejoras de precios de sus productos agricolas. Desde el punto estrategico Banzer fomenta la infiltracion de elementos burgueses al aparato de estado. Asi, mineries claves como finanzas, integracion, industria y comercio son maejados por industriales poderosos.

La ayuda economica de EE.UU. se multiplica significativamente durante los anos 1971-78 (al igual que la contraparte chilena). Tambien se rprime violentamente a la oposicion encabezada por lideres mineros, estudiantiles, politicos y campesinos. La produccion y contrabando de cocaina llega a su auge bajo la bendicion y directa partcipacion de militares de rango.

Se podrian calificar de aventurismo y ambicion personal los cuertelas del Gral. Pereda en julio del 78 y del Coronel Natusch Busch en Noviembre del 79. El golpe del Gral. Padilla es una evidencia mas de aquella generacion de oficiales nacionalistas engendrados por la revolucion del MNR en el 52.

Por ultimo el golpe de julio 17, 1980 del ahora dictador Gral. Garcia Meza esta rodeado por una aureola donde los intereses de la mafia narco traficante y la neutralizacion del empuje izquierdista atraves de los proceos electorales (1978-1980 se combinan indistintamente. Un rosgo muy peculiar del golpe gorila se refiere al asesoriamento tactico, financiamento y provision de "recursos humanos" de parte del ejercito argentino hacia Mezo. Aunque Brazil no tuvo tanta participacion directa en el golpe de Banzer del 71, si jugo un papel militar tactico importante al desplazar unidades de su ejercito a su frontera con Bolivia, sugiriendo el apoyo de Brazil hacia Banzer.

Como conclusion podriamos asociar los cuartelazos o golpes gorilas con el proceso de cambio politico-economico de la siguiente manera:

a) el rol funcional del ejercito baliviano ha sido influenciado en gran parte por lo creacion y consolidacion del poder economico y, luego, politico, de la buerguesia agro-exportadora y mineria mediana en el pais.

b) En las fases iniciales de la creacion de esta clase dominante, el ejercito estaba supeditado al aparoto de estado, y funcionaba como mediador y arbitro entre el estado y las masas de trabajadores.

c) cuando el peso economico de la buerguesia de mineria mediana alcanzo niveles significativos, las fuerzas armadas se desligan del estadosconstitucional y se tornan un factor de poder supeditadas a los intereses de la buerguesia de mineria mediana y agro-exportadora.

d) Mientras la influencia de esta buerguesia es mas economica que politica, el ejercito asume el poder por la fuerza bajo esquemas algunas veces nacionalistas y tambien populistas, mayormente fascistas.

e) La consolidacion del dominio de la buerguesia se da cuando esta se infiltra en el aparato de estado utilizando tecnocratas, administradores, politicos' y oficiales militares, los cuales conforman un cuerpa politico sustancial en el gobierno. Entonces el ejercito se entrega totalemente a los dictamenes de las clases dominantes. La neutralizacion por parte del ejercito del empuje de la clase obrera, campesina y oponentes a la bota militar se vuelve cada vez mas violenta, sangrienta y despiadada a medida que el dominio politico-economico de la oligarquia se consolido.

g) La produccion y trafico de cocaina, principalemente en el Oriente, se ha dado bajo el auspicio financiero, administrativo y tecnico de elementos de la burguesia agro-exportadora, con la subsequente incorparacion de militares para su vigilancia y control, y posterior participacion en todas las fases del contrabando de cocaina.

Entonces la conecction entre militares, golpes de estado, burguesia agro-exportadora y mineria mediana, narcotrafico, represion de los trabajores, penetracion de capital extranjero, el factor de poder de os militares, la institucionalizacion por vias legales de la oligarquia, etc., todos forman los engranges y tuercas de la maquina historico del pais enclaustrado que es Bolivia, y que se debate en un 'mar' de contradicciones sociales, politicas y economicas.

Puerto Rico Now a Refugee Camp

by Gertrudis Garcia

Lost week the CarterAdministration saw in Puerto Rico the 'dumping ground' that it was looking for. The administration was not interested in establishing o phormaceutical or any other kind of industry that destroys the lands, air or water surrounding it. The administration thought of Puerto Rico os another place to send Cuban ond Haitionrefugees that are doily arriving to the U.S.

Since the Mariel Port wos opened to allow dissatisfied Cubans to leave Cubo, people were arriving in Florido on a daily bosis. Added to the Cubans, Haitian refugees ore also arriving in Florido. From there they are transferred to different military installations in different states.

Now that the American people have no more open arms and hearts for the Cuban refugees, the Carter Administration is dumping them in Puerto Rico. In this case 'dumping' is the correct expression because neither the Puerto Rican people nor government were consulted in regard to receiving Cuban refugees.

The general feeling of the Puerto Rican is one of resentment. Puerto Ricans already have their arms and heart in their own problems, and now they are forced to recieve Cuban refugees. Puerto Rico at this moment has an unemployment rate of 18 per cent (the unofficial rate is over 25 per cent), a severe housing shortage and thousands of families in the food stamp program. The refugees can in no way help in the solution of the problems that Puerto Rico has; instead of this they are going to worsen these problems.

In a way Puerto Ricans feel that they are relegated to a second place even in their own land. Puerto Ricans know that Cubans are going to find a job, get an apartment in the government housing projects, and get other Benefits easier and foster than them.

Even though the people of Puerto Rico and Cuba identify themsleves as the "town wings of o bird", this feeling is not expressed toward the Cuban community in Puerto Rico (they are considered "gusonos" — worms).

Many of the Cubans who live in P.R. are those who left Cuba immediotely after their country became socialist. Those who left Cuba were those who had businesses and were able to leave with some economic resources. They are the 'white' professionols and businessmen that today control most of the small businesses in P.R. (the big business is in the honds of Yonkee investors). It is this Cuban business community that is most strongly opposed to the ideo of sending refugees to Puerto Rico.

They are not opposed to receiving their brothers and sisters because the economic and social conditions of Puerto Rico are bod. What they ore doing is trying to protect their image. Everybody knows that these refugees are completely different from the first refugees thot left Cuba in the 60's. The first were white, middle class professionals; those of the 80's are largely black, poor, gays, lesbians, mentally retarded, etc. Most of the refugees from Mariel (as they are called) are Cubans that were unable to adopt themselves to the revolution. Others came because they were misled by their relatives and friends living in the U.S. or P.R.

Now that the Cubans in P.R. who came in the 60's know what the Cuban refugees of the 80's are doing in Miami and other cities, they don't want them in P.R. They understand that in P.R. conditions exist that are going to make a "hell" of their lives there. With the high unemployment and hard times that Puerto Ricans are having, the refugees are going to find people that are going to see them as "gusanos". They are not welcome in P.R., not because they ore Cubans, but instead because they represent unfair competition for those Puertoricans that are in the unemployment line or on the waiting list of the public housing projects.

In In relotion to the Haitian refugees, the government of the U.S. agoin demonstrotes preference for the Cubans and not for them. It is an obusive action, os well, sending Haitians to Puerto Rico. The Carter administration knows that the language of the Haitians is French or Patua, also knows that the language of Puertoricans is Spanish. If Haitians are sent to P.R. they ore going to be condemned to the refugee camp for many years until they learn Spanish. Why does the Carter administration follow two different roads to the some problem?

The ploce for the Haitians is Miami or New York or any other state where they can find relotives and friends who speok the some language and shore the some culture. There is no Haitian community in Puerto Rico. If any of those who come recently to Florido ore sent to P.R. they are going to be Pioneers, not in o land of "milk ond honey", but pioneers in a land that is suffering grave problems, and where Sponish is spoken and not French.

This refugee problem reflects the colonial status of Puerto Rico, one of the most populoted countries in the world (more than 800 people p.s.m.). The local government is trying to control the popolotion growth in the island. Its intentions are useless because P.R. has no power to say who is welcomed and who is not well received. That decision is made by the immigration ogencies of the U.S. government.

Now Carter, moking use of his imperialist powers, decided to send Cubon and Haitian refugees to Puerto Rico. Neither the Cubans nor Haitians, nor the Puerto Rican people can express their opinion in this aspect. The Carter administration has suid and imposes the last word.

Palestinian Perspective on Bolivia

By Taleb Bizri

With the lastest military coup in Bolivia the ruling militaristic systems became dominant in South America.

When the militarists were withdrawn on November 1979 from the government, after popular resistance had defeated a right-wing coup, they declared that their withdrawal was only temparary. They did not hesitate to remind Lidia Guieler's civilian government that the limits of her authority were at the doors of the military bases. They forced the appointing of Gen. Luis Garcia Meza to the position of general commander of the armed forces.

The latest military coup on July 17 this year is not a strange phenomenon in Bolivian history. The country has experienced four coups since the electoral process was first attempted in June 1978. Garcia Meza's coup last July is the latest attempt by the right-wing military to abort the electoral process.

This coup could be characterized as a combination of both the Chilean and Argentian experiences. In both regimes, the military is in a position of power and attempt to exterminate "annoying" progressive forces. On July 17 and the following days, the Bolivian people have been subject to a series of assassinations, mass arrest and torture. Some of the victims were leaders of the left and the labor movement, such as Juan Lechin, Simon Reyes, Genaro Flores, and Marcelo Quiroga, and others. The confrontation arose between tanks and fighter jets on one side, and the miners and peasants on the other. The militaristic regime of Bolivia has prohibited all union and political party activity, trying to crush the wide popular front forged in the recent years.

However, despite the extreme repression and unbalanced powers, the unified miners and Indian farmers have responded with a general strike, built barricades and revolted against the regime. The Bolivian people have registered a strong and determined resistance.

The United States is requiring the regime to stand on its own without direct U.S. assistance, but with the help of the Argentinian dictatorship. (Until the U.S. elections are over). During this period, Argentina has rushed to provide evey military and financial assistance needed by the Bolivian regime. It has become almost certain that Argentina had an essential role in thek Bolivian coup, especially because of the Argentinian-Brazilian competition for controlling South America, and also Argentina's interest in Bolivia's natural gas.

However, the Bolivian militarists know that neither Brazil nor Argentina can substitute the role of U.S. imperialism. During this period the United States has onnounced a freeze on economic and military aid to Bolivia, but observers have doubts about the accuracy of this announcement. It might not be more than just a cover for the U.S. role in the Bolivian coup and conservative tactics related to the U.S. relative political freeze which takes place around every election time.

The Palestinian people, as part of the Third World, should not expect pleasant surprises from the White House after the upcoming election. The Palestinian people, together with all the people of the world, should support the workers and formers of Bolivia against the Bolivian military regime supported by the CIA and against the Zionist state of Israel. It should be noted that Israel provides military and economic assistance to the military dictatorships in Latin America. Israel is one of the few countries in the world which has recognized the Bolivian regime.

Baira Opina Sobre Liddy

Redactado por Gertrudis Garcia

Una colaboracion de Miguel

La siguiente es el recuento que los companeros del colectivo Baira opinan sobre la visita que a UMass hizo Gordon Liddy:

"Fuimos a ver a Gordon Liddy ya que interesabamos recoger directamente el sentimiento de la comunidad universitaria y escuchar directamente a un individuo representante de la ideologia imperialista del gobierno de los Estados Unidos.

Liddy hizo un recuento de su vida y luego, de su participacion en Watergate. Todavia no nos satisfacia la presencia de este esbirro capitalista pero al llegar la seccion de preguntas y respuestas quedamos impresionados con su arrogancia y la falta de respeto a la dignidad de los paises del Tercer Mundo. Este individuo pedia y defendia la intervencion americana en nuestros paises para provecho de los consorcios economicos Yankees. A boca suelta pedia crecer el militarismo por encima de los beneficios sociales como: los cupones, welfare, conseguir empleo y servicios de salud, para ganarle la carrera armamentista a los (social-imperialistas) sovieticos.

Liddy nos hizo reir varias veces con comementarios como cuando le preguntaron como contrarestaria la invacion sovietica en Afganistan. El contesto que hubiera invadido a Cuba. Parece que este agente ya olvido que ni la guerra genocida que llevaron los americanos en Viet-Nam evito que el valiente pueblo vietnamita liberara su pais de la intervencion yankee. Creemos que muy poco seria lo que lograrian con Cuba si intentaran tal medida.

Aunque dos terceras partes de la audiencia estuvo de acuerdo con muchos puntos del orador, nos agrado escuchar que la gran mayoria de los atacantes al orador eran representantes femeninas. Nos agrado ver la integracion de la mujer a la lucha de liberacion, venciendo el machismo y el rol secundario que tienen en esta sociedad. Aplaudimos todo este sector de avanzada.

Solo nos queda decir que aun nos asombra ver como este agente campea por su respeto, libre, cuando esta 'democracia' mantiene en las carceles a muchos presos politicos"

Protest Music in Puerto Rico

by Taleb Bizri

A revolution in music and art is taking place all over the world. However, to understand the origin, development and future of Puerto Rican protest music, one must understand the political history of Puerto Rico, which was first under Spanish colonizers who massacred the natives and infiltrated the culture.

In 1898, the Island was conquered by the United States under the pretext of helping the "barbarian" inhabitants to become "civilized".

Since 1898 the Puerto Rican people have been subject to the imposition of an "American style of civilization," while an estimated 85 of the Puerto Rican economy is controlled by North American enterprises and 13 of the Puerto Rican cultivatable land is controlled by the U.S. Pentagon.

Ninety nations in the United Nations General Assembly on Nov. 2, 1972 declared that the colonization of Puerto Rico by the United States is illegal. Looking at this support from the majority of the world, we understand that Puerto Rico is not alone in its struggle and present experience. So there is more than enough to protest about!

In addition to protest, the Latin American New Song Movement has shouldered the responsibility of keeping alive the rich cultural norms of Latin America.

A number of Popular singers have expressed their desire to sing protest music... but that is not enough. There is a danger that their interest in protest music might be purely commercial, rather than revolutionary.

The protest song must have a political meaning, and those who compromise with the system through commercialization of the art are not genuine protest singers and are not shouldering the responsibility of deciding the shape of their destiny.

and the past and prophesify the end in the beginning. For this is a beautiful world. This is a wonderful America, which the founding fathers dreamed until their sons drowned it in the blood of slavery and devoured it in greed. Our children must rebuild it. Let then the dreams of the dead rebuke the blind who think that what is will be forever and teach that what was worth living for must live again and that which merited death must stay dead. Teach us forever dead that there is no dream the deed and there is no deed but memory." This was his prayer and now it is ours. Teach us forever dead and forever living, rebuke the blind and teach us for ten, a hundred, a thousand years as we travel towards you and ourselves and the dark. Thank-You

Bolivia

The political contradictions have led the military forces to play roles associated with the following factors:

a) The nationalist fervor displayed by the MNR vanguard during the revolutionary process of 1952.

b)the role of mediators between the state(subdued to the oligarchy) and the working class.

c)the protection of the powerful economic interests of the medium-mining and agro-export bourgeoisie.

d)personal ambitions of military officers for seizing power.

This list is not exhaustive by any means, but it should serve as a starting point in order to elaborate on our topic. We will try to show that, rather than being isolated factors, they are part of a continous process that has shaped the turmoiled history of Bolivia.

Administration:
Trustees meet in Amherst

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The business of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees was taken to the Amherst campus yesterday where it was discovered that administrative positions previously funded by the state have now become financed by campus trust fund accounts.

In remarks before the board, Student Government Association co-President Richard LaVoice expressed concern that no additional monies had been budgeted for student services on the Amherst campus, even though the Boston campus will receive $310,000. He claimed two reasons for no increase; First, the administration has placed increased student services on the low end of its priority list. Second, through the refinancing of previously state funded positions with trust fund monies, there would be no need to budget state funds for fiscal year 1982.

LaVoice said that Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson had unilaterally earmarked trust fund monies to pay the salaries of the Director of

Knapp says Change in legislation necessary before student representation on Board of Regents

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Despite the Board of Regents view to not have a student member on the new board, UMass president David C. Knapp said yesterday he believes the board seems to support the idea.

Knapp made his remarks yesterday during a Collegian interview before he addressed the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Memorial Hall.

"There is talk of putting students on other types of boards for student representation," Knapp said, referring to Regents Chairmon James R. Martin's suggestion for a student advisory council to the board.

Martin has also indicatedhi desire to see students on the new Boards of trustees that will replace the present board by next March.

Knapp said that for student representation on any higher education governing board in the state, there will have to be a change in the legislation which established the 15-member Board of Regents.

Knapp said it is too early for him to determine what effect the board's actions will have on the three campuses of the University but he said it will probably only address itself to general policy guidelines for the state's 28 public colleges and universities.

"There will be more overall effective policy instead of making policies for a campus," Knapp said.

Knapp said that despite the largely business-oriented make-up of the Board, he believed the presence of those people would have a positive influence.

"I've worked with three boards of trustees all of which have been business excutives. I don't see a negative influence though there is a strong private consciousness," he said.

Knapp said we need a strong central officer to maintain a three campus university.

"Universities are different from two and four year colleges in what we expect from them, and if you want to receive from your comprehensive state university the same quality of teaching, research, and services the people of California, Illinois, and North Carolina receive from theirs, then differences must be taken into account as overall budget and personnel policies are devised," he said.

The Presidents office budget was cut about $8 million for this year.

"Yes, we are a lot more limited in the things we do this year. Last week I put in a 72 hour week, and the staff has been working ten hour days. I've seen editorial boards of papers, two or three radio talk shows all discussing the reorganization of state higher education. The cuts will hurt the loyal people of this office," he said.

Knapp said the combined campus effort has helped make his office stronger.

Senate speaker survives question of membership on LSO board

By KEN ROSS
and STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Staff

A motion brought before the Undergraduate Student Senate by Student Government Association co-President Rich Moran to rescind the one year term of Legal Services Office and Senate Speaker Board member Linda Geary failed last night.

Almost two hours of emotional debate began when Moran announced five new appointments to the Legal Services Office Board, excluding Geary. After Senator Joel Weisman pointed out that the Student Government Association constitution gives LSO board members a one year term and Geary's term does not expire until next April, Moran moved that Geary's term be rescinded.

Moran's motion required a 51 percent vote of the senate in order to pass. The eventual vote, conducted by secret ballot, favored Geary with 22 votes for the proposal, 40 votes against the proposal, and 5 abstentions.

Moran opened debate on the issue saying he was "very unimpressed with Linda on the board. I am not appointing her because I have no confidence in her decision-making abilities."

Co-President Rich LaVoice said Geary had been "spreading herself too thin lately."

"She has missed meetings and walked out of meetings," he said.

A number of senators said they believed that the presidents were trying to end Geary's term because she has disagreed with them on key issues in the past.

"They (the presidents) believe she's incompetent because she disagrees with them," said senator Allen Compagnon who charged that the people they had appointed to the board are closer to them ideologically.

"I can only see this as another Moran-LaVoice political move," said Senator Mark Kushinsky.

Compagnon said the LSO board is responsible for liason between the LSO and the student senate. He believes it is important that the chief executive of the senate also be on the LSO board, because of the importance of keeping both organizations well informed as to each others activities.

Compagnon said the LSO is one of the most powerful organizations in the university system.

"It is the legal arm of all students—graduate and undergraduate," he said. The board, which is responsible for managing the LSO, is made up of three graduate students and five undergraduates.

"The political rhetoric that senators were stating tonight was unfounded. The reason I wanted Linda (Geary) removed was that there were better people qualified," Moran said, charging Geary had acted irresponsibly in the recent hiring of a new LSO attorney.

"Linda changed her mind several times on her decision. She gave no rationale for her decision and she missed the meeting where the other candidate was interviewed," Moran said.

But Geary called the recent hiring process "political ping-pong" and claimed the presidents took their action as a result of the hiring process.

"The hiring was the single deciding factor in trying to get me off the board." Geary said. "If I had voted the way the

Iran rejects cease-fire, Iraq declares truce

BAGHDAD, Iraq [AP] — Iraq declared it will stop fighting Iran for four days starting Sunday, but will return any Iranian fire. The new Iraqi truce offer followed Iran's rejection of a U.N. cease-fire call and renewed air attacks by both sides at the battlefront.

The Iraqi announcement was made yesterday at the United Nations. Iraqi spokesman Salah al-Mukhtar said the dates Oct. 5-8 were chosen to allow time for consultations with Iran by the United Nations and by an Islamic peace mission headed by President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan. Al-Mukhtar said that during the four-day period, "if military action is taken against us we will return the fire."

There was no immediate reaction from Tehran to the Iraqi declaration, which came at a time when the war seemed to be moving into a stalemate caused by unexpectedly stiff Iranianian resistance to Iraqi forces.

The Iraqi move followed President Abolhassan BaniSadr's rejection of a U.N. Security Council call for an end to the war "so long as Iraq is in violation of our territorial sovereignty." In a message to U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, Bani-Sadr said appeals for a cease-fire "cannot be considered by our government" and there is "no use in any discussion, directly or indirectly."

In Tehran, Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai was reported studying a new U.S. letter on the 52 American hostages. But in Washington, State Department spokesman Jack Cannon said it was the same letter the United States publicly acknowledged a week ago and was designed to FLINT, Mich. [AP] — President Carter played public pitchman yesterday for the beleaguered U.S. auto industry, driving a shiny new car off the assembly line and urging consumers to test drive new American-made cars for themselves.

On a campaign trip to a state suffering high unemployment — Michigan had a 14.1 percent jobless rate in July — Carter also promised auto workers that his administration will stay "right in the trenches" in the fight to restare the industry to health.

"I will not rest until the working men and women in the auto industry are back on the job with full-time steady work," said the president, who needs strong blue-collar support on Election Day if he is ta claim Michigan's 21 electoral vates.

Trial postponement requested

DEDHAM, Mass. — A special prosecutor asked for a postponement of a double-murder trial yesterday, claiming a televison series featuring the defendant may prejudice the result.

Norfolk County Superiar Court Judge Francis W. Keating, whose ruling ordering the series off the air as set aside on Monday, took under advisement the request to postpone the trial from Oct. 14 to next April.

The defendant, Miles J. connor Jr., of Milton, has appeared in several episodes of "Witnesses for Hire" a series on paid government witnesses being broadcast this week by Boston-area station WCVB-TV.

Connor was shown Tuesday night calling Diane Wazen, a principal witness against him, a "liar."

Reagan campaigns in N.Y.C.

NEW YORK [AP] — Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan says he would choose Supreme Court justices on the basis of "the whole broad philosophy" they would bring to the bench — and would not rule out jurists who support abartion.

Reagan says he would want judges who do not "cross over the line, as many times the Supreme Court has in recent years, and usurp legislative functions."

Reagan also said in an interview with The Associated Press that, if elected, he would withdraw the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty from Senate consideration and seek new negotiations with the Soviet Union while strengthening U.S. military forces.

The GOP nominee was in New York yesterday. Saying he has a chance to carry New York state, Reagan told construction workers that he supports federal loan guarantees for the city and work on the controversial Westway project on Manhattan's lower West Side.

Staff strikes teachers' union

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Federation of Teachers, which represents a number of teachers unions around the state, was struck by its own staff Wednesday.

Alison Long, a spokewoman for the Service Employees International Union Local 495, said the 13 staff members of the MFT walked out in the morning in a dispute over job security.

She said the workers were protesting a decision by MFT officers to abolish certain jobs, requiring veteran employees to apply for new positions with the unian.

"A charge of unfair labor practice has been filed with the National Labor Relations Board in Bostan," she said.

The strikers include negotiators and organizers for the union as well as secretarial and office staff.

Former maintenance worker accused of Boston murders

BOSTON [AP] — A cab driver with a long criminal record was yesterday accused of the execution-style murders of four men during a $5.50, robbery of the bawling alley where he used to work.

Brian A. Dyer, 41, was arrested at his room at the Somerville YMCA and ordered held without bail after his arraignment in Brighton District Court.

The four victims were bound and shot to death a week ago at Sammy White's Brighton Bowl, where they all worked.

Jeremiah Sullivan, the prosecutor, said Dyer last worked at the bowling alley seven years ago as a maintenance man.

Dyer has a lengthy criminal record and has served time at Walpale State Prison, Massachusetts' highest security prison, Sullivan said. He was last paroled a year ago.

At a news conference, police Superintendent Anthany J. DiNatale said Dyer knew "more than one" of the victims. Among those slain was the day manager, Donald Doroni, 41, of Weymouth, who had worked there 15 years.

DiNatale said he did not know why the faur men were killed. "It was a robbery," he said. "The motive was money."

During the holdup Sept. 22, the four men were herded into a repair shop shortly before the lanes opened at 8 a.m. Three of the men were handcuffed, and a fourth was bound with a belt. Then they were killed.

As Dyer was being led into the courthouse for his arraignment, Steve Cobe, a brother of two of the victims, yelled obscenities at Dyer. He was restrained by another brohter, Walter.

His two brothers, David, 22, and Brian, 23, were janitors at the bowling alley. The other victim was George Hagelstein, a bookkeeper.

Dyer, dressed in a red jersey and blue pants, stood silent during the brief court session, and an innocent plea was entered. Judge Charles Artesani scheduled another hearing for Oct. 10.

King ignores anti-nuke protest

BOSTON [AP] — Eleven anti-nuclear pratesters were dragged away from the Statehouse and arrested yesterday after they and about 15 other people staged a noisy, hourlong sit-in outside the office of Gov. Edward J. King.

The youthful demonstraiors, members of the Boston Clamshell Alliance, said they wanted to protest a praposal before the Massachusetts Public Utilities Commissian that would allow state power companies to expand their investment in the Seabraak, N.H., nuclear power plant.

The protestars demanded a meeting with King to discuss the nuclear issue, but King refused to budge fram his office.

After allowing the sit-in to proceed far an haur, Capitol Police gave the demonstrators 15 minutes to leave or face arrest. The protesters left the hallway outside King's affice, went around the corner and tried to get in through a side affice.

Several protesters succeeded, but police quicky grabbed them and whisked them downstairs to waiting police cars. Officers used head lacks on several demonstrators who offered resistance.

Capitol Police Capt. Frank Tucker said those arrested would be charged with various offenses, including trespassing and disturbing the peace.

During the protest, the group chanted slogans, including "no nukes, na lobsters" and "melt down King." They alsa put three live lobsters on the floor to emphasize the effect of nuclear plants on surrounding waters and as a reminder of the gavernor's reported appetite for lobster.

The Public Utilities panel has been studying the Seabrook investment proposal for several months. Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti has questianed the plan, saying the financial viability of Seabrook, which has not yet opened, should be closely examined.

"We know that King will try to exercise influence over the DPU decision," said coalition spokeswaman Jamie Factor.

"We don't expect that he will pay heed to our concerns, but we want him to stay aut of it," she said.

Congress passes emergency bill

WASHINGTON [AP] — Congress, worried about political fallaut over its letting the government run out of money five weeks before Election Day, quickly resolved a dispute over abartion funds yesterday and passed an emergency spending bill.

By voice vote and without debate, the House accepted compromise Senate language on new restrictions for federally funded abartions and sent the bill to President Carter for his signature.

The prompt House action averted a financial crisis for the government, much of which was left without autharity to spend money when the new fiscal year began yesterday with the stopgap-spending bill tied up on the abortion issue.

Despite that impasse, the federal government appeared to operate normally yesterday although same agencies said they were preparing to shut down in compliance with a recent ruling by Attorney General benjamin Civiletti.

In an opinion issued when funds ran d last April that federal officials could not legally incur expenses unless spending was authorized by Congress.

Anti-draft registration rally: Thousands expected to celebrate 30% non-compliance

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

Anti-war activist Daniel Ellsberg, best known for his part in leaking the so-called Pentagon Papers to the press in 1971, will be the keynot speaker at an anti-draft registration rally to be held on the Boston Comman this Saturday.

Dr. Michio Kaku, professor of Nuclear Physics at City College of New York and Boston University professor Howard Zinn will be among the other speakers attending the rally.

The rally is being sponsored by the Boston Alliance Against Registration and the Draft (BAARD) and the Boston Clamshell Alliance.

According to BAARD, "thousands of people from throughout New England are expected to attend the demonstration.

BAARD is the same group which organized the anti-draft protests at Post Offices throughaut the Boston area last summer.

"Thousands of people from Eastern Massachusetts participated in these actions by leafletting, acts of civil disobedience, and post office clasings through direct action tactics," reported BAARD.

The group contends that the rally is a celebration of aver 30 percent non-compliance with the new draft registration law in the Boston area.

The event will begin with a noontime march from the Copley Square Plaza to the Boston common where the rally is scheduled to start at 1 p.m.

"The October 4th demanstration will send a message to the Federal gavernment, that peace laving people will not support the foreign naliry mistakes and aggressive militarism of any government," said a BAARD statement.

Members of Students Against the Draft (SAD) from the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus are also expected to attend the rally.

"We are hoping to attract about 40 ar 50 people so we will be able to charter a bus to take us to the rally," said SAD member Chip Nealy. "So far we only have abaut 20 people going with us."

Grounds improvement project beaulifies campus landscape

By KEN ROSS
Collegian Staff

A campus wide grounds improvement project which was started over the summer is bringing new paths and landscape changes to the University of Massachusetts.

Benjamin Fieman, director of the four year old Campus Landscape Improvement Project (CLIP), said the goal of the program is to make the campus grounds physically attractive.

"How can we expect students to come to this school for Landscape Design when the grounds look terrible," said Fieman.

The project is also set up to be cost efficient. Fieman said only paths that will be plowed will be asphalt, all others will be stone dust, a very smooth surfaced gravel. Grass is being planted instead of using sod, which is a great deal more expensive.

Much of the planning for CLIP is done by interns from the Landscape Design and Park Administration Department, with the actual construction done by Physical Plant employees.

Fieman said the work is going slow because landscape is a low priority for Physical Plant.

"It is people from the grounds crew who bring coal to the power plant, and that is more important," Fieman said.

Fieman said that Physical Plant has been very efficient with the work they have done so far, but other priorities have gotten in the way. He said that he would like to see interns become involved in the construction also, but the administration feels it would pose a threat to the Physical Plant workers. Fieman said the threat wouldn't be present because Physical Plant is bogged down with so much work that a student project would only lesson their overload.

Fieman said the planned paths in front of the Curry Hicks Cage and around the campus pond will be put where people walk.

"Where you see the dirt paths is where people walk, not on the walks already here. People are led to believe that these paths are from abuse. But it is not from abuse, it is thousands of students using these paths," Fieman said.

Fieman believes that an efficient landscape design will eliminate dirt paths and bring out the beauty of the campus.

As it stands now, the work by the Cage and pond should be completed by November, and more planning is under way for other parts of campus.

Grove Hill Mansion in Leeds slated for Condominium Conversion

FOR SALE

For sale in the near future: Six "condos" in a quiet location. Spacious rooms with antique wood work. Large yard with pool. Price range from $40,000 to $80,000. In Leeds on the Williamsburg bus route.

How would you like to live in an East Lake style mansion built in 1880 by Lucious Dimock of the Nonotuck Silk company? Of course if you want the condos you will have a slight wait.

The Grove Hill Mansion, as it it now called, has passes ownership many times during it's 100 year existance. The present owners are Lawrence C. O'Conner and Attorney Alan Verson of Northampton, wha purchased the property for $75,000, August 16, 1979.

"We intend to turn the house into six condiminiums," Verson said.

The house retains the original woodwork that was installed 100 years ago by the Lewis and Beecher Co. and designed by Springfield architect E.C. Gardner.

"The interior will not be altered. The walls will not be broken up by partition nor will ceilings be dropped. We plan to keep the woodwork in it's entirety except that it will be cleaned up," Verson said.

As of yet, a variance for condiminium or apartment conversion has not been granted by the town of Leeds, said Verson, though he is optimistic one will be granted as was far previous owner Samuel Goldman.

"Sa much time has elapsed we'll have to reapply," he said.

Goldman had an agreement with the Institute of Open Education, a branch of the Antioch College of Ohio, to sell the house for academic use. However, 34 neighbors presented a petition protesting such a move because of the increase of traffic to the quiet neighborhood behind the Leeds School.

For three years Goldman attempted to find a buyer who would not alter the architecture of the building.

O'Conner and Verson bought the house in 1979.

The most accurate description of the mansian was published in the Sept 21, 1880 edition of the Daily Hampshire Gazette. For the most part, this description still holds true.

"The house is 68 feet in length by 56 feet in width, the main part being 56 feet by 38 feet.

The brick walls begin at the bottom of the cellar and rest upon a hard pan foundation. The brick partition walls extend to the third floor, so that there is no wood partition in the house until the attic story is reached. Consequently, the rooms of the first and second floor are of the same dimensions," said the Gazette article.

Interesting aspects of the house include the basement which contains storage rooms for vegtables during the winter, and a wine cellar. As well, there is an observatory tawer atop the roof and it is reported that on a clear day one can see the city of Hartford, Conn.

Presently, Verson and O'Conner are renting the house to several UMass students.

Douglas Kelly, a UMass Junior, needed a place to live this summer and answered an ad representing a core of people wishing to reside in the Dimock home.

"I needed a place to stay on the bus raute," Kelly said. "When I first saw the house I fell in love with it."

Kelly feels that the conversion from a single family home to condo conversion will destroy the architecture, though Verson disagrees.

"Our hape is to preserve and restore the building. As a single family dwelling it's impractical because of upkeep and heating costs," Verson said.

After 16 yrs., professor still enjoys dorm life

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

Over the past three decades the University of Massachusetts has changed dramatically, yet to professor Luther Allen, who has been a part of it all, it has remained home.

Luther, as he is most commonly known, has been teaching political science at the university for 28 years, and during 16 out of those 28 he has been living in the middle of hundreds of college students in Webster Dormitory, located on Orchard Hill.

Luther has had a unique look at college life, and in particular the life surrounding the residential program designed specifically for

Orchard Hill. He has been at Webster since it opened, and in an interview he talked about the development of Orchard Hill and his outlook on its future.

When Luther first came to the university in 1952 it was a small New England college with approximately 4,000 students, but by the early 1960's it had become big and impersonal with an enrollment topping 10,000.

"You were treated as if you were in a city," Luther said, "and many people were beginning to worry about that type of atmosphere."

At that time a group of professors went to Aspen, Colo., for a convention sponsored by the Danforth Foundation dealing with setting up residential colleges in large universities.

"They had hopes of conducting actual courses in dormitories that would be taught by professors who lived with the students. In this way, academic and residential life would be brought together," Luther said.

They returned with a small four year grant from the foundation which was just enough to encourage the university to convert Orchard Hill, under construction at the time, into an experimental residential college, opening in the fall of 1964.

Adaptations were made in each of the four buildings in Orchard Hill—Dickinson, Field, Grayson, and Webster Dormitories—to accomodate a faculty resident.

A lounge and adjacent room in each dorm were converted into spaceous quarters consisting of a living area with balcony, bedroom, bath, and small kitchenette.

Faculty moves in

According to Luther, there was great response from faculty members. Each dorm had one professor residing in the building, as well as another member to aid students on each floor. These people would get together each week and talk, mostly about topics relating to the professor's major field of study.

One of the ideas they developed during this period was an interdisciplinary course on Soviet Russia. This was Orchard Hill's first course offering. Experts, historians, and sociologists would often lecture.

Though Luther felt this was an interesting and stimulating class, it met a lot of opposition from professors on campus.

"People were not only worried about competition with their own courses, but also about the standard of a program such as this," Luther said.

Since that time, many Orchard Hill courses have been innovated and accepted by the various departments.

"Orchard Hill has been a force for change on campus and has had a lot more continuity than any other program at the university," he added.

Orchard Hill stopped having teachers on each floor after a few years because the system wasn't working out too well.

"Complaints came from both students and faculty," Luther said, "The program fell flat much too often because the kids weren't interested in the academic field that their assigned professor specialized in. Therefore, most of the faculty began to lose interest, and the students turned against the professors. They didn't want professors assigned to them, they wanted to pick their own."

"It was at this point that the university entered into an activist period which continued until 1973-75," Luther said. "The atmosphere around campus began to change. Students played a dominant role in deciding activities, as well as possessing a lot of influence in new course selections and government."

The programs Orchard Hill has now are all products of the student activism during the late 60's and early 70's. Several courses came about in political science, economics, social issues, and students taught colloquia. Broadening their programs in a never ending process for administrators.

A current Orchard Hill project is geared towards new students with the hope of reducing the college's drop out rate.

"One reason why so many kids leave UMass is that there isn't any way to combine activities students engage in with their courses," said Luther. "If fellow classmates live on the same corridor, it will reinforce studies and encourage both friendly and academic relationships."

Administrators have developed a program in which students who live on the same floor

> 'The atmosphere in dormitories is a big problem...but by bringing together academics and residential life, a definite contribution...will be made.'

take a rhetoric and D-core class together in the dormitories at Orchard Hill. They are two separate courses, but there is a collaboration between the instructors so that they deal a lot with the same topics.

The plan went into effect last year with a small group of students, but they hope to recruit about 150 this year.

"We will be compiling statistics on the students who stay at UMass and those who don't. If this program helps, the university will probably want to pursue it more," Luther said.

Although Luther is very enthusiastic about Orchard Hill, he can't help feeling that it is a "token residential college."

"There are so few faculty residents on campus that we are not really an established group outside of Orchard Hill. Even here there is only one staff member for every 320 students," he said. "Everyone on my floor knows who I am, but as you go up the floors, the recognition decreases."

"If there were just one or two more professors in each dorm, it would make a difference," Luther added. "But, it's hard to find professors who want to do this. The place where they are needed the most is in Southwest, but teachers won't live there because of the bad reputation."

Uses earplugs to cope with noise

Apparently the turnover rate for faculty residents is quite high because, according to Luther, not many can put up with the noise. He himself has had to deal with this by becoming a night person.

"I don't teach any courses in the morning, and I own an excellent pair of earplugs," he said.

Luther gave several reasons as to why he has stayed in Webster for the past 16 years while most other professors have left after a few semesters. First of all, he is a bachelor, and he enjoys having a big family of young students around. Living in a dorm makes him feel younger, and because he likes to travel for his research, he can do it much easier without feeling tied down.

"I also get many more friendly greetings from students then most teachers here, which makes the university seem less impersonal," said Luther. "It's a lot of fun making a life out of this sort of thing."

According to Luther, each of the faculty residents does whatever he or she is best at doing.

Luther is involved in the selection committee for community resource assistants, the house council, and area government. He also holds a "cider and cheese" get together every Wednesday night for students.

"Kids come in to visit, and we discuss a variety of things. Because I am a political science professor, we do a lot of talking about politics and political issues," he said. "It's kind of a spontaneous sharing of academic interests with the surrounding students. It's not easy to do, and it's not automatic, but it grows in time, and is definitely worth it.

Dorm atmosphere in trouble

"The atmosphere in dormitories is a big problem on this campus, but by bringing together academics and residential life, a definite' contribution to the tone of the dorms will be made," Luther said.

"We have a big challenge and responsibility of incorporating courses into the dormitories simply because we are a residential campus. The state has committed itself to a residential atmosphere at UMass, so I think it has a special responsibility to make the dorms that it has supported financially part of the education of the students that come to the university. Unfortunately, we don't measure up to this," he added.

"Nevertheless, we are going to keep up the fight," assured Luther. "It will be difficult because of budget cuts and inflation, but Orchard Hill has existed for 16 years as a residential college. It's not a 'fly by night thing'. It's run very efficiently, and it's programs have shown great adaptability in changing current needs."

The Univeristy of Massachusetts has been called "the city within the village" by many people and has the reputation of being a zoo. Orchard Hill is just one of the ways that the administration is trying to cope with these problems brought about because of its size, and its record is a strong one. It has a concrete list of accomplishments which should pave the way for any new future endeavors.

Lawrence Pinkham, Journalism professor back from year in China

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Staff

Although the Chinese press is expanding and becoming more critical, the American press is becoming less aggressive and more complacent, according to journalism professor Lawrence Pinkham.

"Every society needs critics and it's the press' job to be a critic," he said. "China has found that out.

But Pinkham does not endorse unsubstantiated criticism.

"News is based on facts and news should be the truth," he said.

In the United States, even newspapers have become advertising channels," Pinkham said. "There are over 1,700 newspapers in this country and only a handful take their job seriously," he said.

Pinkham, chairman of the University jounalistic studies program, returned in August from a year's stay in Beijing, in the People's Republic of China. In Beijing (previously name Peking) he taught graduate students journalism at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and served as an advisor at Xinhus, China's official news agency where his students will eventually work.

According to Pinkham, China is still recovering from the strict government censorship that characterized the country's cultural Revolution. During that revolution, which lasted from 1966 to 1976, the Chinese press was reduced to a "propaganda machine to transmit only official pronouncements and views," Pinkham said.

But with the arrest of the notorious "Gang of Four" times have changed, Pinkham said.

Experienced no censorship

While in China, "no one told me what to do, or what not to teach or what to say," he said.

The Chinese press is turning to the west for lessons on how to gather and write news, substituting its previously chronological methods with the inverted pyramid style of western journalism, Pinkham said.

"The Chinese press is part of a revolution that started in the twenties and it's not over," Pinkham said. "The press (in China) has three purposes: to make government goals known to the public, to transmit factually successes and failures, and to serve as a critic.

"Today is a time of change in China," he said. "The country has, among other things, new economic directions and a new constitution.

China will probably become the first one-party state in the world to have the functioning equivalent of western news agencies such as AP and UPI," he said.

Views America differently

Pinkham said a year's absence from the United States has given him a clearer vision of this country's problems. He said the United States is in a state of moral and economic decline.

"The U.S. is very close to being intellectually dead," he said. "Its economy doesn't work because it is based on waste and its culture is disintegrating," Pinkham said.

He said network television programs and commericals are "terrible indicators of the level of our culture."

Pinkham plans to put his China experiences to use while designing new courses for the Journalistic Studies program. Courses focusing on reporting in China and the Third World countries are among his ideas.

Mutilation termed "female circumcision" in speaker's description of cultural practice

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

International journalist and publisher Fran Hosken said, "when I was in Nairobi, I found out about genital mutilation by accident. It is termed 'female circumcision' there and is a closely guarded secret between villages and ethnic groups. And because it is a cultural practice, some people consider it untouchable."

That was in 1973," Hosken continued, "and eight years later it is estimated by the World Health Organization (WHO) there are 74 million women who suffer this cultural practice" that "makes them into chatel and therefore considered disposable by the society they live in."

Hosken, who has traveled widely all over the world to study modernization, development, and the status of women, spoke to a capacity crowd of over 200 people yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center on this mutilation that was first discussed by WHO in Khartoum, Sudan this past year due to her initiative.

Since Hosken became aware of genital mutilation while on a survey trip through Africa, she has carried on an extensive investigation throughout Africa and other parts of the world to document the prevalance and spread (what she terms the "epedimiology") of genital mutilations.

Her findings, documented in many research articles, were compiled in The Hosken Report: Genital and Sexual Mutilation of Females. As a result of her long-term research, Hosken delivered the opening paper to the WHO.

Hosken classifies genital mutilation into two categories; excision and infibulation. In excision, a clitoridectomy is performed and the external genitalia is also removed, excluding parts of the labia majora. Infibulation is described in the Hosken Report:

"The labia minora and part of the labia major are removed, and the two sides of the vulva are partially sliced off or scraped raw and then sewn together, mostly with catgut. The entrance to the vagina is thus obliterated, except for a tiny opening in the back to allow urine, and later menstrual blood to drain. The legs of the girl are then tied together, and she is immobilized for several weeks until the wound of the vulva has closed, except for a small opening that is created by inserting a splinter of wood or bamboo."

According to Hosken, the age at which the mutilation is done varies greatly and can be anywhere from a new-born baby to a woman just before marriage.

In a November, 1977, article published by Drum, the Nigerian national magazine, on the subject of circumcision said: "No one to whom I spoke could tell me why, though the easiest and commonest answer is that it is 'our custom and tradition,' the shield behind which we hide the more hideous and inexplicable of our practices."

Hosken said the operation is done in the most primitive settings in most cases, performed on the ground with a blunt instrument used for the cutting.

"It causes not only great pain since the clitoris has the largest number of nerve endings in the female body but the chances for infection are also very high," Hosken said.

"The operation is done with no anesthetics," said Hosken, "and the psychological trauma of the mutilation can have a great impact on the woman later in life since the operation is usually approved, performed, and observed by her family."

The complications resulting in childbirth due to infibulation often result in death, according to Hosken, because the vagina needs to be cut again and the delayed birthing process can result in mental retardation for the child or such severe bleeding for the mother that they both may die.

As editor of Women's International Network News, Hosken hopes to "eradicate world-wide practices damaging the health of women and girls and by assisting the WHO on their recommendations."

Those recommendations are for sex and health education of the people in the countries who practice genital mutilation and the training of a health force to prevent the mutilations.

"These people do not know anything else. They believe myths about sexual reproduction," Hosken said. "It is a crime and we must work to educate people so that women are not treated solely as property of men, and are not accepted if they are not mutilated and live their lives passively and pliably in fear."

Buses specially equipped for handicapped expected

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts and the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority will get 15 new busses early in November, specially equipped for handicapped persons, UMass Transit Operations Manager Allan E. Byam said yesterday.

The busses, which cost $135,644 a piece, have hydrolic lifts at the rear doors and a "kneeling device," which allows the front steps to be lowered four to six inches to aid riders who have trouble stepping up from the street.

The total cost of the 15 busses will be $2,034,466, Cynthia D. Landers of the PVTA said. 80 percent of the cost or $1,627,732 will come from the Department of Transportation and the remaining 20 percent or $406,932, will be evenly divided by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the PVTA, Landers said.

The busses will be the same color as the ones in use now, but they will be about five feet longer, Byom said.

"We anticipate some problems in making corners and we're not totally convinced as to the reliability of those lifts, but we'll just wait and see," Byam said.

The busses are being built by General Motors at their Pontiac, Michigan plant and are the most advanced of their kind in the coutry, Byom said.

When the busses go into service they will run on the following routes: the North Amherst and Belchertown Road routes; the Sunderland and South Amherst routes; the Belchertown Center and South Deerfield routes and the Orchard Volley and Echo Hill routes.

The busses will be marked with the international handicopped symbol and the bus numbers will be followed by an 'L'.

The UMass bus schedules are already showing which busses will be equipped for handicapped persons by putting a star next to the ones which are not.

The busses were originally due to arrive in October, but when Byam visited the plant last week they were behind in orders for these and other busses, he said.

Bulk storage facility supplies liquid nitrogen for campus needs

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

What weighs 19 tons when it's filled and is capable of cooling something down to temperature of 320 degrees below zero?

The answer to this question is the liquid nitrogen tank located outside of Hosbrouk Lab. Liquid nitrogen is used by the Physics department to cool the element Helium down to a workable temperature, said Professor Robert Hallock of the lab for low temperatur Physics. "The tank is a fancy thermos bottle to insolate the contents inside from the environment. This tank keeps the Nitrogen cold," Hallock said.

The tank was acquired because of the increasing cost of buying liquid nitrogen in small quontites, Hollock said.

"It saves anybody who uses it because it is a bulk storage facility. People used to pay 40 to 45 cents for a liquid liter of Nitrogen. By going to bulk storage, users pay 16 cents per liquid liter. The price reduction is dromatic," Hallock said.

Many departments use liquid nitrogen including the infirmary, microbiology and electricol engineering. Low temperature physics uses half of it under normal conditions and that's why it's located in Hasbrouk," Hallock said.

The tank is not owned by the university, but is leased from The New England Oxygen Corparation from Warcester.

"Since it has potential problems with maintenance, it is much more sensible to lease it. If anything goes wrong with it the company is responsible and would replace it if necessary," Hallock said.

Hallock said the facility is completely safe, and was approved by the university department of Environmental Health and Safety, the University fire marshall and the Office of Planning before installation.

"There is no human intervention needed if problems develop. It is designed so there is no reliance on mechanical devices of any kind. The chances of anything going wrong are zero. Tanks are located at most major research facilities all over the country," Hallock said.

Pilferer plucks professor's prize painting

A painting valued at $1,000 was apparently stolen from the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts between Sept. 25 and 29.

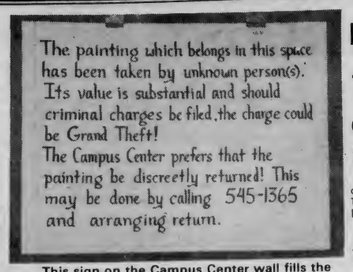
The painting was 86 inches in diameter and had been bought from a UMass art professor by the University. Prof. James P. Hendricks said that he was very upset about the disappearance of the work, titled "Big Moon".

"The painting was originally part of a 12 piece series based on the lunar surface which I exhibited in the Campus Center a couple of years ago," Hendricks said. "I guess it is a sign of the times when somebody feels the piece is valuable enough to take."

Hendricks said the painting was one of the more popular pieces he had done. The series from which the painting came from was done between 10 and 12 years ago and had been exhibited at the Smithsonian and the National Gallery of Art, he said.

Hendricks said he was very discouraged because he had hoped his exhibition would stimulate more art around campus.

He said that this was the second painting he has had stolen from the Campus Center.



The painting which belongs in this space has been taken by unknown person(s). Its value is substantial and should criminal charges be filed, the charge could be Grand Theft!
The Campus Center prefers that the painting be discreetly returned! This may be done by calling 545-1365 and arranging return.

This sign on the Campus Center wall fills the empty space where until recently, the painting "Big Moon" hung.

When the Apollo 15 mission was in progress Hendricks had one of his paintings depicting the lunar surface, on the cover of Time magazine. He said they still had the original painting in the Time offices in New York.

"I hope whoever took it just returns it, no questions asked, most people liked it," he said.

Bald Eagle makes freedom flight over Quabbin

By JULIE GEANKAKIS
Collegian Corresiondent

A sick eagle, which wos found in a lake near Pittsfield about a month ago was released at the Quabin Reservoir Tuesday by wildlife experts after being nursed back to health in Boston.

"Baldy," a three-year old bald eagle, will be monitored in his natural habitat by Wendell Dodge and UMass graduate student Paul Lyons of the Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit of the University of Massachusetts, by means of Radio telemetry. The Research Unit is a federal agency on campus whose job is protecting species, such as the bald eagle, who are threatened by extinction.

The bird was discovered by a fisherman in a lake near Pittsfield to fly, and was taken to the Berkshire Veterinary Hospital and then transferred to the Franklin Park Zoo in Boston where it was treated for a viral disease and concussion.

A radio transmitter was attached to the eagles tail by conservation experts to monitor its location and rate of activity during its re-adjustment to the wild.

"The main reason the bird is monitored is because its been in captivity for a long time, and if it isn't feeding on its own, we'll put out supplemental food for it," Dodge said.

Lyons, a member of the Research Unit with wide experience in radio tracking is monitoring Baldy on a daily basis.

A striking unity

Working for the clampdown

Laura Koester
and Alan Compagnon

The expressions on the faces of the striking workers at the Amherst Nursing Home told the story. With the announcement that an agreement had been reached between management and Health Care Employees Union District 1199, the five day old strike was over. The workers were joyous, and well they should be, for they had perservered, stuck together, formed lasting ties with others in the community, and had emerged victorious.

On the surface, the strike was similar to many strikes and embodied many of the classical themes of labor-management struggles. At issue were wages, benefits, and union security. Five out of six employees in the bargaining unit were making $3.10 per hour. The average take-home pay was $99 per week. The turnover rate of non-professional staff since May 8, 1980 (the day the last contract expired) was an appalling 60 percent. For three months, management refused to make a wage offer. When they did, it was a paltry 25 cents per hour, enough to bring wages up to the minimum standards effective January 1, 1981.

The issue of health care and women workers was very much a part of the strike. Health care work is still considered menial and undignified labor. Women make up the bulk of health care employees, and it is no coincidence that pay-scales are among the most depressed of any industry. Although women make up 45 percent of the total workforce in this country, they only account for less than 25 percent of union membership. Thus, many women are in industries that are largely unorganized, yet another factor in their low wage levels. This strike was an example of women who are not complacent with this situation. These womens' unity, combined with strong community and student support, won a victory for all of us in the "happy" valley.

The sad part about this strike was that it could have been easily avoided. During negotiations on the night before the strike began, the union showed their willingness to compromise on wages and also on the union issue. The union offered management a lower wage demand and also offered to become an agency shop rather than a closed-union shop. The eventual settlement five days later was indeed this very compromise. The settlement called for an increase in wages totaling $1.15 per hour over two years—retroactive to July 1—and an agency shop. It was the intransigence of management in their refusal to negotiate in good faith that ultimately forced the strike. In essence, then, management could have settled without a strike, but instead chose to hold the patients hostage, putting their desire for profit and control of the workers before the health, safety, and well-being of the residents in the home. What much of it came down to was the basic issue of the worker's right to decide if and what kind of union there should be—management had no right to make this decision.

There are several important lessons to be learned from this strike. A fundamental lesson is that the workers got what they needed only because they fought for it. The realization that one must fight just to earn a decent living wage was not lost unto the workers. It was not only worker solidarity that insured victory, but solidarity with students, community groups, and other unions that proved the decisive edge. The unity that was forged was the strength of the strike.

Many of us were greatly changed because of the strike. In the end, who was it that helped the striking workers solve their problems? It certainly wasn't the police, whose violence and brutality forever dispelled any notion that they are merely a neutral party during any given struggle—just there to "keep the peace." Through their actions, the police showed what side they were on.

No, in the end it was the strikers, along with their many supporters who, through united action, forged the strength and power needed to help themselves. It is this strength, this unity, that will serve as an example for all of us—that when we unite to fight back, we can win!

Educating the not so rich

Bill Olson

We are all familiar with the story of the shrinking candy bar—the size of the bar goes down and the cost goes up. The same is happening to our education. Everyday we read in the Collegian about more bad news for students, campus employees, and professors. The latest news (Collegian 9/26—"Hikes Expected in Student Fees" and Letters—"Fees Going Up") concerns increased costs for students for food, rooms, and new fees.

We should recall how we pay for meal plans, rooms, and certain services. The monies for these services come out of "revenue-based trust funds," which is simply a fee-for-service structure. We pay directly into such funds for meal plans, rooms, and other student services. This fee-for-service structure does not allow federal and state tax dollars to be used to help control these costs, or perhaps even lower them.

There are three main sources of the proposed cost increases. The first is simply inflation, from a crisis-ridden economy. As the costs of materials, food, maintenance, repairs, and salaries go up, they are simply passed on to us. Given the "inevitability" of inflation in the future, we can expect this source to exert continual increases throughout the 1980's, unless the fee-for-service structure is amended.

The second source is a mandate from the state legislature that requires state agencies to pay employee benefits out of revenue-based trust funds. A small number of campus employee positions are created and paid for out of these funds. Up until recently, state funds have contributed to the employees' much needed benefit package. Now the legislature is shifting the burden directly to those who "enjoy" and pay for room and board—the students.

The third source of proposed increases comes from shifting state supported services to "new" student supported service: the revenue-based fee-for-service structure. This procedure is used in California in many social services to temporarily postpone the negative effects of Proposition 13.

One point is perfectly clear. As long as the fee-for-service structure is unchanged, our costs will continue to rise out of sight. Current proposals call for increases in meal plans anywhere from 12 percent to 20 percent (over $100 per year); and increases in room fees from 18 percent to 25 percent (up to $214 per year).

The recent history of our costs as students and the support from the state legislature tell two different stories. From 1970 to 1980, the total cost of education (not including books and miscellaneous expenses—all of which have gone up) has risen from $1326 to $2657—a whopping 100 percent for an in-state undergraduate. For an out-of-state undergraduate, the cost has risen for $1726 to $4181—an incredible 140 percent. Graduate students have suffered the same fate, with little or no increases in teaching assistantship pay scales. In the same period, the legislature cut our budget many years. The 1975 budget was a massive cut, both the number of dollars and real-purchasing power. Every budget for the past five years has not kept pace with the rate of inflation—a "real" budget cut. It is safe to conclude that we are paying more in tuition, room, board, fees, and taxes, and getting less for our money.

These trends, and others, represent a renegging on the basic purpose and mission of public higher education: to offer quality, well-rounded, low cost education to working people and their families. At this point, we have to say no to fee increases, financial aid cutbacks, and the soon to be called for tuition increases. It has been clear over the recent years that the Board of Trustees, the administration, and a majority of legislatures have not been active advocates of the purpose and mission of public higher education. The Board and many administrators are fiscal "realists." Therefore, they have submitted budgets that do not even keep pace with inflation, raised tuition, increased fees for rooms, board, and other services. When pushed on certain issues, many Board members and administrators have claimed that their jobs do not allow them to take "political" positions, such as advocating for alternative funds for public higher education from untapped sources (like a progressive income tax, increased federal aid, or changing the tax-free status of private schools). However, we must continue to pressure them.

This brings me to two basic points. One is that the struggle to insure a low-cost, quality education must be waged by those directly affected: all students, campus employees, professors, and working people in the community. Direct participation in our educational institutions by these groups is one aspect of how a democratic society should function. This task is made more difficult in light of the new, all-powerful Board of Regents. The composition and powers of this Board are frightening. The majority outlook will be defined by insurance executives, bankers, high-technology executives, and other "business leaders." There are no labor representatives, student representatives, community organization representatives, or public school teacher representatives.

The second point is that we have to begin to struggle for alternative sources of funds at the federal and state levels of government. The fee-for-service structure must be changed, otherwise there is no end in sight to increases. Further, the people of this country must make public higher education a right, and this should be reflected in the federal budget. The billions of dollars of federal and state aid to schools like Harvard, MIT, Columbia and other inaccessible, elitist schools could be channelled to public schools. The tax-free status of private schools, if changed, is a potential source of funds.

I think that most of us would agree that these institutions are not committed to educating middle class and working class people, which their cost prohibits, among other things. Their "privileged" status should not be maintained by tax-loopholes and public tax dollars. Shifting the overall tax burden to those who can afford more of the responsibility—wealthy individuals and profitable businesses—would create a vast source of revenue. The bottom line is that we must organize around a common program, or else our democratic right to an affordable education will cost us too much.

Klan terrorism part of wide threat

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the Board of Editors of the Collegian for their recent editorial condemning Ku Klux Klan terrorism.

Last week, Charlene Mitchell, co-chairperson of the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression, was physically assaulted, along with several of her supporters, by KKK thugs at a meeting of the San Diego Democratic Party County Committee. She had just completed testimony protesting the Democratic candidacy of Thomas Metzger, a local Klan leader running for Congress in the 43rd District. (His primary victory entitles him to a seat on the Committee.) She and her lawyer were subsequently arrested by the San Diego police, who are suspected of collusion with the KKK. The Committee sat in silence during the assault.

Incidents of terrorist activity by the Klan are becoming too numerous for decent-minded Americans to ignore. And in our own community, reports of vicious attacks on non-white people are becoming more common.

Racism, combined with pro-war propaganda, constitute a profound threat to our people. It is no coincidence that racism and the myth of the "Soviet threat" were the twin pillars supporting Hitler's fascist rampage. It can happen here.

LaVoice echoed Moran's opinions of Geary, charging her with "vacillating on crucial issues. Linda is not, in my opinion, a good decision maker. It's not serving the students to have her on the board."

Senator Michael Ferrigno said "whether Rich (Moran) believes it or not, the senate floor perceives this as an attempt to gain political power."

Earlier in the evening state rep. James Collins spoke to the Senate about reorganization of public higher education. He said he had fought against the bill which centralized control of the entire state higher education system by forming one Board of Regents.

He said he was against the move because it could seriously damage public education in the state to the benefit of private institutions. He said, historically, the same centralization attempts in other states have proven to be "flops."

He encouraged a "grassroots movement" among students in order to insure that local needs are met by the board. He also said that with enough student pressure it should be possible to get a representative on the board.

WHAT A DAY!

After 15 interviews with various companies, I finally found MITRE. And after 15 interviews I definitely knew what I was looking for when I saw it.

I had to have breathing room. A place that would turn me loose and let me work on different kinds of projects. On the other hand, I had to know I'd be able to turn to other people for advice and backup. And I definitely wanted a steady growth situation.

With the MITRE people, I knew right away I'd found it all.

At any given time, they have some 75 or so funded, significant programs involving several hundred separate projects and tasks. And because they're Technical Advisors to the Air Force's Electronic Systems Division in Command, Control and Communications (C^3), they design and develop some of the world's most advanced information systems.

Still, MITRE handles every assignment as if it were the only one. Because they have to come up with the right solution every time. That's their product.

The best of MITRE to me is that they'll let me move from project to project if I want, or get deeply involved in a longer-range one. There's always something waiting for me.

I'm glad it took 15 interviews to get to MITRE. Now when I say I chose them, I know exactly what I'm talking about.

REVIEW:

'English Beat' create catchy sound

The English Beat
15 Landsdcwne St. Boston
September 30

By STEVE WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

After the English Beat had finished their set and come out for two encores, they had virtually exhausted their repertoire. The last encore, "Ranking Full Stop", was clearly meant to end the evening, but the crowd refused to let them go. So finally, after the clapping, stomping, and cheering had gone on for many minutes, the band came back onstage and performed "Twist and Crawl" again—twice. That's what I call an encore.

The mood at 15 Landsdowne Street Tuesday night was clearly that of a dance concert. The club, formerly the "Boston-Boston" disco, has a huge dance floor, perfect for what The English Beat have to offer. The band did not disappoint. From the opening number, "Rough Rider", to the final note of "Twist and Crawl" the crowd, and the band itself, never stopped dancing. The English Beat play ska music, which combines reggae and rock into a catchy, pleasing, extremely danceable sound. Currently, a ska revival of sorts is going on in England. Led by The Specials, this musical wave is also being carried on by Madness, The Selecter, and now The Beat (called The English Beat in this country to avoid confusion with a Los Angeles band of the same name). Ska has yet to generate the fervor in the USA that it has in England, but if the response that The English Beat received is any indicator, it may not be far behind.

Onstage, The English Beat are unrestrained and energetic. The most stunning visual aspect of the band is all the contrasts it provides. Half the band is black, half white. Nineteen-year-old lead singer Ranking Roger dances alongside fifty-year-old tenor sax player Saxa. As Ranking Roger, tall and bouyant, sings and dances exuberantly, the bass player, a short Dustin Hoffman lookalike, walks around him in a tight nervous dance. One guitarist is friendly and outgoing, singing and exhorting the crowd to dance, while the other rarely even looks at the audience. These contrasts make The English Beat as interesting to watch as to dance to.

As the evening wore on and the sweat of the band mingled with the sweat of the crowd, it was clear that the group was having as much fun as the audience. And when, as the band left the stage for the fourth and final time, Ranking Roger called out, "We'll be back soon", it was great to see that he really looked like he wanted it as much as we did.

ERA; How do the students feel?

By CARLA LESH
Collegian Correspondent

The center of much controversy, the Equal Rights Amendment is a subject often discussed at the University of Massachusetts as well as in the rest of the country and opinions on the issue vary widely about what exactly the ERA means.

There is a great deal of concern and confusion about what laws will be changed by the ERA, if family life will be threatened, and a multitude of other concerns.

The ERA, if passed, will affect state, local, and federal laws that discriminate on account of sex such as employment, Social Security, divorce and inheritance laws, to name a few. Currently there are about 800 federal laws that discriminate on account of sex, according to Maureen Solomon, President of the National Organization of Women in the Greater Springfield area.

One of the major objections to the ERA is the fear that it will require the drafting of women. What many people do not realize is that Congress currently has the power to draft women. Drafting women was being considered toward the end of World War II and would have been initiated if the war had gone on much longer than it did, Solomon said.

The Equal Rights Amendment was originally drafted by Alice Paul and presented to Congress in 1923. From then until 1972, 49 years later, it was presented every year until it finally passed by both Houses. The ERA supporters were then given seven years to have 38 states ratify the ERA. In 1978 an extention was granted giving the supporters until 1962 to secure the necessary ratifications.

Thirty-five of the ratifications have been secured. Of those thirty-five, twelve of the state legislatures have tried to rescind their decisions. None of these recisions are legal yet.

The Equal Rights Amendment—perhaps no other Constitutional amendment has been so discussed, fought, feared, and misunderstood. Many people have opinions about it, but few know the wording or even the approximate length of the amendment.

The amendment in its entirety is: Equality of Rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex.

Below are the results of a random survey of UMass opinions about the Equal Rights Amendment:

John Bondaruk, visitor: "I see it as just a political ploy by candidates to gain votes."

David Chester, 22, Electrical Engineering: "It should be better written; as it is I think it could be twisted to a meaning that was not originally intended."

Cathi A. Burke, 20, Math: "It's abominable that it hasn't been passed."

Hillary Hughes, 21, Zoology: "I think the extremists are holding it back, and that the ERA just means equality."

Bob Wilber, 20, Resource Economics: "Women should have the same opportunity to avoid the draft as men."

assure Iran of U.S. neutrality in the Iran-Iraq crisis. The Americans were in their 333rd day of captivity Wednesday.

Iraq said Iranian warplanes launched seven "sovage" strikes in five Iraqi provinces and claimed that Iraqi jets hammered oil depots and concentrations of Iranian tanks in wide-ranging attacks.

After a day of tonk and infantry battles, Bani-Sadr announced recapture of the Iranian border city of Mehran and the Iranian news agency said the city welcomed Iranion troops that "lifted the siege by Iraqi forces."

Iran also said it pushed Iraqi invaders out of the oil port of Khorramshahr o day after Ironian leader Ayatolloh Ruhollah Khomeini rejected on early cease-fire and said Iran "will not compromise" until Iraqi forces are driven from Ironian soil.

An Iraqi military communique said Iraq's jets hit oil depots in Ahwaz, the capital of Iran's Khuzestan oil province, destroyed rail facilities, a bridge ond an ammunition dump in Dezful and hit Iranian tank concentrotions near Ahwaz and Abadan.

Iraq said Iranian warplones ottacked seven Iraqi cities, including Basra and Umm Qasr port in the south and Kirkuk and Mosul in the north. Baghdod reported 12 Iraqi civilians were killed and four inlured in the Iranian raids. Iraq said the "savage strikes" were retaliation for "defeats conceded ba the Ironion forces on the battletront."

vard and Yale have college collections which surpass Smith's, which is composed of approximately 13,000 objects.

For the first 25 years after the collection was begun in 1879, the college, aiming to teach students about western art, collected reproductions, plaster casts and original paintings. An anonymous donor had contributed $1,000 in 1877, which was soon followed by a trustee appropriation of $4,000 and the main obstacle art collectors usually face was overcome. Amongst the early acquisitions were original paintings by such well-known American artist as Thomas Eakins, Winslow Homer, Albert Bierstadt and George Inness.

By 1914, the college was committed to collecting European art, particularly of the 19th and 20th centuries. Among the early European paintings are works by Jacob Van Ruisdael, Jan Van Eyck and Rembrandt. But by far the most enjoyable works to be seen are the later pieces of 19th century Realism and Impressionism. Works of this time period are not often found in college collections because of their extreme popularity—and value. Gustave Courbet, Auguste Renoir, Edgar Degas, Claude Monet and Euouard Manet are some of the artists whose works may be seen.

More recent pieces of Post Impressionist and twentieth century paintings by Gaugin, Ernst Kirchner (whose Dodo and her Brother is pictured), Picasso, Victor Vaserely and Juan Gris are also to be seen at Smith.

If you'd like to see for yourself, just head on over to Smith College. The Museum is open from 11:00-4:30 Tuesday through Saturday, and Sundays from 2:00-4:30. It's right near the Five College bus stop and admission is free. What more could you ask for besides having the art on your own walls?

Cities haggle on spot to build Hall of Fame

HOLYOKE [AP] — Springfield may be where basketball was born, but a shopping mall in the nearby city of Holyoke wants the Basketball Hall of Fome.

Holyoke Mayor Ernest Proulx announced yesterdoy that the Pryamid Corp. of Dewitt, N.Y., which owns the Ingleside Mall in Holyoke is willing to donate 20 acres adjocent to the shopping center and Interstate 91 for construction of a new Basketball Hall of Fame.

The city of Springfield is also angling to build a new, perhaps basketball-shaped Hall of Fame downtown near the Connecticut River with a $7 million state grant it has obtoined for refurbishing "convention and exhibition halls."

"Why should we be spending taxpayers money to build a hall of fame when a private concern would do the same thing," Proulx said pushing Holyoke's case.

Reaction wos swift from Springfield where David Moriarity, city planning director, said the idea of making the Hall of Fome on annex to o shopping center was "preposterous" and "a mockery to Springfield's heritage."

Lee Williams, director of the basketball museum, said he had not yet received ony word from Proulx.

According to Williams, the Pyramid Corp. had tentotively proposed in July that it construct o new building at the mall with the Hall of Fome paying for it over a number of yeors. Under the Springfield proposal, 70 percent of the cost of a new building would be financed by state grants with the remainder paid for by the hall, he said.

The Hall of Fame, started in 1959, is currently located at Springfield College where physical education instructor and YMCA director James Naismith is said to have set up a couple of peach basket goals and tried out his new game in 1891.

Some Holyoke partisans have maintained Naismith actually got the idea for the game over Thansgiving dinner with Holyoke YMCA director William Morgan. Morgan is credited with inventing the game of volleyball at the Holyoke YMCA in 1895.

TASTE THE BEER THAT OUTSELLS MOLSON GOLDEN IN CANADA: LABATT'S.

Good news!
Labatt's, Canada's No. 1 selling beer, is now imported to the U.S.
So, now it's easier to compare the taste of our Labatt's with the brew of our friendly competitor.
See what you think.
We, like most other Canadians, prefer a bottle of Labatt's Beer over a Golden.
If we didn't, we'd likely be drinking Molson® instead—and we certainly wouldn't be running this ad.

THINK OF CANADA
THINK OF LABATT'S

PS The green Labatts bottle comes equipped with one of those twist-off tops—which can be rather handy, especially whilst one is otherwise engaged.

Spikers to meet "best in East" at Boyden

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

How does one compete in the "best women's volleyball tournament in the Northeast?"

For teams like Syracuse University, Springfield College and Eastern powerhouse University of Delaware, it would mean coming up to this tournament with the best attitude and skill of the season.

But for UMass, the hosts of this tournament at Boyden Gym this weekend, it means trying different players in different positions to find something more than an attitude, more than a skill. UMass is trying to find the answer to playing consistently in order to win.

In ottempting to improve a 5-8 mark, Coach Elaine Marosco has moved senior Brenda Simmons, usually in the bock court digging out spikes, to the middle blocking position at the net; junior Ellen Braun, o starter at the net, will now start at the outside position, neor the side lines. Katrin Hecht will come from the bench and start in the back court as the first player to take the opponents' offensive offerings (spikes, lobs, etc.) and try to set up the UMass game, Hecht will also be the server when the teom gets first serve.

"This new system will give ths team on added dimension," said Marosco, "Brenda will be deadly as o middle blocker. she's got the arm swing and the jump to stop the other team in thot position. Ellen on the outside will use more versatility. She can hit the ball on the line better than anyone on this teom."

"We're trying this new system at Boston College. I don't know what to expect, but I hope to get the record at .500. I'm very confident about the changes, and I know we'll do well."

The Minutewomen trovel to Boston tonight to take on BC and the Moss. Institute of Technology, beginning at 6:00 p.m.

Whatever the outcome, the tri-match tonight will just be a preparation for the UMass Tournament tomorrow night, beginning at 6:00 p.m.

At that time, the Minutewomen begin the tourney with a match against Northeastern University. UMass then ploys Cortland State University at 7:30 p.m., with a match against Queens College following at 9:00 p.m.

After this preliminary ploy, seeds will be given, with the top two seed from each pool advancing into an elimination round, which begins Saturday at 10:00 a.m. The bottom two seeds from each pool go into a consolation round.

Among the 12 teams in this tournament are Providence College, who defeated UMass twice so for this season, the University of New Hampshire, the University of Rhode Island, the University of Connecticut and the New York Institute of Technology. Each team will receive a "finishing rank" of 1-12.

While the varsity is trying to improve its record, the JVs will try to raise its record to 2-0 against the MIT JVs tonight. On Tuesday night, UMass defeated Mount Holyoke College 7-15, 16-14, 15-11, at Mount Holyoke.

Swimwomen get ready for approaching season

By LAURA FRANK

A new era begins for womans swimming at UMass. Val Turtle, former swimming, lacrosse, and physical education intructor at Mt. Holyoke College, and swim coach at Springfield College for the past four years, has arrived to take over the aquatics program at UMass. Former coach, John Nunnelly has left the position to continue his academic career on a full time basis.

Turtle attended Colby Jr. College in New Hampshire, then continued on the University of Vermont where she majored in Phys. Ed. Tennis, cross country skiing, lacrosse, and field hockey, are just a few of the team sports she has focused upon.

"I used to swim competitivly in high school, but girls and womens sports programs have progressed tremendously since, then," she said.

The transition period has been very smooth and Turtle expressed excitement and enthusiasm for working with a talented group of swimmers.

Although swim season does not officially begin until October 8th against the University of Vermont, the merwomen are undergoing a strenuous training program. One of the most important aspects of pre-season training is to work on mental conditioning as a part of the overoll progrom.

At this time, the women are working on o doily progrom which includes swimming, stretching, biling, jogging, and stroke clinics where emphasis is places upon the "whots" and "whys" of ths strokes. The women are working together in order to get acquainted with themselves and their new coach.

Turtle sits at her office desk and smiles optomistically as she says, "I don't want to make any predictions about the season at this time, but let's just say that I would like everyone to achieve their fullest potential, so that we can come away with o sense of accomplishment, no matter what the record says."

Cowens announces surprise retirement

By HOWARD ULMAN

BOSTON — Dave Cowens, the Boston Celtics' center for the past 10 seasons, announced his retirement Wednesday in a surprise telephone call to General Manager Red Auerbach, the National Basketball Association team said.

"We are all in shock over here," said assistant general manager Jeff Cohen. "Obviously we were expecting him to play this year. He was in all our ads."

Cohen said he did not think Cowens gave Auerbach a reason for his decision. Auerbach was not available for comment.

Cowens, 31, a rugged defensive standout, apparently called from Indiana where the Celtics were scheduled to play the Chicago Bulls in an exhibition game Wednsday night, Cohen said.

He added that Auerbach planned to meet with Cowens but that no time for the meeting was set.

"I asked Red what he thought and he said he thought it was a final decision," Cohen said. "Cowens always was a strong-willed guy."

The Boston Globe quoted Cowens as saying nagging foot problems have impaired his jumping ability.

"I have sprained my ankle at least 30 times over the duration of my career, broken both legs and fractured a foot," he was quoted as saying. "Two years ago a team of foot and bone specialists said they were amazed that I could play up to that point without sustaining serious injuries.

"I am basically playing on one leg and my left ankle is so weak that I can best describe it as saying I have a sponge for an ankle."

Netwomen tame Wildcats

The women's tennis team played to a solid win over the University of New Hampshire 6-3, in a match at NOPE yesterday afternoon. This upped their record to 7-2.

The netwomen were able to take five of the six singles matches over the Wildcats. The only loss came from number one Sally Fryberger who lost to Lori Holmes 6-1, 6-0. Fryberger was replacing Barbara Mills who sprained her ankle last Saturday at Boston College. Mills' injury was diagnosed as a severe sprain but she will begin practicing today in hopes of playing at Springfield on Saturday.

Number two singles Elizabeth Sullivan beat UNH's Celeste Belliveau 6-3, 6-3. Winning next was captoin Joanne Vennochi with scores of 6-2, 6-4. Number five Paula Natalia won her match easily 6-2, 6-2. Chris Carson, at number six, out played her opponent 6-2, 6-2. The last to finish was number four Helen Najarian who won a tough three setter 6-4, 3-6, 7-6.

"Helen played the best match of her career," said coach John Beal of her play.

The double teams managed only one victory out of the three matches ployed against UNH. This came from the number one doubles Kathy Burke and Carolyn Tarbell, who won easily 6-1, 6-3.

"UMass is very good, much better than last year's team," said UNH coach Joyce Mills. "They should do well the rest of the season."

Coach Beal commented on the team performance, "Even though we won, we made too many unforced errors. That really shows how strong we are."

The netwomen will be playing Springfield College in an away match this Saturday.

Doubles sweep gives UMass tennis victory

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Staff

The Men's tennis team upped its record to 2-1 yesterday, with a hard fought 6-3 win over the Huskies of Connecticut. The visitors saw their mark drop to 2-4.

Things started off well for the Minutemen, as #3 singles, Neil Mackertich, easily waltzed through his opponent for a 6-1, 6-1 drubbing.

"I felt really good today. In Rhode Island, I couldn't feel where the lines were and I did awful. But today, I just felt great."

Then came Nick Julian, registering a comparably easy win in the #5 singles spot 6-3, 6-3, to push UMass up 2-0. After that the rains fell and things got tense.

Tom Marman of the Huskies defeated Mark Huettelman in the #2 spot, 7-6, 6-3, and was followed by teammate Ken Paskawitz who downed the Minuteman's Greg Sanders 6-3, 3-6, 6-3. That put the score at 2-2 and all eyes went to the #1 and 4 singles still playing on the court.

Matt Madlish, in the #4 slot, brought the lead back to the UMass side with a three set victory over George Kramer, 6-1, 4-6, 6-3. But hard hitting Craig Waddington of Connecticut evened things up once again with his 6-4, 7-6 triumph over Sergio Strepman in the #1 singles space.

So it went into the doubles matches all tied up at three apiece and the sun fast heading into the neighboring hillside. Fortunately, UMass needed very little time to decide this match, as all three doubles teams (Madlish and Mackertich at #1, Julian and Huetteman at #2, and Mike Harrelson and Paul Jaffe at #3) easily breezed through their opponents from the south of the border.

6-1 in #2, and 6-2, 6-4 in the #3. In effect, UMass blew the Huskies away in the doubles department where it really counted.

Coach Steve Williams was very ecstatic over the victory. "I was really impressed with the doubles play. That's what we've worked on all year. In past years, we've split the singles with teams like today, but get blown away in the doubles."

Not this year.

Without much time to digest ths tatal team effart far the victory, the Minutemen take to the court again today against Westfield State. It is a 2:30 match on the Bayden Courts.

Crimson Tide drowns UM booters, 3-1

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — Overtime goals by John Lyons and John Duggan boosted Harvard to a 3-1 victory over the UMass men's soccer team yesterday.

Lyons scored the game-winner 43 seconds into the first overtime period and Duggan added the insurance less than two minutes later.

After the teams battled to a 1-1 tie in regulation time, they entered two 10-minute overtime sessions. Lyons blasted in the winning marker with a low, hard shot which deflected past UMass goalie Brett Olsher. Duggan knocked in an unassisted tally at 2:08. He took his own rebound off a direct kick and fired it into the right corner.

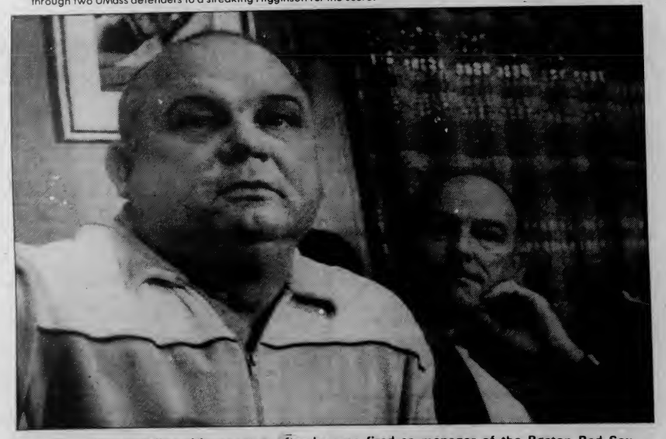
Steve Higginson got the Crimson off to a 1-0 lead, after a scoreless first half, as he beat Olsher, who made 12 saves in the game, after taking a pass from Mauro Keller-Sarmienta. Keller-Sarmiento, who hails from Buenos Aires, threaded a perfect pass through two UMass defenders to a streaking Higginson for the score.

Tony M. Dias knotted the game for the Minutemen at 27:13 of the second half when he side-volleyed a centering pass from Tony G. Dias past diving Harvard goalie Peter Walsh, who turned away nine UMass shots on the afternoon.

"They out-toughed us," UMass Coach Russ Kidd said. "We didn't play very well, that's all you can say about it."

The Minutmen, who were outshot 19-10, swapped scoring opportunities with the Crimson throughout the regulation time. Doug White banked a shot off the left past midway through the second half; Tony M. Dias looped a shot over Walsh off a direct kick only to have it booted away by fullback Andrew Kronfeld before it could cross the goal line. Tony G. Dias stung a shot from the right side which Walsh blocked with a diving save; Harvard's Lance Ayrault had a scoring bid stifled by an Olsher diving save; Mike Smith, a native of Leicester, England, skimmed one just past the far post after Crimson mate Kronfeld had set him up in the open; but the deadlock held.

Fullbacks Dave Harrington and Scott Cooper played strong a game for the Minutemen, who drop to 2-5. The win elevates Harvard's mark to 4-2.



Don Zimmer talks with reporters after he was fired as manager of the Boston Red Sox. General manager Haywood Sullivan looks on. (AP Laserphoto)

Red Sox release Zimmer

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON [AP] — Don Zimmer, who began a steady professional baseball career upon graduation from high school in Cincinnati 32 years ago, was fired for the first time Wednesday after 4½ seasons as manager of the Boston Red Sox.

General Manager Haywood Sullivan cited Zimmer's ability, loyality and personal friendship, but said the "business aspect" played a part in a reluctant decision to make a change.

Although fighting for a third place finish in the American League East, the Red Sox are winding up their first losing season at home since 1986.

The club's failure to win at little Fenway Park has had a direct effect on attendence. The Red Sox packed the major leagues' smallest park to the tune of 2.35 million fans last year, but this season probably will draw under two million.

Coach Johnny Pesky, who managed the Red Sox in 1963-64, was named to direct the club in its final five games. Sullivan said he hopes to name a new manager "by World Series time, but I have set no deadline."

Zimmer, who appeared at a news conference with Sullivan, was offered another job in the Boston organization, but rejected it.

"I haven't been out of a uniform for 32 years and I'm not about to give it up now," Zimmer said. "I haven't talked to anyone, but I'll be in a uniform somewhere, probably as a third base coach, next year."

Goal post teeth

If you have noticed lately that a lot of people are walking around on crutches, or with their arms in slings, or with welts and bruises strewn along their bodies, relax, we're not at war. It's just that the Intramural Football season has begun.

It's been standing room only at all the personal trainer's tables all over campus. Sore shoulders, hamstrings, ankles and backs that haven't seen any action since the glory days of high school, are throbbing and bleeding at a mind-boggling pace. All of us over-the-hill, frustrated athletes see intramurals as a last hurrah, the great comeback that every athlete dreams of. But along with that great comeback comes the risk of severe injury. Here are some common IM Football setbacks.

1. Goal Post Teeth — This happens most often when a wide receiver glides through the end-zone catching a touchdown pass and then turns his head either to smile at a Collegian camera or his girlfriend. The wide receiver then proceeds to plant a big wet kiss on the goal-posts at the rear of the end-zone. Billy "White-Caps" Jones of the Orchard Hill Huskies was injured this way last week. He's due back in two to three weeks, or until someone can locate the remainder of his jaw.

2. B.B.B. [Bruised Beer Belly] — This is an injury most common among offensive linemen. Defensive linemen insert swinging arms and elbows deeply into the exposed (and exremely vulnerable) belly area. This sometimes leads to the next affliction we will talk about.

3. Dislocated Lunch — This is one of the more comon injuries suffered by famous ex-athletes. Charles "Up-Chuck" Crowley of the Wheller wowees will be playing on a day to day basis after ths past Tuesday when he tried to clean two plates of Meatloaf Italianno at 4:00 before a 4:30 game.

4. Referee's Jaw — This injury is caused by unending argumentation, (Earl Weaver Style) with the IM referees. Joe "The Spitter" Jansen of the Southwest Sluggers will be out for the remainder of the season due to an argument with an IM referee after an apposing team had attempted a conversion kick after a touchdown. Jansen argued feverishly with the IM Official to no avail, trying to explain that the ball must go over the goalposts for a score not just through the bottom half, soccer-style. Cards and letters can be sent to Jansen in care of Belchertown State Hospital.

5. Severely Damaged Pride — This may be the most common of all IM injuries. It occurs when an ex-athlete finally realizes he is no longer capable of performing like the old days and winds up getting stuffed down on the IM fields in front of his friends, or God forbid, his girlfriend. The only known cure for this affliciton is severe alcohol treatmens at the Blue Wall.

New group wants gov't for students

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Stating that they want to make the Student Government Association "more accessible" to the student body, a group of University of Massachusetts students have recently formed what they call the Progressive Student Alliance.

The PSA, a coalition of about 30 people, is running candidates for student senate seats in next week's election in an effort to bring what they term "positive change" to the SGA.

"Students feel like they don't have control over their own lives. Many aren't aware of what the SGA is. We want to bring student government of the people," said PSA spokesperson Michael Ferrigno.

"Our main themes are student unity and student empowerment," said spokesperson Laura Kowester. Part of their platform she said, is student representation on the new board of regents of state public education, a moratorium of tuition increases, student representation on all University committees, better lighting on campus, the implementation of sexual harassment workshops, and grievance procedures for dealing with sexual harassment charges.

In addition, the PSA also plans to push for the implementation of the racial and sexual awareness G-core requirement, increased funding of Third World programming, opposition to racist or sexist organizations, and opposition to "subversion of the affirmative action recruitment program. It favors rent control, tenant unions, student management of the dormitories, abolition of the residency and meal plan requirements for underclassmen, and increased services and funding for handicapped students, Koester said.

"The eventual culmination of what we're all about is a student unionization drive," Ferrigno said. "We want a contract, just like Physical Plant workers or the teachers have. All the conditions that affect our lives, which the administration takes for granted, we can negotiate about."

Ferrigno said the PSA plans to push their goals via "grass roots organizing" among students.

"We want to bring it into the dorms. The success or failure of the PSA depends on how sucessfully we communicate with students. If they feel we're fighting for them, then that will start a movement and we'll do something. Our success will come from the students and we want to represent them," Ferrigno said.

SGA Treasurere Al Wallace said he doesn't think the PSA will be successful in achieving their goal of organizing students and can only have an impact on internal matters within the senate.

"I don't think it's going to help students on the whole outside the senate. I think it's a waste of time as far as making it a better campus for students. As far as running for the senate, I don't think it's a waste of time," Wallace said.

Linda Geary, senate speaker, took a different view from Wallace and said she felt PSA would be an effective organization.

"I think that the PSA has developed a lot of good ideas about issues on this campus. This is something I think student government is lacking and it can only benefit students."

Commuters scramble to senate race

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

A record number of commuters are competing for open seats in next week's undergraduate student senate election, while students in most residential areas show little interest.

In the Oct. 7 and 8 elections fifty-seven off-campus students are vying for 34 senatorial seats while many students will have no representative in the body, which controls about $1.5 million in student fees, because nobody is running from 18 of the dorms.

Dianne Mueller, chairperson of the senate's government affairs committee, which coordinates the balloting process, said the high number of candidates for the commuters seats is unusual for senate elections. "There's never been such a challenge before," she said.

In addition to the off-campus candidates, about 45 other students are running for a possible 71 open seats in the senate. This means many students in dormitories, particularly in the Southwest and the Northeast Residential areas, will not be represented in the 120-member body.

Mueller said the committee randomly selected the ballot order for the 57 commuter candidates yesterday afternoon. She said the names were drawn from a hat because many voters who don't know who they're voting for simply choose the first 34 on the ballot.

The remaining 15 seats in the senate are filled by students appointed by the Third World Caucus and the New Africa House.

Over 20 candidates, mostly commuters, will have the Progressive Student Alliance next to their name, Mueller said.

The PSA is a recently formed group of about 30 students who believe that senate politics have isolated students from the student government.

Mueller said two students will have a "Democrat" designation next to their names. He said if one group can have an affiliation, another can too.

Polling places for the elections, which in the past have attracted only about seven percent of undergraduate students, are Worcester Dining Commons for Northeast and Sylvan residents, and Berkshire Dining

Rash of false fire alarms plague UMass community

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

A recent rash of false fire alarms has become a tremendous problem for the University of Massachusetts community.

University Police Chief Robert G. Joyce said the false alarms pose three problems: it is expensive for his department to respond to them, the alarms are dangerous for fire and police officers, and they create unecessary panic among students.

Joyce said if a fire fighter were to be killed by falling off a truck responding to a false alarm, the student who set it off could be charged with manslaughter.

Joyce underlined his concern by citing the 62 alarms his department responded to in September. He pointed out there were only 312 for the 1979-80 school year. Each alarm costs the Amherst Fire Department approximately $90.

The most recent problem occured last Friday night at Washington Dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area where a fire watch by the Environmental Health Services was instituted because the fire and University police refused to respond to the excessive alarms that night.

"I think the majority of the students here are responsible individuals," Joyce said. "These individuals should exert pressure to identify those responsible." He added that fire and police officers are being diverted away from other calls and that these diversions could result in tragedy.

Setting off a fire alarm is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $500 and a prison term of not more than two years. Because he believes it is a serious offense, Joyce said he would do his utmost to encourage the district attorney to seek maximum penalties in cases that appear in court.

Joyce said that if a fire fighter were to be killed by falling off a truck responding to a false alarm, the student who set it off could be charged with manslaughter.

Joyce said police are forced to exceed the speed limit when they respond to a false fire alarm. He said false alarms rob the entire community, and the community must ensure the proper use of the alarms.

Of the alarms set last year, 165 were from pull stations and 147 from smoke detectors. Of the alarms set off so far this semester, 40 have been from pull stations and 22 from smoke detectors. If the alarms continue at their present rate there will be a 50 p[illegible]

House votes to oust Myers: First expulsion since Civil War

WASHINGTON — The House voted over whelmingly today to expel Rep. Michael "Ozzie" Myers, D-Pa., the first member since the Civil War so harshly punished, for misconduct in connection with the FBI's bribery investigation.

The vote to remove Myers was 376 to 30, easily more than the two-thirds majority re quired.

Myers, the first congressman convicted in the FBI's Abscam bribery investigation in which six other members of Congress have been implicated, protested his expulsion to the end.

He told his colleagues the action was tan tamount to executing him.

D.A. gunned down in park

CAMBRIDGE —A young assistant district attorney from Waltham was shot dead early Wednesday protecting a co-worker as the couple sat in a parked car near Massachusetts Institute of Technology, police said.

Edward Bigham 3rd, 28, was shot once in the chest by one of three men who approached the car after it broke down on Memorial Drive.

Police said Bigham, who was in the car with Marion Ryan, another assistant district attorney, pushed Ryan down on the seat and threw his body over her.

Ryan told police when one of the men opened the door, Bigham yelled, "Oh, no!" She said she then heard a noise "like a bat hitting the top of the car."

Sgt. Bill Kelley of the Metropolitan District Commission said Bigham was shot once with a small caliber handgun. He managed to get out of the car, but collapsed on the pavement about two feet from the vehicle.

The three men fled in a large white car, Ryan told police.

Catholic archbishop warns Church may become archaic

VATICAN CITY — Archbishop John R. Quinn of San Francisco warned yesterday that the Roman Catholic Church may become an "archaeological museum" unless it deals with contemporary problems "honestly and sincerely."

"We run the risk of letting the Church become an archeaological museum because we're afraid of what might happen if we say anything," Quinn told a news conference between sessions of a month-long synod of world bishops.

"We connot be intimidated by the possibility of being misunderstood. We must take up the responsibility and deal honestly and sincerely with problems even though there are risks involved in doing so."

State reps rally for Carter

O'Neill denounces Anderson

Thomas O'Neill II

BOSTON [AP] — Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill and more than 40 state legislators called on Massachusetts Democrats yesterday to forget about independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson and rally around President Carter.

O'Neill, who served as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's campaign manager for the New England primaries, told a press conference that "the core issue is still the price of ham burger."

Although O'Neill used to use that phrase to taunt Carter last winter, he said he now found it "easy" to support Carter's economic policies when comparing them to those of Republican Ronald Reagan or Anderson. Focusing on Anderson in particular, O'Neill asserted that the Illinois congressman had a "15-year track record of antilabor" and opposed fuel assistance for the poor.

O'Neill branded Anderson's candidacy "illegitimate" because he had not won any Republican primaries.

Rep. Philip Johnston, DMarshfield, joined in the attack, saying Anderson "doesn't have a prayer of winning the presidency." If Bay State Democrats insist on supporting him, Johnstan said, "Massachusetts could have a pivatal role in electing Ronald Reagan to the presidency."

Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, DSpringfield, echoed Johnston. "It's important that Democrats come home and avoid the temptation of a John Anderson," Sisitsky said.

Boston to sue Census Bureau, contests alleged population loss

BOSTON — Boston will file a federol court suit contesting Census Bureau figures that show the city lost 12.3 percent of its population in the 1970s, a city official said Thursday.

Ben Kilgore, a spokesman for Mayor Kevin White, said research by city officiols showed Boston's population held steady at 641,071 during the past decade and did not drop to 562,118, as preliminary census figures released Thursday showed.

The census "failed to accurately enumerate the city's minority and student population, resulting in an undercount," Kilgore said.

Kilgore said "I'd rother not comment" in response to speculation over whether Boston suffered a significant population loss when families moved out to escape courtordered school busing that began in 1974.

The 12.3 percent population drop was similar to declines experienced by many other industrial cities in the Northeast, according to census figures.

A suit in Michigan prompted a federal judge to order the Census Bureau to adjust its figures on the basis of block and Hispanic residents it might have missed.

Attorney Generol Francis X. Bellotti is considering a statewide federol court suit.

Elsewhere in Massachusetts, Cape Cod and the islands grew dramatically in population during the 1970s, accarding to the census.

In western Masachusetts, Hampden Counly ond Berkshire County each lost obout 3 percent of their residents, Franklin County was up by 8.7 percent and Hampshire County showed an 11.8 percent gain.

Amherst grew 26.1 percent to 33,210 residents and Greenfield papulation increased by 1.7 percent to 18,415.

Plans for the Daniel Ellsberg appearance scheduled for next Tuesday, October 7, at 8:00 p.m., were completed at last night's meeting of theDistinguished Visitors Pragrom (DVP).

Ellsberg will hold a press conference in the Campus Center at 7 p.m., and will then proceed to the Student Union Ballroom for the lecture. In 1971, after a restraining order was taken off of articles written by the Times, the series wos finished and became known as the Pentagon Papers. In 1973, charges against Ellsberg were dismissed.

UMass Prof laments State of higher ed

By DEBORAH COUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts Provost Loren Baritz said to the Faculty Senate last night that higher education in the U.S. is in shambles.

"It's my opinion that the undergraduate curriculum in this country is a national scandal," he said.

Baritz said the University's core requirements have never been reviewed or dropped. Baritz said the situation is not unique to this campus, and a concensus for change is enormously difficult to achieve.

He said some students take core requirements along with the major requirements and do nothing else. "Are we educating people or specialists?" he asked.

Baritz said he has no solution to the problem but feels the University community should be aware of it.

In other business, the Faculty Senate elected Anthropology professor Sylvia Forman, English professor James Leheny, and Botany professor Otto Stein to its Rules Committee, which coordinates the senate's business.

Forman was also elected Rules Committee Chairperson in a unanimous decision.

The senate also elected two members, Exercise Science professor Benjamin Ricci and Sociology professor N.J. Demerath III, as associate delegates to the University Board of Trustees.

The senate passed course proposals for the following departments: Journalistic Studies, Nursing, COINS, Education, Labor, Public Health, and Spanish.

In new business, Professor Jerry King, chairperson of the Campus Landscape Improvement Project, gave a slide show outlining the project's goals in traffic diversion and landscaping. A motion endorsing the project was passed.

The first of three readings in favor of the by-law amendment establishing a Rhetoric Committee, proposed by the Rules Committee, was also passed.

The senate approved recommendations on how the University faculty might make up classes missed during the water shortage. The classes can be made up by provisions assigned by individual professors, evening make-up classes for those with no previous commitments, or any other plan suitable to the students and faculty involved.

Firm offers to build bus stops at no cost

By DEBORAH ASBRAND

SUNDERLAND — In an attempt to reduce the number of auto accidents on Route 116 here, Warner Bros. Inc., a Sunderland construction firm has offered to build turnouts at two PVTA bus staps along the highway free of charge.

Walter Starazuk, Sunderland selectman chairman, said the proposal from Edward Warner, Warner Bros. general superintendent, was received Monday, September 29. In the letter Warner offered to construct the two bus turnouts at no cost to the town.

"I think it's a good idea," said Starozuk, "it gets the bus off the highway when the possengers are loading and unloading."

According to Sunderland police officer Michael Wozniokewicz there have been 63 accidents, 53 injuries, and six deaths on route 116 since 1977.

The latest fatality occurred on Sept. 13 when a University exchange student, Nap-pdol Charukultwarvatch of Bangkok, Thailand, was struck by a car as he stepped off a PVTA bus.

In response to community concern Sunderland police have organized a Radar and Traffic Safety program which calls for an additional 16 man haurs each week, using more radar and traffic enforcement alang route 116, according to Wozniakewicz.

In order to avoid overloading other routes through Sunderland, Wozniakewicz said, radar units will be set up in a total of 11 locations where residents have expressed concern about traffic problems.

Selectman Paul Korpita said yesterday that a meeting has been slated for Friday, Oct. 10, where selectmen will meet with Sen. John Olver R-Amherst, and Rep. Jonathan Healy, R-Shelburng, as well as Department of Public Works officials to study the feasability of constructing the bus turnouts on private property.

Storazuk said if the plan meets thje state's approval, construction will begin as soon as possible.

University symposium meets to celebrate Emily Dickinson

Emily Dickinson

The University of Massachusetts will celebrate the success of Emily Dickinson, Amherst's famous native and a major American poet, by hosting a weekend-long symposium showcasing her life and work on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of her birth.

Beginning today at 10 a.m. with a lecture by Dr. Ralph W. Franklin of Harvard University, the Emily Dickinson Symposium will bring together literary scholars and Dickinson fans for a series of seminars and open discussions.

Dickinson was born on Dec. 10, 1830 and died on May 15, 1886. She attended Mount Holyoke College under the instruction of that college's founder, Mary Lyon. She returned to Amherst where she remained for the rest of her life and wrote poetry in almost total recluse after her father's death. Most of her poetry was not discovered until after her own death.

Joanne Dobson, assistant to symposium director David Porter, who is also director of the Graduate English program, said the symposium will "Take a new look at what Emily Dickinson has meant to American literature."

"There is certainly a resurgence of interest in her work," Dobson said, "from the linguistic, feminist, and psychological perspectives. Feminists, in particular, are reevaluating many of their earlier criticisms of her work."

The symposium, sponsored in cooperation with Amherst College, is funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Today's opening lecture by Dr. Franklin will be on the Dickinson Fascicles, books of Dickinson's poetry that were hand-sewn by her. They were torn apart after her death and a chronology of her work was destroyed.

Franklin has painstakingly restored the chronological order in which Dickinson composed her poetry and will speak of the critical implications of his research.

Porter will follow Franklin's lecture with a discussion of Dickinson's work from a linguistic approach.

According to Dobson, poet and author Archibald McLeish who was scheduled to speak on "The Dickinson Presence" Saturday at 2 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room, Amherst College, is ill and will not be present.

Joseph Langland, a resident poet at UMass, and Susan Snievly, of Mount Holyoke, will speak in the place of McLeish.

Visitors are expected from Germany, Finland, Japan, and England. Interested students and general public can register for the sessions and get additional information throughout the weekend at the Campus Center Information Desk.

Philippine patriot chides US

By LAURIE ZUCKER
Collegian Staff

In a Commuter Collective sponsored appearance Philippine freedom fighter Charita Planas said the United States is using the Philippines for a military base with little concern for the country's people.

"I saw President Carter spread out his arms, and speak of protecting human rights. Meanwhile he has increased military aid ta the Philippines by 138 percent," she said. "I have spoken to Congress, and they tell me they need military bases in the Philippines to protect national security. Natianal security is not in bases.

"In China, in Vietnam, in Iran, you have supported military regimes, and you have fallen with these regimes. Your policy-makers have not learned to respect the self-determination of other peaples," she tald her audience.

When the Americans defeated the Spanish in the Spanish-American War in 1898, they purchesed the Philippines for $20 million Planas said.

The Americans colanized the islands and sent missionaries to teach Christianity, and American culture as an ideal way of life to the Philipino people, she said. There were insurrections between the people and the colanists and many people were imprisoned, tortured, and killed, she added.

On July 4th 1946, "to add insult to injury", Planas said the United States granted independence to the Philippines under two conditions: that the U.S. maintain rights to resources and U.S. military and nuclear bases would remain fro 99 years.

"In the evunt of a nuclear mistake, the Philippines would be obliterated. One of the largest nuclear bases (in the Philippines) is lacated in the earthquake belt, ten miles from an active volcano," Planas siad.

"Thirty-six percent of your awn tax dollars goes to building and keeping nuclear bases on the Philippine Islands. Only 22 percent of the money goes ta the poor," she said.

Planas was Chairperson of the Philippmo Chamber Planas was Chairperson of the Philippino Chamber of Commerce in the Philippines, and an af fluent person until 1978 when she became critical of the caantry's military regime, and was exiled.

When Planas was attending school in her country, peaple were fined far speaking their native language. "The colonial mentality ran in their veins. People were ashamed ta speak their own language, " she said.

Alangside the poverty that mast of the population bears witness ta daily, are some of "the most gorgeous hotels in the warld, bridges built by U.S. and a National Arts Center."

"Eighty percent af Philippinos live below the paverty line, and 80 percent af Philippino children are malnourished," she said. "They live like squatters in their own cauntry in ane raam shacks withaut toilets."

She said workers are paid $1.50 for eight hours work and there are no retirement or medical pravisians made for workers. Out side investars are free ta hire workers at these wages, and explait the resources of the country, she said.

There are four major opposition groups in the Philipines. The National Democratic Organization is comprised of Communists, students, rural and urban people, and a religious coalition. They are forming an ar my, but do not have many arms as yet, Planas said.

The Moslems receive arms from Libya, but do not accept the communists. The Moslems want to secede from the Philippines, and form an Islamic state, she said.

The Social Democratic Organization can tains workers, students, religious people, but also daes not accept communists. "The Elites are the politicians who claim 'Remove Marcos, and we are the answer,'" she said.

President Ferdinand Marcos is the presi dent of the Philippines and has ruled with marital law since 1972. Marcos' officers are trained in the United States and use military might to maintain a dictatorship, Planas said.

"There will be civil war in the Philippines. We want the right to determine our awn fate. We will continue to need American aid, because we are a developing country," Planas said. "But we want to decide what will be dane with that aid. It is time for the Philippina people to stand on their own feet."

Black Affairs

'Bansi' lifts viewers

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

Bringing the full house audience to its feet, the Third World Theatre Series successfully launched its fall season with the Afro American Studio Theatre Production presentation of "Sizwe Bansi is Dead," last night in Bowker Auditorium.

The drama presented a poignant and compassionate view of South African racism and apartheid through the lives of three realistic men, sustained by their sense af humar and pride against the inhumanity of a brutal apartheid system.

The audience is totally captivated by Mr. Styles (Helmar Augustus Cooper), as he humorously explains his life at the Ford factory in New Brighton Township. Upon the visitation of Ford Jr. himself, the "Mister Bass Supervisor" orders "general" cleaning.

For the first time in the six years af Styles' emplayment danger signs are posted, new averalls and gear are issued, the showers spray hot water and the men are issued towels. Styles hilariously translates Mister Bass' instructions that the men "are not ta act like those American monkeys."

Styles says in his native tongue "Gentlemen, the bass says we are ta act better than those American monkeys...Sauth African monkeys are better trained."

Although Styles tickles the audience's funny bone, the underlying bitterness cannat help but sear this lively humor. After obtaining his own photographic studio Styles exclaims, "Nothing is better ta stand straight in your awn shop, as your own supervisor."

Turning a shack into a studio, fighting an endless power battle against unbelievably united cockroaches and owning a cat to control the insects are all indicatians of Styles' determinatian to be his own "Mister Bass."

At the end of this beautifully executed dialogue, Styles is approached by a young man (Danald Lee Taylor) who desires ta send his wife a "snap." The scene ends in a hilarious pose, showing off a cosmopalitan Robert, strolling home to his wife.

Instantly, the light-air of the scene diminishes and Sizwe Bansi (Taylar) confrants Buntu (Cooper) with an expired passport, that demands his return to his "homeland." Bansi, lost in a drunken frenzy, reels about, demanding recagnitian as a man. Styles' words come to mind, watching this vivid display of emotian.

He says, "We own nothing but aurselves...a dead man leaves nathing but memories...I knaw because my father died."

Buntu discovers the body of a dead man, and offers the dead man's passport as Bansi's salvation. Bansi, at first, is unable to accept the dead man's identity. But Buntu points aut "If being Sizwe Bansi means to much to you, then march up ta the white man and tell him who you are...You better leave right now, you are expected yesterday."

Painfully, Bansi learns his new name, address and identification number. The drama closes with a letter to his wife, as he poses before the camera as Robert, he lovingly cancludes the letter as Sizwe Bansi.

"Sizwe Bansi is Dead" successfully weaves together the anger and humiliation suffered by Black South Africans, softened anly by their sustaining compassionate, humorous spirits that allow them to live forever.

Justice For All

By KIMBERLY GREENE
Black Affairs Staff

"My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty..." If only this was the land of the free and unrestricted. Just when one might think the black movement is progressing, it seems some event takes place and we know the black people are very far from being, unquestionably, equal to the white populace. We are constantly being exploited, degraded, violated and unreasonably dealt with.

To know I can't go where I please, when I please, because I'm black, is mind shattering, not to mention scary. Very recently two brothers, Perry Owens and Richard Lomax were apprehended an vague and unwarrented charges. Owens and Lomax were traveling from Atlanta to Tennessee. They stopped at a store in Blairsville, Georgia, while in the store, obscenities and racial names were yelled at Richard and Perry; naturally, they immediately departed. Although before they progressed very far, the local sheriff stopped and arrested Richard Lomax and Perry Owens. The charge was theft by taking.

Owens and Lomax were violated and abused upan arrival at the jail. They were placed in a bullpen with all white inmates. Not permitted to use a telephone ar appointed an attarney, Owens and Lamax escaped to Massachusetts in November of 1979. They allegedly beat the jailer and stole his car. This attempt added aggravated assault, matar vehicle theft and escaping from jail to their original charge. All af these crimes are twenty-year sentences a piece and armed robbery is a capitol offense, punishable by death in Georgia. Bail was not set until five manths after incarceration at $20,000 for each charge.

When the accused did obtain a lawyer, the attempt to help was superficial. Not until Mr. Bruce Harvey and Mr. Mike Brown picked up the case, did Lomax and Owens have any hopes for good representation and a fair trial. I spoke with Mr. Brown and he said, "The most important step is that the trial has been moved to neighboring Stevens County. The move increased the chances of a fair trial." Mr. Brown also said that part of their defense is the fact that Richard and Perry were so badly and unfairly treated by the Blairsville Sheriff's Department.

There exists, among other problems, an extenuating circumstance; that is ane of finance — the accused's lawyers are, at present, trying to stir up interest and donations. For more information contact Attorneys Bruce Harvey and Mike Brown, P.O. Box 906, Clayon, GA 30525. The telephone number is (404) 782-4575.

The Right to Vote

By KIMBERLEY GREEN
Black Affairs Staff

Years after involuntary slavery was declared unconstitutional, Blacks were still denied their civil rights, i.e. rights to an education, the right to vote, etc. The Emancipation Proclamation devised in the 1800's, changed this phenomenon. It implied that to deny a member of society his rights because of color was unconstitutional.

Black men began to vote but there was evasiveness of changing the ballot so that the candidate a person voted for, was altered. This caused the decline in the Black vote, since the opposition always won.

The Civil Rights Movement conducted by such leaders as Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X, helped the working class people define what they wanted and ways af obtaining their goals.

To get to the point, I would like to say, our people have struggled to get the RIGHT to vote so, at least we could take advantage of it.

The number of Blacks that vote is far belaw what it should be. Only 30 percent of the total voting population is Black.

This lack of involvement cites a few implications:

1. We aren't interested in the state of our affairs.

2. We don't vote because we are not educated to "the system."

3. We don't believe our vote will benefit us.

4. We don't believe in the American Government, that includes: public officials, law makers, and other people in power.

Where do you stand? Maybe you don't feel you view is included. If it is, try to reevaluate your reason or reasons. If it isn't, I hope you have a good one.

I can empathize with you to a certain extent, but the thing that bathers me most is that we are allowing our RIGHT, a right that could shape our existence, to go unused.

Some people feel we don't have anything to vote for. In Alice Walker's book entitled Meridian, one character states, "what good is the vote if we don't have nothin'."

I'm sure you all must have something you would like to vote for or against. What about:

1. Proposition 2 ½. This would limit certain taxes and avert laws relating to school budgets and binding arbitration. It would impose a limit on state and local taxes on real estate and personal property equal to 2½ percent of the full and fair cash value af property being taxed. This question will be referendum question number two on the ballot.

2. Nuclear Weapons Moratorium. This is a proposal by the State Senate that requests the United States and Soviet Union come to an agreement to halt testing, production and destruction of nuclear missiles and delivery systems and a transfer of funds to civilian use. This is referendum number five on the ballot.

3. Safe Energy Referendum. This is a vote in favor of measures supporting construction, licensing and phased replacement of existing nuclear power plants with conservation, energy efficiency measure, short term use of coal, cogeneration and renewable energy sources such as hydroelectricity, wind, power and solar energy. This will be referendum question number 6.

The presidential candidates running for election are: Representative John Anderson, President Jimmy Carter and Governor Ronald Reagan. Other presidential candidates may be written in.

If you feel you want to have some impact on the decision making process, then voice your opinion through your vote on November 4th. However, this is not possible if you don't register by October 7th.

Registration Schedule
Sat. Oct 4 Town Clerk's Office 12 noon-8 p.m.

Editorial/Opinion

SGA politics need change

The biggest problem with our Student Government Association, many people charge, is that it spends so much time fighting amongst itself that it doesn't accomplish anything substantial for the students.

This charge was substantiated Wednesday night when, at the weekly Undergraduate Senate meeting, co-Presidents Richard LaVoice and Richard Moran attempted to remove Speaker Linda Geary from the Legal Services Office board.

The action is symptomatic of a problem within the SGA that is ultimately responsible for its inefficiencies.

The problem is not new. The latest conflicts, in fact, are mild compared to the back stabbing politics played by former speaker Brian Delima and his foes. The problem is deeply rooted in SGA history, and nobody in the system seems to see the need to rectify it.

The student government leaders, it appears, have lost sight of just what they are mandated to do. They were elected by the students to represent students. But, while tuition continues to rise, while services continue to be cut, while the state legislature reorganizes and cripples public higher education, our student government leaders are too busy fighting amongst themselves to notice or do anything about it.

Change is needed in student government. New philosophies must emerge. Goals and priorities need to be re-evaluated. Our student leaders must be made to realize that we know they are not doing their jobs, and that we don't like it. They must be told, in no uncertain terms, to stop playing games and to begin accomplishing something substantial.

But student government won't change on its own. For change to happen, the SGA must be pushed, by students. After all, the SGA is the student body, and the leaders are responsible to the students. It's time we sent them a message. It's time we told them to shape up.

The most effective way to send a message is by voting. Students should take the time to vote for senators this Monday and Tuesday. It's not petty politics we're electing these people to play, their actions, or lack of, effect our daily lives and futures as UMass students.

Presidents just 'doing their job'

Dear Editor:

*In comment to the article, "Senate Speaker Survive's Question of Membership on LSO Board" (*Collegian 10/2) I would like to present another viewpoint. To anyone not trying to make a political game out of the Student Government Association, it is apparent from the Constitution, Chapter 23, Article 3, Section A, Paragraph one that "there shall be five (5) undergraduate student members of the Board. The President of the Student Government Association or his/her representative shall be a member. The SGA President, subject to majority consent of the Undergraduate Student Senate, shall appoint four (4) undergraduate students to the Board."

In regard to Senator Mark Kushinsky's accusation of this being another "Moran-LaVoice political move," I have but one question. Being that he is only in his freshman year and witnessed, at the most, just two senate meetings is he really capable of making such discrediting and prejudiced statements? In my opinion, the Presidents were just doing their job according to the constitution.

If people would stop treating the Senate floor as a home of animosity, perhaps the purpose for us being in student government might be placed in its proper perspective.

Are we not all supposed to be working for the well-being of the students together?

Senator Andrea Binder
Amherst

'We did what we had to do'

To the Editor:

We, the strikers of Amherst Nursing Home, feel it's now necessary to speak out to the community and to tell how we feel; now that the commotion has died down.

The issues we have been fighting for so long are clear. We deserve higher wages for the strenuous, meaningful work we do (most of us made $3.10 an hr., netting $99 a week.) Our contract expired in May. After months of slow negotiations and no one having received a raise since August, 1979, we wanted the raise retroactive. We were only getting seven sick days a year; we asked for 12 and we wanted some kind of union security. These were some of the major issues.

The Amherst Nursing Home has a very high turnover rate and the problem of working short staffed is continual. We maintain that more employees would stay longer, become better in their profession and be able to offer better quality health care if our wages and working conditions were improved.

The high turnover rate also makes it very difficult to organize the workers into a strong and effective bargaining unit.

After months of frustrating negotiations not going very far and two informational pickets; we gave the Home 13 days notice that we planned to strike at 6 a.m. on Sept. 23. During those 13 days, two negotiations were set up. The last one beginning at 4 p.m. Sept. 22 and lasting until 5 a.m. the morning of the strike. During the final hours, a wage offer of $1.15/hr. over two years, nine sick days and some retroactivity were offered. Most of the major issues, we would have been willing to settle for. Management, under the direction of the union busting law firm Skoler, Abbott & Hayes, however, absolutely refused us any kind of union security. They offered open shop where people have a choice of joining the union or not. Knowing the turnover rate...knowing everyone working there in the next two years will benefit from our contract, whether they paid dues or not, showed us very clearly that our union would definitely be weakened. We also realized that these offers being made to us, finally, in the last hours, would never have been made if we did not have a union and good strong unity among the workers. We felt we had no choice but to reject their proposal on union security and go out on strike.

What happened in the next six days was devastating to everyone. We strongly testify that a strike is a terrible happening. There was violence, and hatred between past co-workers. We understand that this was a very rough time for anyone who crossed our line and went inside to work. We also saw and felt all this violence. Three of our strikers are still suffering physically—wrenched ankle, badly bruised bodies. All of us have suffered emotionally. We maintain this strike was just as rough on us as it was on anyone else.

We are sorry for any inconvenience residents' families, doctors, Amherst Medical Associates staff and patients had to endure during the course of the strike.

We want to thank the hundreds of people, especially the 30 or more community and University organization's leaders who supported us.

It's really too bad that the press picks up on all the violence. That, we understand, makes news, but, shouldn't obscure the issue!

We believed in what we felt we deserved. We stood strong and united. We did all we could to avoid a strike. We have the right to a strong union. We have a right to strike. We made a stand for ourselves and for health care workers everywhere. We won. The cost of a strike is high. We are proud that we did what we had to do.

Board of Governors to review

Textbook Annex policy to be reconsidered

By SAM CHALFEN
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Governors for the Campus Center and the Student Union announced last night an investigation of the University Store's Textbook Annex refund policy and hopes to change the policy before the start of next semester.

The policy in question states that books returned for refund after the add/drop period will not be refunded, even if the books were bought for classes students can prove they dropped.

The policy was not submitted to the board for review before it began and therefore is in violation of standard policy, according to Paul Krier, a board member. The governing board has advisory power over policy-making decisions concerning the operations of the Student Union, and the Campus Center.

All proposals from the Textbook Annex operating under management of the Campus Center administration should be submitted for review to the Board of Governor's University Store Retail Services Committee. Due to a lack of student participation on the Board, there has been no such committee since last semester. Krier said last semester's committee did not receive a copy of the University Store's policy.

The number of students dropping courses after the add/drop period is substantial, Krier said. He will contact the store's management tomorrow, he said.

The board also announced that students interested in running for board membership qualify as write-in candidates. Information on the upcoming election, to be held November 6 and 7, is available in Campus Center in room 817, the board's office. There are no minority members yet on the board this semester.

Board member John Furbish announced that the Constitution Committee is drawing up a revised constitution in order to end problems that have been recurring in past years, specifically those involving the board's authority.

"The Board is a manifestation of the two senates (graduate and senate) formed to deal with student representation of the operations of the Campus Center Complex," Furbish said. "The constitution should reflect current realities and future prospects, e.g. the transfer of power from the University Board of Trustees to the state-wide Board of Regents."

Furbish said it is imperative that the constitutional review be completed soon so it can be submitted to the vice-chancellor of Administration and Finance before the administrative re-organization goes into effect in March 1981.

The board, in other business, defeated a motion which would have raised the salaries of the chairperson and vice-chairperson.

Detective thriller set in Berkeley of '60s

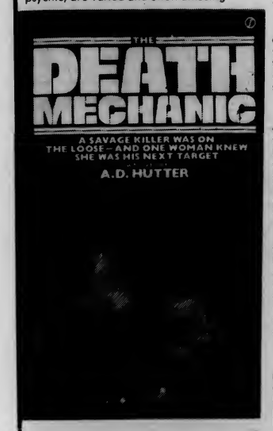
The Death Mechanic (Signet) $1.95
by A.D. Hutter

by SUSAN RING
Collegian Staff

Books

A.D. Hutter's first novel, The Death Mechanic, is a trip to Berkeley of the 1960s. It depicts a mass-murderer being hunted down by a victim that survived and a British criminalogy student.

Hutter's skillful suspense addicts the reader. The novel holds its own as another Califarnia thriller. Its characters, among them several amateur detectives and a psychic, are varied and often amusing.



Although the author is a practicing psychoanalyst, the novel has a light tone. Interesting background of the killer is given: he has never had a successful relationship with a woman nor with his unhappy mather, he is sexually frustrated, and he is bullied at the garage where he works. But this information does not descend into critical analysis.

Alison, the victim who survived, demonstrates some of the problems rape victims faced in the '60s and continue to face. But though the novel is enjoyable, it is nat especially believable, and any sacial statement it might make is last.

Alison's friend Keith, alis K.O., is the criminology student who, disillusioned with the police, decides to track down the killer. Keith's friend Randy, also a criminology student, happens to know a portrait artist and a chemist to check out clues in a lab. Things are obvious if one looks at the facts and follows the logic of this California-style, Sherlock Holmes story.

The reader sees part of the novel through the killer's eyes but Hutter seems unable to blend the psychological portrait of the killer with the fast-paced detective story, and his switching back and forth between the two is almost annoying. Sexual mutilation and murder are not fun topics but one would like to tear one's self away from psychoanalysis and just have a good time.

Although Hutter's novel doesn't have the professional tone or depth its advances claim, it is a readable book Next year his Dickens and Detective Fiction will be published both in England and the U.S. A.D. Hutter is a new author to watch.

Tasty vocal harmonies and exciting guitar theatrics are part of the reason for this quartet's growing popularity. Opening for Sass will be American Teen beaver Brown's repertoire includes originals as well as covers of such great tunes as "Under the Boardwalk," made popular locally by the irrepresible Munchy Brothers. Beaver Brown will play the Hatch on Saturday with the opening group Blue Moon. anyone 18 years old ar older is always invited to the Hatch, so if you haven't checked out this campus landmark yet, in the words of Bob Barker "Come on down!

Peters goes pro to New Orleans

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts standout Sue Peters yesterday became the first female athlete in the school's history to sign a professional sports contract when she came to terms with the New Orleans Pride of the Women's Basketball League.

In an afternoon press conference held at the Boyden physical education building, Peters, who graduated last May, signed a one-year contract with New Orleans, where she had been the second-round draft choice, 24th overall, in this year's draft.

Peters, 22, of Southbridge, was a four-year starter at guard for UMass, where she became the school's all-time leading scorer with 1858 career points, 355 points more than men's all-time scorer Mike Pyatt.

"I'm very proud to represent the University in the pro ranks," Peters said. "I'm just honored to get the opportunity to further my playing career."

Glenn Wong and Bernard Mullin, both assistant professors in the department of Sports Studies at UMass, represented Peters in negotiations with New Orleans and declined to discuss specific terms of the contract.

"It's a one-year contract, with an option clause," Wong said. "It's a bit different than most option clauses in that the salary, after one year, is negotiable."

A bonus, the terms of which were not disclosed, is included, provided Peters makes the team.

Peters, who was also an outstanding softball pitcher at UMass, said she is optimistic about making the New Orleans team.

"They need guards, which is good for me," she said. "I played all summer and I'm in shape, so I'm very confident."

Peters now finds herself part of a league which is experiencing growing pains, common to most professional leagues which have sprung up in the last decade. Four teams in the Women's Basketball League (New York, Houston, Milwaukee and Iowa) folded operations this week. Several of the remaining nine league franchises are in financial trouble, though New Orleans is one of the most stable.

In the event of the team, or the entire league folding, Peters' contract is not guaranteed, according to Wong.

Besides leading UMass in scoring, Peters' all-time school records include assists, most points scored in a season (587, in 1978-79) and the highest scoring average (23.4). Peters was named to the Region 1 Kodak All-America team twice, and was second team Academic All-American her senior year.

A telegram from the New Orleans Pride owner and general manager Claudette Simpson said the first game Peters will lay in, is an exhibition against the New Jersey Gems, scheduled for Nov. 29, at Salem State College, in Salem, Mass.

Peters is scheduled to report to New Orleans on Nov. 22.

A dream come true

Kevin Cullen

It was, perhaps, the most realistic and fitting end to a dream. She stood there, yesterday, in a maroon sweater with a plaid shirt underneath. Her brown clogs were a bit scuffed at the toe.

And, now, she is a pro basketball player.

Sue Peters, who yesterday signed a one-year contract with the New Orleans Pride of the Women's Basketball League, is a success story. You can understand the pride the UMass athletic department, not to mention the whole university, takes in the achievement. But, really, the pride belonged to the blonde kid with the scuffed clogs.

The dream came true.

"I was always hoping there would be a pro (women's) league," Peters said after yesterday's signing. "When the league began a few years ago, I knew right then that I wanted to play. But it wasn't until my junior year, when the league stabilized, that I thought seriously about it."

As for that junior year, 1978-79, it was simply awesome. Peters set school records for most points in a season (587), most field goals scored (228), most free throws (131), highest scoring average (23.4) and went over the 1000-point mark leading the women's team to the number one ranking in New England.

Peters hit the books as much as she hit from the outside while here at UMass. As a junior, she received an Alumni Scholarship for academic achievement, while last year she was a second-team Academic All-American. She is realistic at the thought of playing pro ball in a league plagued by financial trouble, and her degree in physical education stands behind her.

"If the league falls through, then coaching would be my main goal," she says. "I mean, I got out of school with that as my main intention, and it will probably always be."

Right now, though, there is little time to spend worrying about the financial status of the league. Sue Peters has a basketball team to make, and she's confident she can.

"I spent the summer working in basketball camps," she says. "So I played everyday. I worked out with a few college teams in the area, too, so I'm in shape. I'm really very confident. This team (New Orleans) needs guards, and I'm ready."

Ironically, Peters' first game will be played in her home state. After reporting to camp in New Orleans Nov. 22, Peters will come North with the Pride to take on the New Jersey Gems in an exhibition game, Nov. 29, at Salem State College. A flock of local coaches and fans have already indicated they will attend, and Peters smiles.

"I'll be nervous," she admits.

Among those present at yesterday's signing was Mary Ann Ozdarski, head coach of the UMass women's basketball team, who stood to the side, like a father giving away the bride.

"Sue built the foundation to women's basketball here at UMass," Ozdarski said. "I'm really very happy for her. Who isn't?"

Perhaps the only ones who aren't happy for Sue Peters are the same ones who weren't happy when she graduated last May. The Cage will seem just a bit more empty this winter.

"I'm going to miss the Cage," Peters said wistfully. "Opposing teams don't like to play there. I know. Other players used to always tell me that. But if you play for UMass, you learn to love that building. I'll miss it, but I'll always have memories of it and the fan support we got."

For now, the memories are put away. Sue Peters stands up and thanks everyone for coming, and then there are a few more pats on the back.

She excuses herself as she passes down the long corridor of Boyden, her scuffed clogs echoing in the silence.

She has work to do.

Minutemen at URI for first YanCon game

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen, still basking in the limelight and deservedly so after two impressive outings, take to the road this Saturday to face the Rams of Rhode Island in their Homecoming game at Meade Stadium at 1:30.

UMass begins it quest to capture the Yankee Conference Crown against its league opponent, the Rams. UMass has either won or tied for the Yankee crown 12 times, including the last three years in a row.

"Our conference games are important to us. They are our first objective every year. We feel that any team that beats us in the Yankee Conference thinks they have had a good season," said Head Coach Bob Pickett.

The Rams are led by Quarterback Terry Lynch who has completed 29 of 55 passes for 369 yards. Behind him are running backs Joe Brooks and Jon Rodgers who have 3.2 and 5.0 yards per carry respectively. The big news, though, is that Leroy Shaw, the second all-time leading rusher in Rhode Island history, will make his starting debut after coming back from a foot injury.

The Rams are 1-2 on the year losing to Holy Cross (21-14) and Maine (14-11) and defeating Northeastern (24-19). The defensive corps is led by linebacker Chip Forte who has 34 tackles and nose guard Charlie Babbitt who has 23 tackles and two quarterback sacks.

The Minutemen have been rolling up some impressive statistics the past two weeks. Running back Garry Pearson has carried the ball 47 times for 209 yards and a 4.4 average. Harold Chaney, a freshman, saw second half action against Delaware State, running the ball for 77 yards and one TD. Quarterback Tim Fontaine has an amazing 84 percent passing average (16-19) for 195 yards. The offensive line has been opening gaping hopes for UMass backs to run through.

Defensively, UMass will have defensive end George Lewis back after a skin irritation on his neck sidelined him last week against the Hornets. The defense has impressed the entire coaching staff with solid performances from the line, linebackers and the secondary.

Now, as well in the past, Pickett never takes an opponent lightly.

"We have a lot of respect for Rhode Island. They're always tough in Kingston. Lynch throws the ball well, especially the short passes. Defensively, we'll have to show a little more awareness."

College notebook

While everyone is, naturally enough, looking ahead to the Nov. 1 UMass-UConn game as the potential Yankee Conference Title game, something should be remembered: the Minutemen have to get past BU first. Right now the Terriers, 3-0 overall, 2-0 conference, are the number one ranked Div. 1-AA team in scoring defense, allowing an average of three points per game. The offense isn't too shabby, either, averaging 410 yards a game in total offense...For the record, UMass is averaging 361 yards per game in total offense, the bulk of it (476) on the ground...Harvard coach Joe Restic is rumored to be one of the candidates for the Notre Dame coaching once Dan Devine leaves...Freshman defensive back Edgardo Vargas, who picked off a couple of passes last week, got Yankee Conference rookie defensive honors this week...Kickin' the balls Dept.: When Holy Cross kicker Matt Michaud missed his second extra point against Harvard last week, it snapped a streak of 26 for the senior—it also cost the Cross a 14-13 ball game...UMass gives away 10 points on the card this week.

UM faces goal-less Cats

If Vermont soccer coach Paul Reinhardt had his way, he would provide the starting UMass goalie in tomorrow afternoon's game against his Catamounts (1:00 p.m. in Vermont) with a copy of War and Peace to thumb through during the afternoon's proceedings.

That's how bad things are in the north country.

In their first five games, Vermont has not scored a single goal, currently sitting at the low end of Division 1 New England soccer with an 0-3-2 record. The Catamounts have been on the underside of 2-0 decisions to UConn and Middlebury and a 1-0 loss to BU, while gaining scoreless ties with BC and St. Lawrence.

"It's one of those funny things where you can play well and not score," said Reinhardt, who has compiled a 47-22-10 record in six years with the varsity team. "The caliber of the teams in New England has improved, and this has been broadcast over the whole league."

Still, Reinhardt is honest about the beginning of his 12th coaching season. "It's the worst experience I've ever been confronted with in my life," he said jokingly.

The Catamounts, who patched together a 7-4-4 mark last season, feature junior captain Bill Nedde, winger Jon Christensen, last season's second leading team scorer with four goals and goalie Skip Gilbert, who posted a 1.20 goals against average last year, notching one shutout.

The Minutemen too, have had a problem generating their offense. UMass has struck for only eight goals in seven games thus far (2-5), while opponents have driven home 17.

"We are still trying to find the right combination," commented UMass coach Russ Kidd, whose team dropped a 3-1 overtime decision to Harvard Wednesday. "They (Vermont) are still tough, despite not having scored any goals. They have a lot of movement, and an excellent

University to ban Halloween guests

By SCOTT BERNAT
and HENRY GRIFFIN
Collegian Correspondents

In an effort to cut down on the amount of vandalism that has accompanied past Halloween weekends, the University administration has set up a tentative no-guest policy.

At a meeting of the President's Council last night, members expressed a desire to have a stricter guest policy implemented than the one that has existed in the past. The members agreed that past guest policies have not worked and the need for a more effective policy exists.

"(On Halloween) This place is a magnet for nuts from Boston to Albany."

The President's Council is a group of area government representatives and house Council members.

"We have recognized the previous shortcomings of past weekends," Student Government Co-President Richard Moran said. Moran also said that there were three priorities for the weekend: student safety, cutting down vandalism, and for students to have a good time.

Other members agreed with Moran, pointing out that the UMass campus is a natural attraction for non-students because of the central location of the campus and the nightlife opportunities available to students. James Garrity, president of Chadbourne dormitory in the Central Residential Area, pointed out that most of the trouble accompanying the weekend is from non-students who travel here to "party." "This place is a magnet for nuts from Boston to Albany," he said.

Ruth Mazzola, co-president of the Southwest Residential Area, said the media is also partly responsible for the trouble that happens. Because of past media attention to the amount of vandalism on the UMass campus, she said, the media automatically comes to campus looking for something bad to happen.

Moran told the attending members that they should make their constituents aware that it is the student who pays for the repairs to the grounds and buildings.

However, Kevin Mangan, co-president of the Southwest Residential Area said that if Southwest residents had more recreational opportunities, maybe the amount of vandalism in the area might be curtailed.

"With 5,500 students and only two basketball courts and a couple of pinball machines, something has to be done." Mangan said.

Moran recognized the existence of the problem, but said that nothing could be done without approval of funding from the trustees.

Pointing out the lack of knowledge and interest about area govenments, Moran said the President's Council will be sending out informative packets describing what the President's Council is and how area representatives can help educate students.

UMass aids handicapped

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: The following article is the first of a five-part series on what it is like to be a handicapped student at the University of Massachusetts. The series is based on interviews with students who are confined to wheelchairs, or have dyslexia, deafness, or blindness.

One UMass student confined to a wheelchair who is discouraged because, although many major campus buildings have been made accessible, The Fine Arts Center, which she longs to enter, is not.

Another student is faced with many problems because he suffers from a disability known as dyslexia, a brain abnormality which causes people to read words backwards, but he hides his problem from his friends.

A deaf woman came to UMass because of the special services it offers handicapped students, but still finds it difficult to make friends here.

Another student has found she is better able to deal with her blindness as a result of her attending UMass for the past year. In recent years what was once America's silent minority, the physically handicapped, have been striving to overcome society's barriers. One of their toughest challenges is obtaining higher education.

Although they come from no particular social or ethnic groups, these individuals have afflictions that often prevent them from enjoying an independent life and distinguishing themselves from the rest of the population.

Since 1973, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has provided improved access to educational opportunities for academically qualified, physically disabled students.

All applicants to UMass are judged on the basis of academic qualifications. "No one is admitted or excluded to this college just because they're handicapped," said Paul Appleby, coordinator of the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs since 1975.

"Once the students are accepted, those persons with severe disabilities are encouraged to visit the campus and discuss their plans and needs with me, particularly in the area of housing mobility and communication," Appleby said.

There are now about 400 students on campus financially assisted by the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission. This includes people with physical, emotional, and mental disorders.

Among the students working with the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs this semester are 8 blind students, 25 who have hearing disabilities, 18 students confined to wheelchairs and 4 with dyslexia.

"Through this office, they are furnished with special support services and counseling to help them cope with obstacles they confront while attending the University," Appleby said.

"For some it's very difficult coming to the University," he added. He said those who face the biggest challenge are students with communicative disabilities.

Office provides support

"Our job is to coordinate the various support services that are required by severely disabled students at the University," Appleby said. "That involves working directly with the students as well as every office on campus. When there are special needs that aren't being provided, we work together to make sure they are met."

The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs provides readers for visually impaired students on a voluntary basis. In addition, the office finds and orders taped texts from national recording houses for the blind. A closed-circuit television in the library assists persons with low vision, and a group of students from the Five-College and Springfield area meet monthly to discuss mutual problems and group activities.

Interpreting is provided for those with hearing difficulties in all courses. Class notes and tutoring are arranged as well as speech therapy and audiological testing. In addition, captioned films for the deaf are shown on campus every other week.

For those with mobility problems, housing, transportation, personal assistants, and preferential scheduling are available.

Unfortunately, for students with dyslexia there are no special services offered at UMass.

"We have no way of knowing how many students with dyslexia are attending the University since physical examinations and reports are no longer required for admission to the school, Appleby said.

Student elections

Elections to fill the 120 seat undergraduate student senate will be held today and tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

This year a record 57 commuter students will be competing for 34 vacancies in the senate. The senate, which controls $1.5 million in student fees, will not have representatives from 18 dormitories because nobody in the dormitories chose to run.

There will be four voting sites on campus. Northeast and Sylvan residents will vote in the Worcester Dining Commons; Central and Orchard Hill residents will vote in the Franklin Dining Commons; residents of Crampton, Emerson, James, MacKimmie, Melville, Thoreau, Coolidge, and residents of Cance, Moore, Patterson, Pierpont, John Adams, John Quincy Adams and Washington will vote in Berkshire Dining Commons.

Off-campus students, commuters and Greek Area residents will vote in the Hatch.

Water shortage problems persist

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

Although a water shortage is still with us in Amherst, Town Manager A. Louis Hayward said yesterday that conservation effarts have fallen off.

All the reservoirs (Atkins, Pelham, Brown, South Amherst, Brickyard wells) and the new Bay Raad well, were all in use last week, Hayward said.

On September 25 the water level in the Pelham reservoir went below the pumping level and has been warking on gravity flow since then, Hayward said. The Hill and Hawley reservoirs are virtually dry, he said.

"Just because there's a drop in tempature people think that the shortage is gone," Hayward said, "water use levels have jumped 300,000 to 400,000 gallons a day!

Despite last weekends rain the reservoirs have nat been replenished, he said.

On October 3, a squirrel got inta one of the sub-station generators which caused a power failure causing the water level in the storage tanks to drop because the pumps are electric. Hayward said he didn't know about the squirrel incident.

A major power failure would cause a serious water shortage for the tawn, he said, but he didn't know if it wauld clase the University down again.

Hayward urged everybody to keep conserving water and said that the water ban is still in effect. The ban prahibits the use of water for washing cars, watering lawns, and ather nonessential purposes.

There is still no sign of a rainfall major enough to relieve the water situation, Hayward said. Despite the lack of rain the storage levels remain safe.

Hayward complimented UMass students for their caaperation in helping tha conserve water. He said he hopes they continue to conserve.

Hayward suggested a method to cut down an water use by cutting the top off a one gallon plastic milk jug, filling it with stanes and sinking it to the bottam of the flush tank in your toilet under the float. The amount of water the stones displace will save 14 to 20 percent af the water used per flush, Hayward said.

Fire chief will fight suspension

By LARRY COX
Collegian Staff

Amherst Fire Chief John Doherty, claiming his suspension last week was prampted by his negative statements abaut the tawn's handling of last month's water shortage, requested a public hearing about his dismissal last Wednesday. A tentative date has not yet been arranged.

Doherty was suspended by Tawn Manager A. Louis Hayward for "improper conduct", but Doherty states in published reports he believes release was caused by two memos he wrate which expressed his belief that the closing of UMass was unecessary and that the crisis cauld have been much shorter.

Hayward, who on September 5 promised a public report on the causes of the water shortage, denied the charge that Doherty's firing was precipitated by the two memos. The incident which prompted the suspensions accurred before the memos were written, Hayward said last week.

Doherty's first memo stated that the crisis was "entirely preventable". Doherty, chief of the Amherst Fire Department for the past 14 years, also claims he told Hayward the failure was a result of "imprudent operations."

The second memo outlined steps Doherty felt should have been taken by the town which, according to the 54 year-old chief, would have prevented the closing of the University and restored the water supply.

Doherty's plan was ta shut off the tanks on Bay Road and near the Village Park Apertments, allowing the two tanks off E. Pleasant St. near the University a chance to refill. Additionally the town could have regulated the supply by borrowing water from the nearby town af Hadley, said Daherty. He added that using Amherst fire equipment, water from Hadley could have been pumped at a rate of 500 gallons per minute and full water shortage would have been recovered by the Saturday morning of the crisis, a time when most students had been absent fram school for nearly two days.

In Tehran, the Iranian Parliament which had been scheduled to take up the issue of the 52 American hostages in their 337th day of captivity yesterday canceled a public session.

Iraq, which says it has achieved its main military goals in the Persian Gulf war, tried to impose a unilateral cease-fire but the offer was spurned by Iran's revolutionary regime. Iran has vowed to fight on until Iraqi troops are driven fram Iranian territary.

A senior Iraqi official announced two Iranian air raids on Baghdad and attacks an other cities. The Revolutionary Command Council, Iraq's ruling body, then announced that the war would continue "in view of Iran's non-response to the cease-fire that began at dawn."

State police are expected to resume a search this morning for a University of Massachusetts student who was reported missing yesterday after his canae overturned on Norwich Lake in Huntington.

State police are witholding the name of the student reported missing. According to Trooper William Godfrey of the Russell barracks, he was staying with two other UMass males in a cottage on the lake when they decided to go for a canoe ride about 1 a.m. yesterday.

The canoe overturned and one student made it back to the cottage and called authorities, Godfrey said. The second student also made it to shore and was found at 7 a.m.

2000 protest draft in Boston

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Staff

A host of activist organizations and interested individuals banded together for an anti-draft, anti-war rally held on the Boston Commons Saturday afternon. The rally featured speaker Daniel Ellsburg who is best-known for leaking top secret Pentagon documents to the New York Times in 1971.

The demonstration, organized jointly by the Boston Alliance Against Registration and the Draft, and the Boston Clamshell Coalition, began at 1 p.m. in Boston's Copley Square. Demonstrators marched from the square along Boylston Street to the Commons where they staged a five-hour rally. Police said the crowd of nearly 2,000 demonstrators gave them "no problems whatsoever" during the course of the rally.

One of 13 speakers and musicians scheduled during the day, Ellsburg chronicled the history of the anti-war movement during the late sixties and early seventies in which he played a major part. He said he believes the demonstrations and resistance brought against the government during that period helped to end "an unjust war, and an unjust presidency," referring to the end of the Vietnam War in 1975 and President Nixon's resignation in 1974.

He said the anti-war demonstations of almost a decade ago show "the power that young can exert if willing to take a chance."

Ellsburg, who will be speaking at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst tomorrow night, admitted that draft resistance is risky. He said the risk of non-compliance with registration laws is a great one, with a maximum fine of $10,000 and/or a maximum prison term of five years, but he believes without resistance from 19 and 20 year old men, nuclear war will be a near certainty.

"I suggest that the risk is great of nuclear war. I also suggest that the draft is leading us to nuclear war."

Ellsburg said that despite their public claims that they are anti-draft, any of the three presidential candidates will, in fact, initiate a draft after the November election, unless strong public resistance against the draft and against military escalation is made by the American people.

"There will be a draft, whoever is elected, unless there are a lot more demonstrations like this one."

The Marine rapid deployment force, part of the Carter "first-strike" policy towards trouble-spots like the Middle East, will have to be made up of draftees, Ellsburg said, adding that this policy of "getting there first" with conventional forces might cause a "nuclear trip-wire." He said U.S. military strategists admit the military superiority of the USSR in conventional forces and that recent "deliberate leaks" by the White House indicate that the "only way to stop a Russian threat in the Middle East would be through nuclear war."

He said the first strike force might result in a nuclear "show-down" between the U.S and the USSR.

Several UMass students at anti-draft rally

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Staff

A handful of University of Massachusetts at Amerst students attended Saturdays' anti-draft rally in Boston, apparently without allignment to any organization.

Chris Leonard, a 20-year-old resident af Butterfield dormitory in Orchard Hill, organized one of two car-paals that left campus early Saturday morning. Leonard said he and mast of the eight riders were not formally aligned with Students Against the Draft, the UMass anti-draft organization.

"This is not a question to leave until tomorrow," said Leonard, "If we don't fight for our rights, we will lose our rights."

Fan Leanard, Chris' mother and resident of Hingham, Ma., also attended the rally. Leonard said she attended because she strongly aareed with her son on the draft issue.

"It's because of him that I'm here today," she said, war is such a horrifying thing." She believes a large army supported by the draft would be under great pressure by government, army officers, and corporation to engage in a large-scale war.

"War is good business," she added sarcastically.

Glen Gilbert, a 19-year-old Butterfield resident who also went to the demonstration, said that being "draft age" is both confusing and frightening. Although he registered this summer, as required of all 19 and 20-year-old males, Gilbert said he did so as a canscientiaus objector who questioned the constitutianality of registration.

"The Supreme Court has yet to decide whether draft registration is constitutional or not," he said, adding that anyone wishing to register as a consciencious objector can write the Central Committee of Conscientious Objectors in Philadelphia, Pa, or contact (SAD).

Nathan Milstein at the Fine Arts Center Friday night

Milstein: Precise but aloof

Nathan Milstein
Fine Arts Center
Oct. 3

By BRIAN S. YANKEE
Collegian Correspondent

Nathan Milstein, in his first appearance at UMass, presented an enjoyable concert of violin music last Friday evening. Milstein's playing was controlled and tasteful throughout the performance, which included works by Vivaldi, Beethoven, J.S. Bach, Paganini, Liszt, Saint-Saens, and three unannounced encores.

From a technical standpaint, Milstein is a virtuoso. With the exception af a few spats in the Bach, his playing was precise and clear, particulary in the two Paganini pieces, which, as anyone familiar with his music knows, are exceptionally difficult. Always in total control of his instrument, Milstein produced a beautiful, warm tone fram his Stradivarius, which even in the softest passages could be easily heard throughout the hall.

The only drawback to the performance was Milstein's lack of musical expressian. For the most part it seemed as if he was so controlled that he was unable to bring out any emotion in the music. This was especially noticeable in the beautiful slow movement of the Beethoven violin concerto. Milstein seemed somewhat aloof from both the music and audience. This might have been caused by the small audience and the large size af the hall itself. Perhaps if the performance had been held in a smaller, mare intimate hall, Milstein's emations and thase af the music could have been fully expressed.

Credit must be given to Milstein's accompanist John Feldstein, who played discreetly under the violin, providing a firm base for the soloist. Communication between the two was excellent and difficult entrances and cut-offs were precisely executed.

Varied child care available

By MARIANNE SAVAGE
Collegian Correspondent

Hampshire County offers a wide variety of child care services and a number of sources for financial assistance to low-income families, according ta a University of Massachusetts publicatian.

The publication, entitled Child Care and Pre-School Options in Hampshire County, lists 41 different day care programs. In addition to the programs listed in the booklet, there are 35 family day care homes. Together the programs have the capacity to provide services for about 1800 children.

The programs are classified into four different types of services: day care centers, family day care homes, Montessari Schools, and parent cooperatives.

Day care centers provide services for children from infancy to six of seven years af age, depending on the individual center. For example, the Belchertown Educational Day Care Center serves children from two and three-fourths to seven years ald, while the Infant Day Care Center serves children between the ages of six weeks and ten months.

Family day care hames provide child care in private hames. In Massachusetts, family day care homes are licensed to accept a maximum of six children.

Mantessori Schools provide a program developed by Dr. Maria Montessari, an Italian physician, psychiatrist, educator, that encourages the pre-school child to teach itself at its own pace in a non-competitive envirament.

The Amherst Montessori School students are not age-segregated so that each child may develap at their own speed. This allaws the different aged children to learn from one anather and encourages interaction between the ages.

Parent caaperatives pravide a program where parents are expected to participate on a regular basis, which in turn allows the cooperative to keep its tuition low. Such programs then are nat the best day care solution for parents who cannot cantribute time and energy.

Finanacial assistance is available in a variety of forms. Some programs offer scholarships based on need, while others request that parents contribute by organizing fund-raising drives or by assisting teachers in the classroom one morning every five weeks.

The saurce of funding for each program differs, but financial aid is widely available in some form in all the different programs.

Five of the programs currently recieve funding under the Chapter 766 mandate: Amherst Day School, Amherst Montessori School, Meadowlark Day Nursery School, Children's Christian Center, and the Children's Hause.

The objective of this state law is to provide far children wha have been denied an adequate education because of physical or psychological handicaps. Capter 766 requires local school districts to pay for ar supply educational services for children in their district.

Title XX (20) is a federal assistance program administered by the state to provide assistance in a variety af ways in addition to child care. Title XX is designed to serve low-income families specifically. Eligibility for assistance in a day care program is based on a sliding income scale.

Squirrel on circuit breaker, causes ½ hour blackout

A squirrel shorted out a circuit breaker in a power substation downtown Friday, leaving parts of Pelham, North Amherst, Amherst, and most of the University of Massachusetts without electricity far about 30 minutes.

"We've gat one well-cooked squirrel," said Kenneth O'Brien Western Massachusetts Electric company's Superintendent for distribution in Amherst.

O'Brien said the squirrel got on tap of a circuit breaker at WMECO's substation on College St. and cut off power to four circuits.

Campus Center, the Graduate Research Center, Morrill Science Center, and a number of dormitories were on emergency power during the half hour blackout.

In Campus Center, many pinball players stood dumfounded by the darkened and silent machines. In the barber shap, barbers stopped their work for several minutes and then resumed, taking particular care in the darkness not to make a wrong snip.

Dudley Bridges, director of building operations in the Campus Center, said power has been lost only two ar three times in the past seven years. One of those other times a squirrel was also the culprit into a transformer on campus. It suffered the same fate as the squirrel did last Friday, Bridges said.

"This probably won't happen again in another 50 years," O'Brien said.

It's funny how much difference two years can make.

In the fall of 1978, Sass, one of Bostan's leading-upcaming hard rock bands, received an enthusiastic response fram an overflaw crawd in the city's Paradise Theatre. But the warm-up graup, a bunch of teenagers calling themselves The Neighborhoads, were tao laud and abnoxious far the audience, who practically ignored them.

And naw, nearly two years later, the roles are reversed. The Neighborhaads are riding high as Bastan's premier hard rock/new wave band, while Sass, their heads still swelled fram their short-lived brush with stardam, are struggling far survival.

When Sass last played at UMass in the spring of 1979, they lambasted the crawd an the Southwest Harseshae far nat being respansive enough ta their music. They didn't natice the crawd had been waiting far several haurs ta hear them an an unseasanably cool day and just naturally expected the crawd ta respand ta them the way the Bostan crawds were daing.

Apparently Sass hasn't learned fram that mistake. They did the same thing in the Hatch Friday night, urging the crawd ta "make same naise" and "get inta it mare."

But the truth is Sass was flat and baring and nat deserving af the crawd's enthusiasm. Except far a cauple af songs, especially ald Sass favarites like the anti-disca "Radia" and "Justine," the band did nathing ta excite the crawd. They even lost a few people when, mercilessly, they delivered a butchered versian af The Kinks' "You Really Gat Me."

The problem daesn't seem ta be ane of talent, but of attitude. Led by guitarist-vocalist Dano West and brather, bassist Vernan, Sass is a graup af competent musicians. Their flirtation with stardam two years aga seems ta have gone to their heads. They still expect their audiences to go wild at every riff just as they did in '78.

But Sass has gone stale. The exciting, hard rock show af two yeors aga has mellawed ta a ritualistic medley of old, and relatively boring, run-of-the-mill material. Anti-disco and lave songs na langer excite audiences, especially when it seems like the band is really pushing itself on stage.

In a medium that is already packed with agatistical perfarmers, there is na raam for a headstrong band. True, good rock and rall shaws depend an interaction between the graup and the audience, but the audience usually feeds aff the band, and nat the appasite. If Sass wants respect and enthusiasm fram the crawd, they've got ta earn it.

It would be a shame if Sass was to continue in their present farmat, for they would almost certainly destray themselves in a few years. They have talent, talent tao gaad ta waste. Perhaps they should try some new material. Crawds in bars, especially at The Hatch, seem ta want dancing music, and maybe Sass should pravide that. A new direction is needed in the band far them to survive and be successful.

A gaad dase af humility wouldn't hurt them either.

Union Busting

Both the Amherst and campus community have heard the cry of "union-busting" a great many times in the last two weeks. The main focus of this cry was the Springfield law firm of Skoler, Abbott, and Hayes, for their role in the Amherst Nursing Home negotiations. Rather than being a case of "union-busting," what emerged from the 5 day strike of the District 1199 members of the Home was a very significant victory and a greatly strengthened union.

What then of these shouting "union-busting?" Were they similar to the little boy who always cried wolf? I think not. The issue of union busting—both what it is and how to stop it—has lied dormant for much too long. Each of the last three years has resulted in the ouster of over 600 unions. This is up from an average of only 172 in the previous 10 years.

At the same time, the number of management consultant firms that specialize in providing companies with a "union-free environment" like law firms like Skoler, Abbott, and Hayes has grown astronomically from a mere handful to over 300 today. The largest, Modern Mangement Methods, has over 70 consultants working at any given time between 45 and 50 companies, helping them preserve or create non-union status.

Though the tactics vary, there is a general pattern that fits closely, at least in its initital stages, the Amherst Nursing Home and the methods of Skoler, Abbott, and Hayes. The company either refuses to negotiate or bargains to an impasse over an issue fundamental to the union's existence. In the case of the Amherst Nursing Home it was first the refusal to negotiate, and then refusal to consider a union security clause.

The purpose of this is to force a strike. Once workers strike, "replacement workers" are brought in—usually with heavy assistance from local police—to keep the work-place operating. The stage is then set for a prolonged strike. During the course of the strike the company conducts a heavy propaganda campaign to turn the striking workers, in the eyes of the community, into a lawless, subversive element that needs to be rooted out and purged. The company, on the other hand, is portrayed as a pillar of the community, a provider of jobs and economic progress, and the defender of private property and the free enterprise system.

At some point a decertification petition is filed by the replacement workers and the National Labor Relations Board come in and conducts a decertification election. In 75 percent of the cases in the last five years these elections have resulted in the ouster of the union. (If the election is held 12 months after the strike begins, only replacement workers are eligible to vote, the striking workers ineligible!) In the case of the Amherst Nursing Home due to the commitment of the picket line militants and the strength of community support this scenario was avoided before a prolonged strike developed.

For three days in October and two in December of 1979 the Committee on Labor and Education in the House of Representatives conducted hearings on "Pressures in Today's Workplace." For 5 days there was a flood of employees, union officials, and union organizers relating the quasi-legal and often overtly illegal tactics employed by these "labor relations" specialists in conducting company union busting campaigns. Some of the most damning evidence presented at the hearings was obtained from the consultants themselves, either from their own written material or from transcripts of taped seminars they gave. One example of the type of advice these consultants provide is enlightening. "Don't hire any more black workers than you must . . . you take the average black. He looks at it from his point of view, and he sees that the only way blacks have gotten anyplace in this country in the last 20 years is through collective action, getting together, and raising hell. And there is a fair amount of evidence to support this. So it is my strong finding that blacks tend to be more prone to unionization than whites . . . If you can keep them at a minimum, you are better off."

This same consultant uses the following list of proclivities to weed out potential pro-union workers when hiring "replacement workers."

1) Sympathy for the "underdog"
2) Involvement in liberal "causes"
3) Keen awareness of "my rights"
4) Active in tenants organizations
5) Active in consumer rights organizations
6) Inability to cope with authority figures

The two-volume report from these hearings contains over 1000 pages of similarly blatant evidence.

No—union busting is not a cry of wolf. It is a very real and serious problem. Furthermore, it is a problem which cannot be adequately addressed if it remains at the level of the individual workplace. Rather, union-busting must become a community issue for its effects ultimately reverberate throughout the entire community. The effectiveness of the organizers, members, and supporters of 1199 in making the ANH strike a community issue, and thereby mobilizing a tremendous outpouring of support was the key factor responsible for turning an attempt at union-busting into an important union and worker victory. The lessons of the Amherst Nursing Home strike hopefully will be picked up and carried to workers in other shops who's attempts at unionizing are being threatened by union busters.

Bob Conte

Thus, I was quite unprepared yesterday when my friend Sarah and I entered into a deep discussion concerning the health and dimensions of our respective souls. Sarah, an introspective sort, has embraced all kinds of ideologies the last few years in a frantic attempt to find herself. But EST left her unsatisfied, yoga made her bowlegged, nudism proved impractical, and peyote made her nauseous. Still, she searches on.

She says that she's always been impressed by my relative happiness despite my apparent lack of spiritual attachment. She wanted to know how a reasonably bright person could help from feeling ravaged by the atrocities of modern society without some enlightened source to help provide answers and stability. After all, everyone knows that intelligene and despair go hand in hand.

I was convincingly bluffing my way through her complex questions about internal harmony and essential oneness when she hit me with something that I was altogether unprepared to deal with.

"What stage of life are you in?"

"Why, all the world's a stage," I answered, hoping to confuse her into forgetting the question.

"Huh?"

"I said all the world's . . ."

"I know what you said, but you didn't answer my question. Really, Bob, what stage of life do you feel you're in right now?"

I was desperate for an ad-lib. "I'm only kidding. In fact, I feel that I'm well into Cycle Two by now," I said, shrewdly applying dog food chronology to my early full grown years. Sarah was impressed by my profound response.

I'm not quite sure where my head is at, but that's all right because I probably wouldn't want to know anyway. I do so try to keep it together but I'm afraid I'm just not hip to what's happenin'. Every time I think that I've created my own personal space it turns out that I have to reserve it four to six weeks in advance or else only occupy it weeknights and Sunday.

Modern, abstract movements perplex me. I thought that contradance was a new birth control product for ballerinas.

"Cycle Two? That's Zen, isn't it?"

"Canine actually."

"That's right. This is the Chinese year of the dog. Jeez, I didn't know you were into Far Eastern philosophy."

I was too far into it to stop now. "It's not really Far Eastern. I think it originated in New York City. Probably Madison Avenue."

"Not even Greenwich Village?"

"I don't think so."

She nodded slowly. Her eyes brightened at the prospect of some new area to explore.

"What's it all about? Is it mind expansion?"

"Well, actually it has more to do with proper food intake and how it relates to the fulfillment of one's full physical potential."

"Oh, so it's about the preservation of the beauty and sanctity of the body, right?"

"Sort of."

"So I guess you eat at Earth Foods then."

"I can't. That would destroy the lifelong cycle. You see, there's four cycles in all. You start the first when you're a pup . . .er . . when you're a baby, only eating food that comes in cans marked Cycle One. Then, when you approach maturity, you go on to Cycle Two. Cycle Three is for the middle aged years, and Cycle Four is for the, well, golden years."

Her expression darkened, and she glared at me in disbelief.

"Then how come I see you eating in the dining commons all the time?"

'Cause they serve a lot of the Cycle foods there. Tuna. Liver. Beef."

She stared at the wall for a few moments, adding up all that I'd said. I looked away and covered my mouth so that she couldn't hear the snickering that threatened to explode into laughter at any second. She nodded slowly, then looked toward me and flashed her patented tight-lipped "you asshole" grin as her eyes brightened again. She reached for a nearby paperback and whizzed a fastball past my ear.

"Son of a bitch!" she laughed. Why can't you ever be serious with me? I bet you're still into dope and frisbee and Warren Zevon."

I decked behind the couch and searched for return ammunition. "Hey, I'm shallow but I'm fun . . ."

Political powerplays in SGA

To the Editor:

I am writing to the Collegian because at the Student Senate meeting on Wednesday night something happened that I feel should be brought before the students of UMass.

Upon concluding a speech I was immediately approached by co-President Rich Moran who said some things to me which were unbecoming of the co-president of the SGA.

He questioned my right to express my views and my ability to do so. If this is the type of person who represents the UMass student body we have problems. If, in the opinion of Mr. Moran, Linda Geary does not have enough time to perform the duties of Speaker of the senate and LSO board member, then how is it possible for a co-president, who surely has as much, or possibly more responsibilities to the SGA, to place himself on the LSO board as her replacement?

Again, I state that this was just another ploy by the co-presidents to remove someone who did not always go along with their views and wishes, and to replace her with a personal political appointment. Can we continue to allow this kind of political powerplay in the hierarchy of the SGA?

Mark Kushinsky
Orchard Hill Senator

SGA needs greater commitment

To the Editor:

Reading last week's Collegian, one is left with the impression that the Student Government Association has, in the words of the editorial board, "lost sight of just what they are mandated to do." The articles on the student judiciary, the Senate meeting, and the new "Progressive Student Alliance" all combine to raise serious questions as to what, how, and for whom the SGA works. I find that both discouraging in the sense that real accomplishments could go so unnoticed and dangerous because the people interested in really working with the SGA might easily be turned off by the negative impressions created.

The charge of the Student Government Association is clear. It was established to "provide means for responsible and effective student participation in the appropriate decision making processes of the University, and to further student welfare and interests."

There are thirty University-wide committees to which students are appointed, ranging from the Academic Affairs council to the Scholarship and Financial Aid committee.

The students who work on these committees actively participate in the decision making processes of the University. In addition to committee work, students develop and communicate their interests through participation in RSO groups, co-ops SCERA and other SGA funded or supported activities. The Senate and President's offices might be on the fourth floor of the Student Union, but the SGA extends over the entire campus. Too often, this is overlooked.

The Collegian feels that change is necessary in the SGA; I would agree. The Senate meetings on Wednesday nights should be a forum to develop a direction for the SGA as well as a place to educate the community to issues of student concern. But that direction must come from a working knowledge of how the system functions on this campus. And that means the commitment must be for more than one Senate meeting a week, if any senator expects to be able to offer intelligent input for SGA policy. The real work of the SGA is carried out from Monday through Friday, not just Wednesday evenings.

I would invite the Collegian editors and all undergraduates to come to the student union and see if "something substantial" is being accomplished. While they are there I would also urge them to stick round for a few hours and help out.

Hopscotch just escape

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Correspondent

Hopscotch, starring Walter Matthau and Glenda Jackson, is okay for light amusement, but not much more.

Brian Garfield has, with Bryan Forbes, transformed his slow-paced somewhat lifeless book into a slow-paced lifeless movie. Ronald Neame's inconsistent direction does little to help.

Matthau, although not in top form and looking older than ever, does a good job as Miles Kendig, a CIA agent. When Kendig is fired, he decides to wreak havoc on the agency and in particular the man who fired him. He writes of his exploits in the agency and sends copies to every country; he sublets his ex-boss' house and, in the comedy's best scene, tricks the FBI into blowing it up. All this is done while globetrotting the world with Glenda Jackson, a former lover. Though why Kendig is globetrotting is not clear, the movie is filmed on location in Munich, Salzburg, Marseilles, Bermuda, London, Savannah, Atlanta and Washington D.C. Perhaps to get his money's worth, Garfield gives us shots of these countries everytime nothing important is happening, which is more often that not.

Glenda Jackson is good but wasted in an empty role. Supporting actors Ned Beatty and Sam Waterston, as Kendig' boss and successor, respectively, are all right though somewhat miscast. Only Herbert Lom, nicely underplaying a KGB agent, overcomes the poorly written part given him. Lom is known for the Inspector Dreyfus role he made famous in the Pink Panther movies.

British director Ronald Neame should be used to disasters, having made such films as The Poseidon Adventure and Meteor. Although one would not know it by this film, Neame is an excellent director. This film, however, is filled with meaningless scenes, questionable camera work and a climax that is implausable though exciting.

Spaced Out: Depraved remake reduced to drivel

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Correspondent

In the spring of 1978 when I was finishing high school, collegues of mine in video tape workshop decided to re-cut and re-dub a very bad film in hopes of reating a masterpiece out of it's ashes. The original film, a hardcore epic titled Hot and Horny, was re-named Attack of the High School Sex Fiends, and featured an all new dialogue with references to some of our teachers, and as an added attraction, a toy airplane that flew in and out of unexpected areas.

Spaced Out, a new film at The Mountain Farms 4, seems to be based on the same principle. The people responsible for this piece of celluloid, Miramax Films Incorporated, had a much bigger budget than we, but achieved much less in the way of creative results.

Spaced Out was originally created as deprved entertaiment for less discriminating audiences on the British Isles, but an American Company unfortunately captured it and made some changes in the script to enthrall the people on the other side of the Atlantic.

The simple plot revolves around four ridiculous people and their adventures aboard the "spaced out" an integallactic vehicle that has captured them. The three men have one thing on their minds while the girl seems only interested in wallpaper. The crew of the spaceship is made up of three former centerfolds in leother suits, a computer with a dirty mouth, and a jukebox that offers advice on sex and drugs.

The acting, awful to the paint of irritation, is not quite bad enough to make the script seem literary by comparison. The only relief in all this drivel aside from the closing credits is a few wry comments by the jukebox that brings some semblance of laughter from the audience, which in my case consisted of three people. Two of us gat in free, while the third person was admitted at a discount rate. At $1.75 a showing, Spaced Out is not going to be one of the big maney-makers this season. I wonder why.

"We try to get these students to come to us as early as possible, and we will contact their teachers to let them know that there may be some problems when exams are given."

"Right now there are four dyslexic students working directly with our office, but I'd say that there are at least 100 more that we don't know about." he said.

During the past five years the University has modified the physical make-up of the campus to aid the handicapped.

"Based on my visits to other campuses, and my association with staff members from different universities, I would have to say that the University of Massachusetts would compare very favorably with any major university in the country for its access and support services it provides," Appleby said. "The administration deserves a lot of credit for what they've done over the past several years to make this an accessible institution for the physically disabled."

It would cost thousands of dollars to make the school totally accessible to wheelchairs, so UMass has opted to make every program, not every building, obtainable.

"Our office works very closely with the scheduling office," Abbleby said. "Most of our major academic buildings can be gotten into quite easily however, and many others are at least minimumly accessible."

Living on Campus

Thre are also four dorms on campus where someone in a wheelchair can reside. Both Patterson and Prince, located in Southwest have minimal modifications (entrance and bathroom), but Brett, located in Central, and Knowlton, located in Northeast, have each been completely renovated from top to bottom.

In these two buildings many rooms include adjustable desk tops and wardrobe units, accessible kitchenettes and bathrooms, a visual fire alarm system, and new elevators.

"Our goal is not to make every resident hall on campus accessible," said Appleby, "But, these people should have the same range of options of where to live as other students, so we are trying to provide at least one or two accessible dorms in each major residential area."

Three vans operated by the Handicapped Student Affairs office take students around campus, making it even more manageable. The transit service is also expecting to receive 12 lift-equipt buses in mid-October that will be put into operation as soon as they pass inspection.

Tomorrow: Students confined to wheelchairs describe their experiences at UMass.

Beaver Brown Band: Electrifying

Beaver Brown
The Hatch
Oct. 4

By SUSAN BARON
Collegian Correspondent

If you were in the Campus Center this Saturday night, you saw o seemingly endless streom of people lined up ouside the Hotch. By 10:30 p.m. the Hatch wos filled to copacity, ond some hod to miss the party.

Although the Hatch is lacking in atmosphere, The Beover Brown Band changed that with their electrifying talent ond rowdiness. The whole audience snuggled in close ond moved to the music.

Eoch member of The Beaver Brown Bond hos o visible ond consistent personolity on stage. Any follower of this powerful band will recognize o similority to Asbury Park ond Bruce Springsteen.

The image, sound and technique of The Beover Brown Bond olso reminds one of the New Jersey sound of Springsteen.

Lead singer John Cofferty ond Mike "Tunes" Atunes on sox hove o striking resemblance to Bruce and The E Street Band becouse of their vitality.

Cofferty sings seductively with o hoarse, whispery voice. The oudience's ottention is usually on the high-energy enthusiosm of John, skinny, ot centerstoge. John is o super showman with his guitar ond his voice is indispensible to the band's style.

When "Tunes" bellows his sax, the lights shift to him and the stoge is his. Billing himself as "the only Brown Beover," Tunes reminds one of Clorence Clemons of the E Street Band. A veteran of the Chuck Berry ond Bo Diddley bands, "Tunes" enlivens the stoge when he blows his sox, his cheeks ready to burst.

Gary Guitar plays guitar in o serious monner, most of his attention on his precise and forceful music. Bobby Cotoia—keyboords, Kenny Jo Silva—drums, and Pot Lupo—bass guitor, reolly enjoy themselves while they perform. Lupo never once wiped the grin off his foce Saturday night.

The fervent whole-heartedness The Beaver Brown Band emanotes is whot enobles them to copture the oudience. Like many bonds, The Beover Brown Bond plays quolity music. But unlike many bonds, they are personoble ond fun.

Cofferty's little stories before songs odd flovor to the show. The oudience smiles with memories of Springsteen when John wails thot whining hormony. "Tunes" fills the room with his soothing sounds, and bells ring in the background os the lights go down.

In the post, Beaver Brown ployed a lot of Springsteen; "Rosalito" was o favorite. Lotely, though, The Beaver Brown Bond hos enough originol music to fill o show. Saturday night, the crowd went wild with two new originol hits: "Some Like it Hot" ond "Sandy Lone." The bond also played a single they released this summer colled "Wild Summer Nights." In oddition to these original hits, the audience swayed to tunes by Elvis Presley, Steppenwolf and The Beach Boys. There wos o theme of summer in Saturday's performance. But there were no Bruce tunes.

Ploying three demanded encores, The Beaver Brown Band got amozing response from the audience. It's too bad they couldn't hove ployed longer.

Having been together for five years, The Beover Brown Band will continue to spread the Rhode Island rock-and-roll sound they've created, and their fons will guarontee its success.

Cats squeeze by UM booters

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The lack of offense continues to handcuff the women's soccer team, as they lost to the Catamaunts of Vermant, 1-0, at the NOPE fields on Saturday.

The loss draps the Minutewamen to 4-2-1, with the lass last Saturday its first at hame since the team began three years ago.

Despite an almost equal number of shats an goal and having more corner kicks, UMass was nat able to "play up front," according to Coach Kenikali Banda.

"We had no offense," said Banda, "we didn't clear the ball, we didn't pass, no one was there when Nina (Halstram) had the ball in frant of the oppasite goal, we just didn't play our type of game."

Vermant scored the gamewinner at 23:20 of the second half.

"Both teams had chances to score," said Banda, "but they did and we didn't. They deserved to win."

UMass had several key players injured, including its leading scorer Natalie Prasser and senior co-captain Elaine Cantant.

"Natalie couldn't play and probably will not play until next week. Elaine was playing hurt, but I think she'll be fine for our next game against Connecticut," said Banda.

UMass will try to regain a winning momentum this Wednesday at Storrs against the lady Huskies of UConn.

Runners second in tri-meet

By CHRIS WILSON
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass men's cross country track team beat the University of Rhode Island but lost to Northeastern in Saturday's meet at Franklin Park in Bostan.

Top runners for UMass were co-captains Paul Beaulieu, who placed third with a time of 24:48, and Mike Doran who was fourth at 24:50.

Dan Trembly also ran well for UMass placing fifth at 25:19.

Coach Ken O'Brien feels that the team has a lot of potential and that they should rely on team strength and consistent performances. According to O'Brien, the running conditions over the five mile course were perfect.

The team, now 2-3 will travel to Connecticut this weekend to meet Dartmouth and UConn.

and appeared within striking distance of upsetting the East's top team. But Delaware came back with pinpaint spiking to overtake the Minutewamen. Delaware advanced to the finals with a 15-13 scare.

"When UMass beats URI for the first time, and after almost beating Delaware, haw can't you be pleased," said Marasca, "we're getting better every weekend, everybady played well, we're over .500 (including two wins over Bastan College and MIT Thursday night, UMass' record is now 11-9) and we should keep over .500 for the rest of the seasan," said Marasco.

While the varsity prepares for Springfield College Wednesday night at NOPE, the JVs will try to extend its win streak to four matches tonight when its travels to Clark University in Worcester for a tri-match with Franklin Pierce. UMass defeated the MIT JVs in three games, last Thursday.

The only goal of yesterday's game came with just 8:47 left on the clock. Tina Coffin carried it down field to assist Strong with the score.

The Junior Varsity played to a tie against West Chester yesterday, 1-1. West Chester scored off a penalty flick with 17:20 posted.

The remainder of the first half showed UMass held at bay, ending in 0-1, West Chester.

The second half of the game showed UMass coming back quickly with Sue Packard scoring early in the half.

Both teams, Varsity and Junior Varsity, will travel to Yale Wednesday and Bridgewater, Friday.

"From here on in, the competition is going to get tougher every day," said Hixon. Bridgewater was third in the standings last year, and Yale has been heard to have a good team this season.

Spikers 3rd in tourney

Now playing .500 volleyball

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team made its best showing of the season last Friday night and Saturday, as it finished third overall in the UMass Tournament at Boyden.

In addition to bringing its record to over .500, UMass showed its opponents and its audience (about 500 appeared Friday night) a determination and a persistence that wore away its opponents and gave UMass confidence even when all thought the match lost.

UMass began the evening with a 15-10, 15-3 sweep over Northeastern University. Coming off a sluggish start in the first game, the Minutewomen opened up their outside attack and plugged up the Huskies at the middle; the second game featured great serving outside attacking, as UMass finished off Northeastern, who ended up eleventh overall.

The momentum from that match continued into the first game against Cortland State University, as UMass overwhelmed them, 15-4. However, Cortland State took advantage of a mental letdown from UMass; despite a late UMass rally, Cortland tied the match with a 15-10 win. Behind 1-8 in the tiebreaker, UMass roared back with the help of spiking from Ellen Braun and Peggy Barber and tough defense from all on the UMass court; the Minutewamen staved off Cortland five time (7-13, 9-13, 11-13, 13-14, 14-14) to take a very emotional 1a6-14 victory.

The psychological surge spilled over into the match against Queens College. Team play, especially in spiking, serving and setting, totally dominated the outcome, as UMass turned away Queens 15-4, 15-3.

The night ended with UMass the top seed in its pool and top team of the three pools.

On Saturday morning, UMass met the University of Delaware, the top team in the East. Delaware showed a variable hitting game, going deep and near the net almost at will to draw away the defenders. However, UMass rallied with blocking from Brenda Simmons, ace serving from Nancy Joraskie and a strong outside attack: behind 8-13, UMass won the first game 15-13. From that uplift came a letdown, as UMass could not handle Delaware's serving. Delaware tied the match 15-2. Both teams then dug down and locked horns far every point. UMass went ahead 13-10

UMass "ace" tennis players down Spfld.

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

Springfield—The women's tennis team breezed by Springfield College Saturday afternoon by a score of 7-2. Their record now stands at 7-2.

Perfect tennis weather greeted the netwomen as play got under way at 1:30 p.m. In singles play UMass was able to take five of the six matches played. Starting off with number one was Barbara Mills who out played Jennifer Hodges 7-5, 6-4. Mills was able to win in spite of her sprained ankle (injured last Saturday at Boston College) which was an obvious handicap.

"Even though she was not as mobile, she was still able to win," said UMass coach John Beal. "She does not make mistakes."

Senior captain Joanne Vennachi, playing at number three, defeated Maureen O'Connor 6-4, 6-4. Number four, Chris Carson, downed her opponent 6-3, 6-2. Paula Natale at number five won easily 6-2, 6-1. And rounding out the winners was number six Patricia Sullivan who won a close match 7-5, 7-5.

The doubles teams were able to win two of the three matches over Springfield. Finishing first were number two doubles Helen Najarian and Sally Fryberger who crushed their competition 6-2, 6-2. Carolyn Tarbell and Kathy Burke at number one, had a tougher match which went three sets 5-7, 6-0, 6-4. Number three doubles lost their match in a close three setter.

Springfield College coach Arky Crook commented on the match; "We played very well. UMass is a much stronger team than last year's, they have a lot of new blood."

The netwomen play the University of Rhode Island in an away match this Tuesday. "We should beat URI by the same score as Springfield," Beal said.

Minutemen coast past Rhode Island, 26-8

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—As each week passes it is becoming more evident that the University of Massachusetts is a team that is built from poise as well as skill. For nothing better epitomized the aforementioned description than Saturday's proceedings at Meade Stadium as the Minutemen dismantled the University of Rhode Island 26-8.

The Minutemen did what they had to da when they had to da it. Twice, UMass shook off Rhode Island comeback attempts (6-2, 12-8) to stroll away for the victory.

Ram's Head Coach Bob Griffin echoed those sentiments. "They may bend a little, but they get awfully tough down inside. When it looked like we were going to get something going, they came up with the big play."

And indeed they did. After UMass stopped a Rhody drive in the second period on the 12 yard line, the Minutemen marched to their 46 yard line. From there, quarterback Tim Fontaine, with some nifty play action faking, fired a 54-yard bomb to Jim Ryan who was all alone on a post-pattern. The two point conversion was unsuccessful.

UMass head Coach Bob Pickett termed it "the play that turned the momentum toward us."

Prior to that the awesome UMass offense drove 83 yards on the opening kickoff eating up an amazing 10:04 seconds. During that drive Garry Pearson (26 attempts, 125 yards) ran the ball nine times finishing the drive with a one-yard scamper.

Rhode Island's only points in the first half came when a UMass center snapped the ball out of the end zone. The score at halftime was 12-2, UMass.

In the second half the Rams mounted a 78-yard scoring drive early in the third period to close within faur, 12-8.

UMass bounced right back with a march of their own engineered smoothly by Fontaine. Pearson and Brian Heyworth ran through the Ram's defensive line opened by the powerful offensive line. Fontaine culminated the drive on an option keeper good for 15 yards and a TD. The extra point made it 19-8, UMass.

UMass tallied a final time to put the game away for good. Once again a well-polished drive combining the running of Pearson and Heyworth and the short passing of Fontaine led to the final TD by Pearson to make the final score 26-8.

The story of the second half had to be the Minuteman defense which snuffed out three Ram scoring attempts in the fourth quarter inside the UMass ten-yard line.

Pickett was pleased with his whole team's performance but especially Fontaine's. "He's doing a tremendous job for us."

The Minutemen take on Delaware this Saturday at Alumni Stadium at 1:30.

Strong goals winning weekend contests

US Olympic team member Judy Strong led UMass to two victories at home this weekend as the women's field hockey team defeated Colgate Saturday, 1-0, and West Chester Sunday by the same score.

Saturday's was a close match, and as Coach Pam Hixon said after the game, "We were lucky to get away with that one."

The women couldn't seem to get it together the first half of the game, with Colgate putting good pressure on their offensive moves.

Hixon said the women seemed uptight and were afraid to move because they might make mistakes. "We did not play well as an offensive unit."

The first half of the game moved slowly with UMass having a hard time getting the ball past their 50 yard line.

The only score of the game came off the last corner shot of the first half by Judy Strong. Tish Stevens took the ball in from the corner driving it to the top of the circle where Strong was waiting. Strong went with a flick over the goalie's head to bring the score to 1-0 UMass, with 3:20 left on the scoreboard.

Holding the team together were Chris Caughlin, Carol Progulske who had "a great game as a sweeper," and Patti Bossio, who "played one of her better games," Hixon said.

In yesterday's game UMass was a little shaky the first half, with West Chester pressuring well.

The second half showed UMass in a little better light where the intensity level was much greater and the women were marking their opponents well.

Defensively the stickers just couldn't seem to get the ball out of their end; they were slow to react and the first half found them just standing around the field.

By far, the most consistent player on the team this season has been freshperson Carol Progulske who plays an outstanding defensive game. She is quick to react and moves across the field well to anticipate the direction of the ball.

KKK: A History of Terrorism

The terror of the Ku Klux Klan is not a new phenomenon. It is 114 years old, and is in a period of resurgence. The Klan has not always had a great influence on the social life of this country. It has gone through ups and downs like any other social movement. In order to map out a strategy for its elimination as part of a racist, anti-human social movement, we must understand its history. We must know why it has flourished in some periods and been silenced in others.

All moral people must put the elimination of the Ku Klux Klan high on their agenda of causes. But by elimination we should not mean the physical destruction of Klan members; we should not think that by organizing "Death to the Klan" rallies that we will in any way move closer to the goal of eliminating the Klan's influence. We must destroy the social conditions upon which the Klan flourishes and does its dirty work. This can only be accomplished by a prolonged mass struggle. No fly-by-night extremist measures will work, they will only make the Klan a formidable enemy.

The Klan was organized in the South following the Civil War. It was a period of rapid change and upheaval in the South. It was a period of revolutionary transformation. Free slaves were taking matters into their own hands and actually setting up new governments. Many downtrodden and oppressed white workers, who never had a stake in slavery, were to join black people to form those new governments which tried to institute programs that met the needs of the people. This was the period of Reconstruction.

Other whites, however, feared economic competition from the freed Blacks; their fear was egged-on by the declining slaveocracy. Because of this fear and uncertainty they joined the Klan, which was started in Pulaski, Tennessee in 1865 by the sans of the old ruling class, the slaveowners, who wanted to regain their power. Using poor whites as their cannon fodder the slaveocracy eventually regained political power by violent means. The Klan shortly disbanded. Why? Because the ruling class no longer needed it; Klan ideology---the ideology of racism and chauvinism---became the dominant ideology of the official governments of the South in the coming decades.

The next period in which the Klan experienced growth was in the 1920's. It reached its highest membership figures, with an estimated membership of 5 million people, who had the ability to elect mayors, city councilmen, state legislators and members of Congress. They were a major force in the whole of this nation.

The 20's were a time of upheaval also. Men came home from the First World War with little hope in sight for easy employment. In 1917 the first socialist revolution took place in Russia, where the ruling class was roundly defeated and the people took over the reigns of government. Workers began to organizew unions on a mass scale. Fear of a depression was in the air. The Klan presented itself as a force for stability, and morality. It attacked Blacks, Jews, Catholics "Bolsheviks", and anyone it did not consider to be moral, or "American". It was a fearful time for the capitalist class, especially considering the Russian situation and the increased organization of the workers; and it was a period when large numbers of working people felt overwhelmed and frightened by the large numbers of problems they faced in their lives, economically and socially.

In this setting the Klan unleashed its program of terror. Between 1918 and 1921 twenty-eight Blacks were burned alive. Some of them had just returned from W.W.1 and were murdered in their military uniforms. In 1923 the Grand Dragon of the Indiana Klan was sworn in to his new office before an estimated crowd of 100,000 people. The state of Indiana had 500,000 members at the time. On August 8, 1925, 40,000 Klansmen marched through the streets of Washington D.C., past the Washington Monument. Yes, the Klan had power. But by 1930, due to internal conflicts within the organization and a broadening opposition to its terror by anti-Klan groups, the Klan was on its way out.

In the 1930's the Klan was practically non-existent; it went from its membership in the Regional Black Studies Council meets at Trinity College

The New England Regional Conference of the National Council for Black Studies held a conference Saturday October 4, 1980 at Trinity College in Harford Conneticut. The conference was called to discuss the role of Black Students in Black Studies in the New England Colleges and Universities. The conference was hosted by the Intercultural Studies Program in the Cook Auditorium, Trinity College.

Bari Njiiri and a professor from Boston State College are shown participating in the Black Studies student workshop. Members of the Black Mass Media Group also participatedin the conference held Saturday at Trinity College.

Opening remarks were made by Dr Johnetta Richards, black faculty-member of Trinity College, who was primarily responsible for co-ordianating the conference. The body of students and faculty present were from the University of Massachussetts Amherst and Boston, Hampshire College, Amherst College, Smith College, Boston State College, University of Hartford, Harvard, Brown University, Salem State College, Tuft University, Suffolk University, University of Connecticut, and Trinity College. The conference was divided up into two workshops, one student oriented and one faculty oriented. The workshops were the focus of the conference.

The National Black Studies Council was founded in 1977 and held its first national conference here at U. Mass. Amherst. The present state of Black Studies and Afrikan-Amerikan students is suffering from; lack of interest on the part of University Administrations, a decrease in enrollment of Afrikan-Amerikan students. The goal of this body is to find solutions to remedy the problems of Black Studies; which also mean remedying the problems of Afrikan-Amerikan students and the entire Afrikan, and Afrikan-Amerikan community everywhere.

The next Regional Black Studies Council meets at Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island on February 7, 1981. Brown University will demonstrate the "research to performance" methodology which makes their Black Studies program so unique.

BLACK UNEMPLOYMENT

On the first day, September 15, more than 12,000 turned out for those 75 federal jobs in Baltimore (That's Capitalism, Sept. 24)--and in the next two days the total climbed to 26,200.

Not one of the Black unemployed people of the city knew on the first day that there would be only 75 openings. But after that they knew. And still they kept coming.

It was a stunning dramatization of a major national problem. Federal officials found it incredible; their reaction revealed their ignorance. They had no idea of the magnitude of the problem in Baltimore or anywhere else--for there are no figures this year for Black unemployment in even the biggest cities. There haven't been any figures since the recession began last winter.

The lack of recent estimates for urban areas, in which more than half of Blacks live, belittles and obscures the devastation of their joblessness. The national Black unemployment rates published monthly dilute the acute central city problems, mixing them with the less acute situation in rural areas. This way no local government is confronted with the reality of the situation. And the people are deprived of a potent fact to use in self-defense.

The figures for local minority unemployment that do exist are outdated long before they are published. The figures for 1978, for instance, have yet to be issued, although they are available on microfilm. And even these are fuzy annual averages. Black unemployment averaged 33,000 or about 18 per cent in Baltimore in 1979, for instance. The numbers tell nothing about what happened during the year, nor offer any basis for year-to-year monthly comparisons.

More important, the unemployment rates calculated for Blacks are 25 per cent less reliable than the rates for whites, the Census Bureau official charged with gathering the data told the Guardian. The immediate cause of the unreliability is the smallness of the Black sample. (If 10 per cent of a Black group of 10 and a of white group of 80 are being surveyhed, one Black and eight whites are questioned. Clearly, the results for the Black group are going to be less representative.) The way to fix that is to change the design of the sample, as has been obvious for years.

Now, at the request of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Census Bureau is working to improve reliability by doubling the minority sample. Chief Gregory Russell of the Current Population Survey branch at Census told the Guardian that the new method will reduce the errors by 40 percent." The cost? An inconsequential $5 million. But it won't be effective until 1984--and even then the Black numbers won't be as good as the white.

Meanwhile, there are other more serious problems concerning the quality of the numbers for Blacks. For example, there is the method of acquiring them. All interviews for the monthly survey of households across the country used to be done face-to-face. Now 50-80 percent of the questioning is done by phone. Any adult in the household can provide the answers. So can anyone over 14, according to the National Urban League. And there is the well-known reluctance of some surveyors to knock on ghetto doors. A Howard University professor, who has recently worked with Census takers, suggests that some "Census" material is simply made up.

Responding to that line of questioning, Gary Shapiro, an assistant division chief at

UNITED STATES IS INVADING IRAN

Watching the NBC Nightly News on Saturday, September 27, I heard reported that the American news media was "surprised" at the stiff resistance of the Iranians against the Iraqi invasion. Anyone who has even a superficial knowledge of the socio-political situation in Iraq and Iran would not be "surprised" at the fierce resistance of the Iranian armed forces and the Iranian people in general in defense of the territorial integrity of their land and in defense of Islam. In Iraq there is a military dictatorship which is another splinter of the original Baath (Renaissance) Party while in Iran there is a leadership which inspires the Iranian people via the unadulterated teaching of the holy Qur'an. Islam is a unifying force that rallies the Iranian people in spite of their ethnic diversity around the Imam Ayatullah Ruhullah Khomeini.

On the other hand, the Iraqi regime does not have the popular support that it claims it has among the people in Iraq. About 60 per cent of the Iraqi people are Shiite Muslems. Shiism likeSunnism is an orthodox sect of Islam. Shiism is followed now in theory and practice in Iran. Thus, the Iranian leadership has popular support not only in Iran but in Iraq itself. In spite of the fact that over half of the Iraqi armed forces belong to the Shiite sect of Islam, the Iraqi Sunni regime does not have a wide popular support among the Sunni Muslem Iraqi people and did not send any Shiite soldiers to take part in the Iraqi regime's invasion of Iran.

Moreover, it was reported that many of the Iraqi Sunni soldiers have defected to Iran. Therefore, there is no reason for the American news media to be "surprised" at the stiff resistance of the Iranian people to the Iraqi aggression. On the contrary, one should be surprised if such resistance did not take place.

Prime Minister of Iran, "Rajai" said that "United States is invading Iran through the armsleeve of Suddan Hussein the President of Iraq."

Conspiring with Iraq, the United States is trying to weaken Iran and install again a favorable regime in Iran. But the same people who expunged the American-Shah presence in Iran, are defeating the Iraqi regime and revealing the American conspiracy.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Census, hedged, saying, "Surveys are not a way of getting precise information about any concept that isn't simple--age, or sex, yes but 'employment'...."

Employment? Any young person of 14 could tell the Census surveyor that a person who worked for pay for only one hour is the preceding week was unemployed. But the answer would be wrong. Census counts the person as employed.

And a 14-year-old knows that if someone wants a job but hasn't been able to hunt for work in the last month, the person is unemployed. Wrong again. That person is simply deleted from the labor force, being neither employed, nor, as Census counts it, unemployed,. Census' job is to prettify.

Whatever gains industry might make from a more accurate count of the labor force, including its minority members, might well be offset by the repercussion from more precise revelations about the failure of the system to provide work. So while two national commissions to look at the statistical problems have come and gone, little gets done.

By the way, if the Baltimore unemployment numbers were right, it would have meant that 80 per cent of the city's unemployed Blacks turned out for those 75 jobs. Perhaps that's what happened.

millions down to a few thousand. But how is this so when the 1930's were far worse than the twenties with regards to the severity of the social and economic crisis? After all, the 1930's were the time of the Great Depression and the militant workers struggles. It was a time of great dismay for the bulk of the working people, so why didn't the Klan flourish? Because in the 1930's there was a powerful peoples movement; there were new and powerful labor unions and the mass unemployed councils; most of all, these movements were founded on a program of eliminating racism, of preaching the need for the unity of Black and white. The 1930's was a time of great organizing in the South by Communist and other left forces to fight the remnants of the Klan and the still existent racist forces.

The 1960's shows a similar history to the 1930's in the turbulent 60's the Klan attempted to mount o mass movement. As always, it was violent and dangerous. But, as in the 1930's, public opinion turned against the Klan to the point where some Klansmen were actually prosecuted and sent to jail.

What does this history show? Simply put, it shows that there is no necessity for the Klan to flourish in times of social crisis, although this is a necessary condition. Rather, in times of economic and social crisis, if there mass pro-people, anti-racist movement, it shows that the Klan will have no ground on which to take a stand. In other words, it will have been eliminated!

What does this history tell us about the crisis-ridden eighties? It says that there is a possibility for the Klan to exert a major influence in this country. It also tells us, however, that we can take the air out of the Klan wind, that we can stop it in its tracks if we are united, Black and white, Catholic and Jew.

Popular opinion has not shifted to the chauvinist-reactionary side of the spectrum. Although there are grave dangers ahead there is also a substantial fightback movement developing, not only against the Klan but also against Exxon, Mobil, etc..There is also a broad movement of people advocating a pro-people, anti-monopoly Third Party alternative. We are in a time of uncertainty and rapid change. We can affect its direction . We must organize and be united against the real enemies of the people. Let us not mistake white people as the cause of racism. Racism is a pillar upon which this capitalist society is based; it is part of the recipe which makes capitalism what it is. Thus, we must always fight the growth of extreme racist elements since the strong possibility of their growth is deeply imbedded in the structure of capitalist society itslef.

We must begin a movement to outlaw the Klan! And once we have that achieved, we must maintain the movement so that such laws are enforced. They will only be enforced if there is mass pressure developed to ensure their enforcement, since the outlawing of a group like the Klan which excists to divide white and Black people, and all other working people, is not in the interest of Exxon, Jimmy Carter, or the Trilateral Commission. . if we achieve this we will be well on our way to making the government one which "Puts people before Profits".

DU BOIS AND AFRICA

The workshop "DuBois and Africa" featured an international panel consisting of Dr. Amatei Akuete of Ghana, Dr. John Henrik Clarke of New York, and Dr. E.S. Reddy of India. In the presence of reporters, professors, and friends of the late Dr. W.E.B. DuBois these internationally reknowned scholars presented historical and personal accounts of the Du Bois' interaction with Africa.

Dr. Akuete, Minister and Deputy chief of Mission at the Embassy of Ghana in Washington,DC opened the discussion with an outline of DuBois interest in Pan-Africanism. DuBois felt that the Afrikan territory should be emancipated and unified, and to this end he organized five Pan-Afrikan Congresses. Dr. Akuete cited DuBois long and fruitful friendship with the first president of Ghana, the late Kwame Nkrumah. Dr. Akuete also praised DuBois for turning the world's attention to Afrika and his ability to forsee more than three-fourths of a century earlier, the realities of today. DuBois is said to have hypothesized about Africa being the site of the Third World War (or World War III) if external European forces continue misusing and abusing the continent. "African unity", Akuete stressed, "is dependent upon her escape from foreign domination."

Dr John Henrik Clarke, head of Afro-American and Puerto Rican Studies at Hunter College, continued the discussion by focusing on The Sixth Pan-African Congress, convened in Manchester England in 1945. Dr. Clarke emphasized the importance of that congress because up until that time, The Pan-Afrikan Movement had been a predominantly an American movement, but declarations which came out of the Sixth Congress came from Kwame Nkrumah, DuBois, George Padmore, and Jomo Kenyatta, which made it a truly Pan-Afrikan movement. Working committees were also set up at the time to implement proposals (unions, cooperatives, etc.) to spur self-determination of the then colonized peoples. The participants understood then that they had a formidable task ahead of them and Kuame Nkrumah indicated this twelve years later (1957) when Ghana gained its independence by saying "Ghana independence is nothing without total Afrikan independence".

Dr. Clarke paid high tribute to DuBois by stating "In Afrikan traditions, the dead is never dead, DuBois has simply been transformed from one form of life to another...though he may be physically removed from this earth his spirit and works are very much alive."

Dr. E.S. Reddy, Director of the Center Against Apartheid at the United Nations spoke briefly on his personal involvement with DuBois, the human rights aativist. He commented on DuBois dedication to the pursuit of human rights for all the world's oppressed people. DuBois deplored racism and continually reiterated the destructiveness of "that dreaded disease." DuBois prophesized that,"the problem of the twentieth century is the problem of the color line" and he worked relentlessly to dispell racist myths and ideologies which served to oppress three-fourths of the world's population. Dr. Reddy emphasized the link between racism and worldwide economic repression, he also stressed the importance of the struggle as an ongoing process which does not end with the attainment of formal freedom. Dr. Reddy proclaimed this to be the decade for action.

NEWS BRIEFS

Uganda Elections Delayed

Scheduled elections in Uganda have been put off from Sept. 30 until at least the end of the year, following a conflict within the governing coalition that has left supporters of former president Milton Obote in effective control.

Last week the ruling Military Commission ordered 11 cabinet ministers and deputy ministers to resign after they refused to support a proposed measure in the country's interim parliament, the National Consulative Council. The measure would have expanded the number of constituencies in the upcoming election.

The 11 belong to the Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM) and the Democratic Party(DP), rivals of Obote's Uganda People's Congress Party. According to the general secretary of the DP, the party fears the proposed expansion could lead to possible gerry mandering and unfair advantages for Obote's party, Africa News reports.

Following the ministers' ouster, members of the DP and UPM boycotted the consultative council session, leaving only Obote's supporters to vote on the controversial proposal.

The Military Commission seized power in a bloodless coup last May. Its leaders are said to be close to Obote's party. The DP and UPM have formed a united front to oppose the firing of their cabinet ministers and have threatened to end their cooperation with the commission if it's decision is not reversed.

Meanwhile, political violence is reportedly rising. Leaders of opposing parties have accused one another of using armed thugs to break up campaign meetings and intimidate voters. These charges occur amid continuation of the widespread violence that has plagued the country since the overthrow of dictator Idi Amin last year.

ISREAL VIOLATES LAWS

TEL AVIV (Occupied Palestine) -- Israel is still violating United States law by using U.S. supplied weapons to attack Palestinian freedom-fighters in Lebanon. By law, Israel is supposed to use the weapons only for defensive purposes.

William Brown, the deputy chief of mission in Tel Aviv, met recently with Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Modecai Zippori to discuss the issue. "It's a situation we're looking at," one U.S. official said. "The law says it must be done."

Israel used an American made plane to shoot down a Syrian MIG over Lebanon in late August.

Ephraim Evron, the Israeli ambassador to the U.S., had admitted that U.S. weapons were used in an Aug. 19 assault on Palestinian freedom-fighters in Lebanon.

Repression and Exploitation in the Philippines

Richard Mei, Jr. and Judy Kim

The Philippines are a large group of islands in the South Pacific and is over 10,000 miles from the continental U.S.A. Despite the great distance, it has been deeply scarred by the effects of American colonialism since the turn of the century.

A BRIEF HISTORY

In 1521, the Philippines was "discovered" by the explorer Ferdinand Magellan who named the islands after his king, Philip II. Ever since, the people's past accomplishments and right to self-determination has in effect been denied by centuries of colonialism by the Spanish, Americans and the Japonese.

When the U.S. defeated Spain in the Spanish-American War in 1898, the U.S. purchased the Philippines for $20 million in order to establish a Pacific naval base. Although our history books tell us of our easy and quick victory over Spain within months, they fail to elaborate on the seven year war (dubbed an insurrection) between American soldiers and Philippino freedom fighters. American history ignores the atrocities committed (600,000 Philippino people killed-nearly 10 per cent of the population) and the fact that 126,000 American G.I.'s fought over 3,000 battles.

During World War II, Philippinos fought in the forefront to defeat their latest invaders, the Japonese. As an expression of gratitude, the U.S. granted "independence" to the Philippines on July 4, 1946. However, there were two conditions: 1-that the U.S. maintain rights to natural resources and 2-U.S. military bases would remain for 99 years.

FREEDOM ?

Last week, Charito Planas, an exiled Philippino defender of human rights, spoke twice in the Five-College area. At her talks at Mount Holyoke College and at UMass, she explained the colonial mentality that persists and is promoted by the self-serving Marcos regime.

Ferdinand Marcos, America's lackey in the Philippines has not only ignored the national integrity of his own people but is exacerbating their impoaverished conditions while only making himself richer and richer.

Ms. Planas explained that when she was in high school, students were fined for speaking their native language (Tatlog, a mixture of Spanish and a native Malayan dialect). The Philippines became a market for American products at much higher prices in addition to being o supplier of cheap labor and raw materials. The Philippines became like a miniature version of the United States in the South Pacific.

The wealth of the country is being sucked out of the country by the American multi-nationals and the few rich Philippine families that benefit from them. According to Ms. Planas, "the Philippines have the most beautiful hotels in the world. Visitors to our country are amazed by the clean streets and the air-conditioned buses that run through the cities. But many of them don't know that 80 per cent of our children suffer from malnutrition and 30 per cent of our people lack homes...only 5 per cent of the popupation receives 34 per cent of the national income while 40 per cent receive only 11 per cent ". President Marcos, she explains, is the prime exploiter of the people. "Can you imagine o leader who advertises the cheapest labor in Asio-$1.50 UMass, she explained the colonial mentality that persists and is promoted by the self-serving Marcos regime.

MARTIAL LAW

When Marcos' term as President was about to terminate in 1972 and he could no longer be President, he declared martial law, with the consent of the Nixon administration. The new consitution declared Marcos dictator for life and he is now preparing for a dynasty not unlike the Shah and Somoza. Under marial law, anyone can be arrested for no reason at all. Under martial law, the Philippines, according to Amnesty International has become one of the top ten violators of human rights in the world. Under martial law, Marcos has made business transactions, not on the country's behalf, but for his own.

Recently when a nuclear plant was built in the Philppines, Marcos earned a commission of $35 million. As a result, he has become the richest man in Asia while his wife is one of the ten richest women in the world.

Under Marcos, the Philippines is now militarily and economically dependent upon the U. S. The American bases in the Philippines that were used to launch the B-52's on bombing missions to Vietnam, harbored the aircraft carriers that sailed to Iran and continues to store American nuclear weapons,which leaves the country in o very vulnerable position should a large-scale war ever break out or a nuclear accident occur.

President "human rights" Carter has ignored the thousands of political prisoners held in concentration camps while increasing military aid to the repressive Marcos regime by 138 to preserve America's security interests.

Ms. Planas, who was jailed for speaking against the government and has now been in political exile for two years, says that opposition to the government is "growing by leaps and bounds." According to her, Marcos' days are numbered, "the people will overthrow the government and have their own self-determination". The U. S., she warns has not learned its lessons from Iran, Nicaragua and Vietnam.

She tells America, the best way to maintain their national security is to respect the self-determination of other countries. National security cannot be maintained by supporting unpopular repressive and exploitive regimes.

Asian Stereotypes

Yat Man

Most people are unaware of the history of racism and oppression that Asian people have experienced in America. Discrimination against Asians began in 1848 with the arrival of the first immigrants - the Chinese, and it persists today. The media, for political, economic and social reasons have often developed and reenforced stereotypes that perpetuate prejudice against Asians. This distortion has greatly damaged the image of Asian-Americans.

During the mid to late 19th century the "Yellow Peril" movement began, culminating with the passage of the Chinese Exclusion Act by Congress (in 1888) followed by additional exclusionary and racist acts. By the 1930's the Fu Manchu syndrome was created. Fu Monchu, the most insulting of all Asian stereotypes, was depicted as "the arch villain whose lust was only exceeded by his sadism". With razor sharp fingernails, sinister looks and a needle-like mustache, Fu Manchu challenged heroic white men and the virginity of white women. This "Oriental" character was introduced to increase public antagonism toward Asians.

Therefore, with public support, the government was justified in excluding the Chinese from the United States.

Similarly, the "banzai syndrome", which was created during World War II through comic books and propaganda provided the clearest example of how the media used stereotypes to foster blind patriotism. The enemy, whether Japanese, North Korean or German, is characterized as cruel or deformed. For example, one comic characterized a squinty-eyed, short, bucktootehed Japanese soldier jumping into machine gun fire and yelling "banzai". These comics leave the reader with the impression that Asian life is cheap.

Cold war comics, produced during the Korean and Viet Nam Wars, served a slightly different function. They were employed to create distorted images of Asia, which perpetuated an anti-Asian climate favorable to U.S. military intervention. Comics like Steve Canyon and the Dragon Lady pictured Asia as o land of opium dens where lives are of little value. Consequently, the atrocities committed at My Lai by American soldiers was bypassed and practically ignored by the American public.

If Asian men are portrayed as retarded, sadistic or bucktoothed, then Asion women are docile or slinky and exotic, with a desire for white men. The Suzy Wong and Dragon Lady characters describe Asian women as an object or commodity, not as a person with feelings, talents and ideas. After World War II Asian women, especially Japanese women, were viewed by Americans as "perfect wives" and excellent homemakers possessing male pleasing attributes and wifely virtues. Another illogical belief is that Asian women are obedient, quiet and faithful. These images have severly impoired the social and intellectual growth of Asian-American women. Of course, I realize that there are some women who fit those images but many others have advanced to occupations and professional schools which require more aggressive behavior.

In recent years, the mass media has given in to pressures of Black people but continue to exploit the stereotype of the "Oriental". To illustrate this point, take the "Kung Fu" series. The idea was developed by the late martial artist Bruce Lee but the lead role of a Chinese hero was not played by Mr. Lee, a Chinese-American, but by David Carridine, an American novice at martial arts. I was puzzled to see a non-Asian actor portraying an Asian role. This was not the first time, either. Are Asians so dull that they are not capable of portraying their own roles ? it's a terrible waste and a crime against the human spirit fo see a the media mold an ethnic group to fit a stereotype.

Who is a Real American ?

Henry Jung

When a Japanese, Vietnamese or Iranian student says he is dating an American girl (woman ?), you can be pretty certain that she will not be Afrikan-American, Hispanic or Native American, but white. Asians (U.S. or foreign-born) in this country have an extremely common, but rather strange habit of referring to white people (of European descent) as Americans as though the two terms were of identical meaning. In effect, a black person whose ancestors were here 400 years ago is not regarded as American, but merely as black, but an exchange student fresh from Denmark is an American !!

Perhaps this may be an insignificant semantical issue or a critical cultural product of neo-colonial conditioning. If it is the later, then some frank dialogue is needed. The non-recognition of third world people in this country as Americans has some serious political implications. You may recall the massive incarceration of Japanese-Americans during World War II.

Hopetully Asians on this campus will consider this point. Pressured on many sides by peers, schools and the mass media upholding Western (European-American) standards as better than their own, Asian-Americans are often placed in situations of great culture-conflict which may lead to much pain and anger. For example, polite restraint of powerful feelings is highly regarded in most Asian cultures. In contrast, modern Euro-American culture sees a person exhibiting this quality as inhibited, repressed or phony. Being thus forced to label such values as automatically negative, many Asian-Americans become frustrated about how they should behave. Thus confusing being American with being white (European).

Black Housing Dilemma: A Racial Issue

Blacks are wondering excatly where they belong these days. In their neighborhoods escalating crime, the easy flow of drugs, poor housing conditions, police abuse and indifference plus inferior education programs and standards for their children has driven them to explore the suburbs for a better life. Once there, they are welcomed by their white neighbors with fire bombings and vandalism of their homes. Fed up, many return to their old neighborhoods only to find that their formerly burned-out, abandoned-building littered environment has been replaced with fancy townhouses and family brownstones and the residents are white, not the Blacks that they left behind. Not welcomed in the suburbs and displaced from the ghetto, Blacks are seriously wondering just where they are supposed to go and if they're doomed to live in an inferior way in this country forever.

Reversing trends of the last three decades, whites are fighting hard to escape escalating costs of mortgages, oil, taxes, and the growing influx of Blacks moving to suburbia. They are taking advantage of Government programs and are rehabilitating older city housing at the expense of the poor, elderly and oppressed minorities.

A survey conducted by the National Urban Coalition showed that in most of the 44 cities and 65 neighborhoods surveyed, the number of low-income,elderly and minority group residents decreased after the area was rehabilitated. While the poor nad the disadvantaged are being transported form one hell-hole to another, middle-income Blacks are leaving only to return to find white havens of townhouses and brown-stones from which they are excluded.

For a time many belaived that most Blacks were too poor to live any where else but the urine stenched building and public housing projects characteristic of the ghetto. But another study undertaken by the Regional Plan Association found that bias is the biggest enemy of Blacks and is responsible for two thirds of Blacks in the metropolitan areas of New York, being crammed into five major ghettos; central Brooklyn, Harlem, the South Bronx, Newark and southeast Queens; and remain confined ther primarily because of housing discrimination rother than their income.

The study further stated that there has been very little progress in the fight against housing discrimination since 1970 when two thirds of all white residents lived in virtually all-white census tracts and nearly two thirds of the black population lived in heavily black census tracts. These black households were confined to neighborhoods covering little more than one percent of the region's land.

It is apparent that if current trends continue, communities like Harlem will take on a new face, to the disadvantaged minorities who reside in the inner-cities. While white areas are referred to as a neighborhood, Black areas are called ghettos, a vast deteriorated wasteland jungle breeding ground for crime and disease. Current high rates of unemployment,shortages of health and social programs, housing based on discriminatory lines, these all add up to a negative zero, for the blacks and minorities with no where to go. There has been too little effort in instilling pride into these areas as a result anger, against a system that does nothing, is reaching an exploding point. If nothing is done, America will soon learn the meaning of what goes round comes round.

On September 12 , 1978, the United Nations approved Resolution 1514 which declares the island of Puerto Rico a colony of the United States, known as the Commonwealth status established in 1952.

Historically the Carribbean Islands have moved against imperialism at different rates and on different levels.

During the seventeenth century the bellicose Spanish kingdom was losing the control over it's possesions in the New World and this brought other European empires to search for economical interests in the area.

On 1898 the North Atlantic troops decided to invade and take over in order to protect their future interests from an strategic position that the Carribean Islands proved to be.

This marks the beginning of the new empire's oppression andintervention in economical and political development in Latin America.

After the invasion of the 25th of July 1898, in Puerto Rico , exmilitaries were named governors in order to study the geography and situation of the country to establish naval bases.The Puerto Ricans were never consulted on selling or giving their for military purposes, a handful of leaders, for personal interests and positions agreed with military personnel in expropiating the inhabitants to establish, "Roosevelt Roads: the big and unique Naval Station supporting the world's best weapon Training Complex". The installment of this "Complex" that carried the president's name, and the parade of ex-military personnel that governedthe island during the first decades of this century brought the population to protest against U.S. intervention. Leaders were jailed and people were killed during demonstrations.

With the true defenders of the nation's interests jailed in U.S. prisons the government started to design what now is called the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, supported by leaders that became traitors of a population that trusted them asadvocates of national rights and interests.

Today national liberation struggles throughout our hemisphere are leading to the destruction of U.S. Imperialism. Within the borders of U.S. it is the struggle of Blacks, Native Americans, Chicano-Mexicans, and Puerto Ricans that are leading in this struggle..

In Puerto Rico The fisherman of the Municipal Island of Vieques have stopped the Navy maneuvers confronting them during their shore bombardments.

Vieques, located southeast of the "Isla Grande" (Puerto Rico), is 20 miles long and 4 in width.

Expropiated of 26 thousand of their 33 thousand acres of land, some elder citizens of Vieques, still recall with agony the occasion when they were put into trucks with the possesions they could carry after receiving notes that in 24 hours their homes would be towed with bulldozers.

Occupying less then one-quarter of their land, the Viequenses have lived in war for more than 38 years. Their existence has been continuously sorrounded by bombs and naval restrictions.

U.S. Out of Vieques and the Caribbean!

By Zulma Nazario

The navy uses the land in Vieques for: weapon training, air craft weapons firing, shore bombardment, missile launching excercies, ground force attacks, amphibious landing and ammunition storage.

A study of the Mental Health Commission of the government of P.R. (74-76) declares that the population lives under stress and mental illness is high in comparision with the "Isla Grande".

Also the Division of Environmental Studies of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in 1972 declared that the island must depend mostly upon development of it's agricultural, fishing, and recreational resources and these are limited by presence of the Marine and their operations that are destroying the island's delicate ecological system.

Worst of all it is violating the most basic laws of human rights. Many have been the Viequenses that have found death because of the irresponsibility and lack of respect of marines who are occupying their land..

The Secretary of the Navy declares that they don't know how many targets they miss or where; the transporting of explosives is done through "civil" area; there are tons of ammunitions buried under earth and sea.

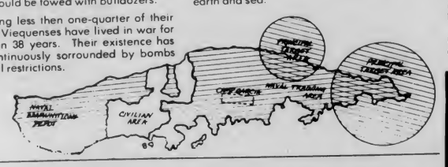
The media denounces the the struggle in Vieques as mostly a political issue raised by leftists parties, but the Viequenses, specially the fishermen with their leader Carlos Zenon are the vanguards.

For the Atlantic Fleet this island is of such strategic and geographical importance that as an alternative they study the possibility to build another island in the Carribean; but their study prove it would be cheaper to move all the Viequenses then to construct their playground. The Viequenses will not leave their island and this have been proved.

The Navy is violating many lawss, and while there is a 65 of Viequenses on Food Stamps and a very high percent of unemployment, the U.S. rents their waters and territories for $1,200 per hour to countries like Canada, Venezuela, Brazil and others.

Against the Congress of U.S., the government of P.R. the Viequenses and against other people that are oppressed by the white imperialism,the Secretaries of the Navy throughout the years of legal court battles have only pointed out that AVieques is necesarry for national defense nd this national defence for Viequenses, and all our brothers and sisters commonly oppressed by U.S. imperialism sounds as incoherent as the so much mentioned Human Rights.

U.S. Navy out of Vieques and the Carribean!



The United States Fears the Puerto Rican People

By Taleb Bizri

Puerto Rico was taken over by the United States by force of arms. This action was subsequently ratified by the Treaty of Paris in 1898. As a result Puerto Rico is a colony of the United States.

When the United States took over Puerto Rico, which was "discovered" by Columbus in 1493, and which was under the jurisdiction of Spain until 1898, the Puerto Rican people had won over from Spain, through centuries of struggle, anautonomous charter which guaranteed the people substantial sovereignty. Under that charter the people of Puerto Rico had complete home rule, and besides had the power of making their own luws and of entering into commercial trade agreements with other countries. The autonomous charter could not be revoked or amended but on the petition of the Puerto Rican Parliament.

The United States substituted for the autonomous government which the Puerto Ricans had won over from Spain, a colonial form of government. Puerto Rico, according to the United States' Supreme Court, "belongs to but does not form part of the United States." The government of Puerto Rico is organized under an organic act passed by the U.S. Congress, The Jones Act, which can be amended or annulled by the U.S. without consulting the people of Puerto Rico.

The U.S. can tax the Puerto Rican people at the same time the U.S. corporations and businesses are exempted from paying taxes. Moreover, the U.S. has the power to send the Puerto Ricans to three wars to fight for the benefit of the U.S. and against other people in the world. In the second World War over 500,000 Puerto Ricans were drafted and 80,000 were actually under-armed and poorly trained. In VietNam, Puerto Ricans were drafted against their will to kill the people of VietNam. But when the Puerto Rican people have shown an anger against Carter's original decision to send 5,000 Cuban and Haitian refugees to Puerto Rico, the U.S. government has succumbed to the will of the Puerto Rican people and reduced the number of the refugees to 2,000 instead of 5,000.

The U.S. government has feared the anger of the Pueto Rican people. In spite of the Puerto Rican Governor Carlos Romero Barcelo's protection of the U.S. interest in sending the refugees to Puerto Rico, he said "Puerto Rico has to take the responsibility of it's share in admitting the refugees to Puerto Rico."

But the governor of Puerto Rico and his masters have forgotten that this is the era of liberation and people's right for self-determination. The Puerto Rican people,along with all the oppressed in the world, will have freedom only by unity and struggle

Novedades de Puerto Rico

En las últimas semanas han estado ocurriendo unos sucesos importantes que marcaran la trayectoria del futuro inmediato de Puerto Rico. La represión del gobierno esta dando golpes por doquier para tratar de contener el desarrollo de la lucha de liberación, y mantnerse en el poder para llevar a cabo sus nefastos planes de anexación de Borinquen. Uno de los sucesos es que con toda intención esconden los vínculos del crimen organizado (organigrama), con personas en el poder. Ejemplo de esto es el nuevo caso del fiscal Calderón en Mayaguez.

Sacaron a la luz público los nombres de 24 supuestos sospechosos del suceso de Sabana Seca donde murieron 2 marinos yankees. Ya hay dos asesinados, tres desaparesidos,y cuatro o cinco que han sido arrestados por otras varias razones que varian desde casos por drogas hasta casos de armas y conspiración. Es obvio que todos son casos fabricados,pero que esto hara sufrir mucho a los compañeros. Un ejemplo de la fuerza que están utilizando,es que le han echado treinta años de presidio en ugn carcel de los EU a un compañero por un caso de drogas. TREINTA ANOS!

Pero lo mas importante que esta ocuriendo es la investigación de los sucesos de Cerro Marravilla. Luego que el lacayo asalariado de Júlio Cesar Andrades decidió cambiar su versión de los sucesos, el "gobernador" Romero dio orden de callarlo a como de lugar. Trataron de comprarlo a traves de un acaudalado comerciante del area oeste, ya que los intentos de su 'amigo' Luis Enrique "Quique" Sanchez fueron infructuosos. Ahora todos los policias envueltos en la matanza estan dudando de si siguen manteniendo el silencio,o si abren el pico para tratar de librarse del caso ellos.

Andrades sabe que su vida peligra por eso solo quiere ir a declarar ante los investigadores federales, y se ha asegurado contando lo ocurido tanto a adversarios políticos como Luis Enrique Arraras. Como a su angel guardian el teniente Gonzalez(Angel David) Romero y su cuadrilla, entienden que de declarar Andrades ellos perderan no solo las elecciones de noviembre,sino que quedaran expuestos a procesamientos legales. Dudamos que vayan a presidio, pero esto seria un rudo golpe a las lacayos piti-yankis y al movimiento anexionista en la isla.

Tenemos que estar atentos a estos sucesos para hacer presión cuando sea necesario, apoyando asi a los compañeros que trabajan en la patria por su liberación. Esperemos que en nombre de Rosado y Soto Arrivl el Cerro Maravilla sea...una maravilla.

Halloween
CC closed down

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty confirmed last night the administration's decision to close the Campus Center and Student Union complex on both Friday and Saturday night of the upcoming Halloween weekend.

Beatty said the complete details of the closing are undecided but that there will be accessibility for those staying at the Campus Center Hotel and attending functions during the weekend. Those accessible entrances will probably be guarded by security forces undetermined as of last night, said Beatty.

In addition to the closing, Beatty said the administration will adopt the previous recommendations of the Residential Committee that were presented last week. The committee of students and staff recommended the following action:

— imposition of a no—guest policy in the residence halls
— prohibition of open parties for the weekend
— provision of extra uniformed and student security —transfer of trash dumpsters to heavily travelled parts of campus
— support for proposed clean-up operation Friday and Saturday nights.

Brian Harvey, assistant to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Residential Committee member said the administration is acting well in advance so that there will be "no surprises for students when this is carried out. We have had strong support from area government leaders on this and I think they sense the importance that we turn around this trend of violence and destruction."

Harvey said that he has been at the University for eight years and that in the past two years the ritual clogging of the Campus Center has become "just too dangerous."

"I remember last year when people were just lining up linking arms and stampeding the crowds," Harvey said. "One woman broke her ankle but we were really lucky someone wasn't killed," he said.

Harvey cited statistics of increased arrests and persons taken into protective custody but said that the real problem in the past has come from non-students that "wander on campus looking for somewhere to go and make trouble." "With these policies," he continued, "we hope to give these people nowhere to go, to turn them around and get them to leave and eliminate a lot of trouble.

Harvey also mentioned the "negative media attention" that has resulted from past destruction and melee on Halloween weekend, in particular the nationally-aired Paul Harvey radio program. "It's one thing we need less of here," he said.

SGA will investigate lack of supply receipts

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Treasurer is investigating Student Senate Speaker Linda Geary for possible misappropriation of student funds.

SGA Treasurer Al Wallace said yesterday he is conducting the investigation because Geary has not provided receipts for over $100 spent in supplies for the striking Amherst Nursing Home workers.

Wallace also said people who bought the supplies were not authorized to do so and some supplies that were reusable after the strike ended have not been accounted for.

On Sept. 24 the Student Senate, in support of 60 striking workers at the Amherst Nursing Home, allocated $300 to provide materials to make picket signs. The strike ended four days after the money was allocated and only $102 was spent on the supplies.

Wallace said he believes some of the money may possibly have been used instead to print leaflets supporting the Progressive Student Alliance, a recently formed group that is running over 20 candidates in the current Senate elections. He said he does not know how PSA members paid for the leaflets but said he had "serious questions" about the money because Geary could not supply receipts.

The $198 not spent was put back into the Senate's operating budget, Geary said.

Wallace said he would approach Student Attorney General Dana Collier to request judicial action if Geary did not produce receipts.

Geary, who said she did not have receipts for the materials because Wallace had not requested them, said "I've used plenty of P.O.'s (purchase orders) in the past and not needed receipts."

Wallace said it is common practice for all people using senate purchase orders to retain receipts so the supplies can be accounted for.

At the Sept. 24 senate meeting, another $170 was allocated to videotape picket line confrontations. Wallace said that all of that money has been accounted for.

Wallace also said the senate's mimeograph machine had been used by PSA members to print some of the leaflets even though only members of a Recognized Student Organization can use the machine. The PSA is not an RSO group. But Geary and her assistant Joel Weissman said although PSA leaflets had been printed on the senate machine it was avaible to the general public provided each person or group uses their own paper and ink.

Weissman, who is a PSA member, said the group raised most of the money for the leaflets out of their own pockets. He said some of the material used was borrowed from the Radical Student Union.

He said other leaflets were printed in the Graduate Sentate Office at a cost of $1.50 for 500 copies.

Ziomek reviews water shortage

By SARAH ROLL
Collegian Correspondent

Stanley Ziomek, superintendent of the Amherst Department of Public Works said at last night selectman's meeting the cause for the current water shortage was the unprecedented nature of the crisis.

Ziomek said that the 5.8 million gallons per day draw on the water supply in the town caused the sudden shortage in early September.

"The shortage we had in 1978 was the result of the Pelham reservoir going dry. This year we did not expect two days of high demand for water. We had all the pumping equipment available, but during Sept. 2 and 3 with the drought conditions it was impossible to keep up with the demand," Thomas C. Couture, an engineer from Tighe and Bonds Consulting Engineers said.

A report presented to the selectmen by Ziomek stated four possible methods that might have prevented the recent shortage.

- The Pelham pumping station could have been put on high speed, but he said that this would not have been sufficient to keep up with the demand.
- If the Meadow Street connection with the town of Hadley had been available on Sept. 4, the shortage would have simply been delayed, he said.
- Closing the valve at the Village Park and Bay Road storage tanks would not have prevented the shortage. Normal heavy use of water between 6 and 9 a.m. Sept. 4 would have drained all of the available supply and storage in the East Pleasant St. storage tanks.

"Sticker campaign" raises questions of legality

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The election for commuters seats in the Undergraduate Student Senate heated up yesterday when 30 candidates, running as an un-named coalition, began issuing stickers bearing their names and urging students to vote for them as a block.

The 30 candidates, including 21 already on the ballot and another nine who are write-in candidates, apparently banded together in response to another coalition, the Progressive Student Alliance, which formed about two weeks ago.

Soon after the stickers began appearing yesterday morning PSA members and others began questioning their legality.

Student Government Association Attorney General Dana Collier said the stickers are legal, providing voters also check off the names of the candidates on the stickers.

"The stickers clearly have to have marks on them," Collier said. "It is of my opinion that whether the stickers had marks on them ahead of time or not, it's up to the students to decide whether or not they're going to use them."

But Senator Joel Weissman, who is running on the PSA ticket, questioned the legality of providing stickers containing the names of candidates who already appear on the ballot. According to a state statute governing state elections, Weissman said, candidates who appear on the ballot can not be voted for through a sticker campaign.

"There are 20 names that appear on the ballot that are in violation of state law, Chapter 54, Section 78," Weissman said. "People should be told that when cast a sticker vote, their vote may possibly be invalidated. There's probably more than a good chance that that may happen."

Collier rejected Weissman's contention, saying SGA elections are not subject to state laws, but she said she would investigate the claim.

Diane Mueller, Senate Governmental Affairs Committee chair said she may invalidate the election if the sticker campaign proves to be illegal. She also said some question has been raised as to the proximity of campaigners to the ballot boxes. According to SGA election rules, all campaigning must be conducted out of sight of the ballot boxes, she said.

Mueller said the ballot boxes were picked up by UMass police officers following close of yesterday's balloting and stored in the police station in Dickinson Hall overnight. The boxes were scheduled to be distributed this morning by police officers and picked up again at the close of balloting at 6 p.m. today. The ballots will then be brought to

Twins add to Kennedy line

BOSTON—Sheila Rauch Kennedy, wife of Joseph P. Kennedy II, was reported resting comfortably yesterday after giving birth to twin boys during the weekend.

The babies were born at 9:34 p.m. and 9:42 p.m. Saturday at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

Kennedy was "somewhat tired but doing fine," hospital spokesman Jim King said.

The infants will be named Joseph P. III and Matthew Rauch, he said.

Post-Vietnam boredom spurs smuggling

BOSTON (AP) — A federal judge yesterday delayed sentencing for a decorated Army helicopter pilot who unsuccessfully argued he was forced to seek thrills through drug smuggling because of his Vietnam War combat experiences.

U.S. District Judge Walter Jay Skinner said he had not yet received a pre-sentencing report on defendant Peter L. Krutschewski. He tentatively rescheduled sentencing for Wednesday.

Krutschewski, 35, of Lansing, Mich., was convicted Sept. 10 on four counts of helping to import 26 tons of marijuana from Colombia to Gloucester, Mass., in 1975.

He admitted taking part in the smuggling operation, but said his two combat tours of Vietnam, during which he won the Bronze Star and other med als, forced him to seek excitement in later life.

Soviet intrusion sparks China's wrath

PEKING (AP) — Four armed Soviet intruders crossed into Chinese Mongolia, killed a herdsman and then began a firefight with Chinese border guards in which one of the Soviets was killed, the Chinese Foreign Ministry said yesterday. It was the first China-Soviet border incident reported in more than a year.

China lodged a "strong protest" with the Soviet Union over Sunday's incident, which Peking said began when the intruders crossed the Argun Riv er into Inner Mongolia and tried to abduct a Chinese herdsman. The herdsman, identified as Li Zhong, resisted and was killed and the Soviets opened fire on Chinese frontier guards who had rushed to the scene, the protest note said.

It said the Chinese fired back in self-defense, killing one So viet intruder inside China, and the three others escaped in their motorboat back to Soviet territory.

The Chinese protest, delivered to interim Soviet Charge d'Affaires G.V. Kireev, declared, "In disregard of the repeated warnings of the Chinese side, the Soviet authorities now have created another incident of bloodshed along the Sino-Soviet border, killing a Chinese and encroaching on China's territorial sovereignty.

Supreme court supports NOW boycott

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court yesterday allowed a feminist-inspired boycott to continue against those states that have not yet ratified the Equal Rights Amendment.

Iraq strikes at Tehran but port is still the target

By STEVE K. HINDY

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi warplanes bambed Tehran yesterday and the Iranian radio said the raid killed three people and waunded 65. A British correspondent reported from the battlefront that Iraqis had captured Khorramshahr, but the Iranians claimed they remained "in full contral" of the part city. Iraqi forces continued to shell Khorramshahr and the oil refining center of Abadan, both in the southern sector of the front in the war launched by Iraq two weeks ago.

Mastafa Chamran, a former Iranian defense minister, reportedly told a news canference in Ahwaz, a third city under at tack by Iraqis, that Iraq had thrawn 10 divisions, with a tatal of 100,000 men, into its in vasion of Iran.

The Iranian news agency Pars quoted him as saying two divisions were destroyed in "the last two days of fighting" in the Ahwaz area. Ahwaz is the capital of the oil-rich Khuzistan province.

Iran has 200,000 men under arms, said Chamran, who was defense minister in the first post-revolutianary government in Iran after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini ousted the late Shah Mahammad Reza Pahlavi's regime in February 1979.

Both Tehran radio and Pars denied reports that Iraqi forces had gained control of Khor ramshahr, an important port north of Abadan on the disputed Shatt al-Arab border waterway. British Broadcasting Corp. Carespondent Christopher Morris reported Iraqis drove Iranian defenders from their positians in fierce house-to-house fighting. He said there still was sporadic shelling and firing an the southern outskirts of the town.

"The city is under the control of the Iranian armed forces and the Iraqi aggressive mercenaries have been forced to withdraw," Pars said. Iraq has claimed a number of times in the past 10 days that its troops had captured Khorramshahr. Each time, Iran denied the claim.

The Iraqi news agency carried a dispatch fram Khorramshahr saying "the heroes of the battle are loftily standing" in the city and its port. It said Iraqi forces were rendering various services to the people of the area.

Iraq's news agency said Iraqi planes raided Tehran in retaliation for Iranian raids on civilian targets in Iraq. Baghdad radio said Iranian jets bombed civilian targets near the cities of Kirkuk, Hajomran, Amara and Iftikhar. Iran denied its bombers raided civilian areas of Iraq.

An Iranian who spoke with The Associated Press by telephone said "heavy explosions" were heard in the vicinity of the Tehran airport. Tehran radio reported that the Iraqi planes dropped paper handkerchiefs, toys and dolls and warned citizens not to handle them because they might contain explosives. It gave no details on how the casualties occurred.

Abortion debate continues

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The U.S. First Curcuit of Appeals yesterday heard witnesses including Planned Parenthood officials and physicians, to determine if "informed consent" will be required of women seekend abortions under Massachusetts law.

In what could be a three month deliberation, due to no definite deadline for a decision, the informed consent requires all women to sign a consent form at least 24 hours in advance of an abortion under the following stipulations:

*a description of the stage of development of the unborn child

*a description of the type of procedure the physician intends to perform *the possible complications which could result *the availability of alternatives

*a statement that the refusal to undergo an abortion does not constitute the denial of public assistance

An added stipulation for women under 18, who are not married is the obtainment of written consent from both parents. If one or both parents or guardians refuse consent or the woman chooses not to seek parental consent, a judge of the superior court will determine if the woman is mature and capable of giving informed consent after an appropriate hearing.

The Planned Parenthood League of Mass and the American Civil Liberties Union were denied a preliminary injunction to challenge the amendment in August under Federal District Court Judge David Mazzone. The judge granted a 10-day stay and Planned Parenthood appealed to the Curcuit Court of Appeals and received a temporary stay until yesterday. The law, signed by Edward J. King in early June, was to be implemented Sept. 3 and all physicians were sent consent forms from the Mass. Department of Public Health Commissioner Alfred L. Frechette. But, the forms were never used because of Planned Parenthood's temporary stay.

Koffler's budget is tight

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials presented a "tight but not timid" budget to the state Board of Higher Education yesterday in the last of four hearings which will determine the funding for higher education in Massachusetts.

UMass President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Henry Koffler and his three Vice Chancellors said their priorities in their $91.7 million budget request were a salary increase for teaching assistants, funding to improve University Library Services, and money to catch up with the deferred maintenance of many troubled UMass buildings.

Yesterday's hearing signalled the beginning of a new budgetary process for higher education in the state. Under the re-organization plan passed by the legislature on June 10, each of the 28 public colleges and universities in Massachusetts will present their budget proposals to the new 15-member Board of Regents. The Regents will in turn present the legislature with one lump sum budget for public higher education.

The Regents, who met for the first time last August, delegated the budgeting power to the Board this year only.

Koffler said the salary increases were needed to maintain competition with other institutions. Faculty and T.A.s have not received an increase since 1976.

Salary increases would enable the University to be competitive enough to attract the most talented teachers, Koffler said.

He said in the four years since 1976, over 130 faculty members have left for better positions at other institutions. The salary increases for teaching assistants alone would total $384,000. This would mean a basic $400 increase for all teaching assistants.

Koffler also asked for $400,000 to maintain the University Library as a functional resource for research, professional and graduate education. Because of inflation, the library has not been able to update or expand its collection, Koffler said.

Koffler said $160,000 in federal matching funds were needed to repair and maintain many buildings. He said that with the deferred maintenance program, the 15 percent inflation rate in construction necessitates the repair of buildings now or: the prospect of higher costs and unusable buildings later.

"Galloping inflation is going to outgallop us sooner or later," he said.

In other requests, Koffler said $81,000 was needed to expand police coverage on the University, $225,000 for lighting improvements, $91,000 for a new basic mathematics instruction program, and $100,000 to maintain the University Computing Center.

"The budget is tight but not timid," Knapp said.

In his closing remarks, he stressed the three university priorities, "The salary increases are of immense importance. The restoration of equipment and the library is extremely important to us. If we do not deal with maintenance of facilities now, we will be in trouble in the long-range future," he said.

Beside the three UMass campuses, the board also heard from the University of Lowell, North Adams State College, Berkshire Community College, and Greenfield Community College.

Board of Higher Education Chancellor Laura Clawsen said she has seen a pattern of realistic budget requests in the face of inflation.

She said that one goal of the hearings, the first such series held in the state, was to restore the confidence of the legislature in the higher education budgeting process.

"It's now possible to show (the legislature) how the numbers in the line items are related to the services they will be paying for."

Clawsen said the board will evaluation the budget requests and submit a lump sum budget to the legislature.

UMass student is thought drowned

HUNTINGTON — State police divers searched the waters of Norwich Lake yesterday for the body of a University of Massachusetts student believed drowned after his canoe overturned last weekend.

Troopers said James Duffy, 18, of Winchester, had been staying with two other students in a cottage on the Hampshire County lake when the trio decided to go for a canoe trip about 1 a.m. Sunday.

The canoe overturned and Duffy's two companions, Jacob Chase, of Longmeadow and Robert Klahre Jr. of Ryetown, N.Y., both 19, managed to make it to shore safely, police said.

Dorm committees will participate in deciding Halloween guest policies

By JUDI JASUREK
Collegian Staff

Within the next three weeks the University of Massachusetts Senate Coordinating Committee hopes to establish a committee made of resident assistants and students to decide on guest policies for the dormitories over Halloween weekend.

Linda Geary, chairman of the meeting suggested that the resident assistants elect representative RA's and students to meet and decide what policies apply to the houses.

Richard Moran, co-president of student government said that a no-guest policy has been sent in the form of a memo to Dennis Madsan, vice chanceloor of student affairs, who has final decision. Moran said that he still has to discuss it with Madson and that no action has been taken on it yet.

"It's hard far a lot of people to swallow," said Moran. He said he needs a more clear rationale for the no-guest policy before he can approve it. A lot of pressure is shifted to the resident assistants during Hallaween weekend, said Moran. He said, "I think that's not fair. He has been told that there were 20 unreported rapes last Halloween weekend.

At Sunday's Presidential Councils Meeting three priorities were established—student safety, curbing past vandalism, and allowing students to enjoy themselves, said Moran.

"Of course the first two are the most important," he said. Moran said that the students should get involved in this decision.

The coordinating committee approved the hiring of four people to the public palicty team in Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA). Moran said that there is money avaible for the positions. In the past the team has consisted of only two positions. Anne O'Conner, Laurie Jolinous, Greg Mendatanous and Daniel Maynard were selected for the team.

Debra Lessor was selected and the committee approved of her appointment to the position of Affirmative Action Officer. Lessor, a senior majoring in journalism and political science, interned at Comman Cause in Washington D.C. where she gained a lot of journalism experience, Linda Geary said. Geary, who interviewed Lessor said, she has administrative skills and is dedicated to the principles of affirmative action.

The committee approved the hiring of Diane Fry and Sally Kerns for the job of speaker assistants. Both Fry and Kearns have considerable experience, said Geary.

Other issues discussed by the committee included the location of Student Senate elections. Since elections were moved in to the dining commons two years ago, lower voter turnout has resulted, said Bob Cleaver, student senator.

Yesterday's student senate elections were better, but the voter turnout was still lower than that of elections held in the dormitories, Cleaver said. The committee discussed bringing the elections back to the dormitories but said a personnel shortage prevents such actions.

The committee discussed possible utility conservation programs as a way to save money on campus. "Your talking megabucks," said Cleaver, who gat his information from Larry Kocot, a SCERA representative.

Handicapped students say they desire acceptance

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: The following article is the second in the five-part series on what it's like to be handicapped while attending the University of Massachusetts.)*

Steve Jordan chose to come to the University of Massachusetts because some day he wa.ts to be a lawyer or go into the publishing field. Yet, he has trouble getting up the stairs to buildings when he tries to go to classes.

"Many people have the notion that individuals who are disabled are so wrapped up in themselves that that's all they think about. In most cases, it's just a part of our lives," said Steve, stricken with cerebral palsy since birth.

"We may have to arrange the things we do, but we have the same goals and ambitions that everyone else does," he said.

Gene Cushing, a victim of palio at age 2, agreed.

"We don't want to be separate pieces of the puzzle, but a part of the whole," Gene said. "No one has to be afraid af us, treat us special, or be nervous around us — yet, they do."

"I think people are still very uncomfortable with disabled people," added Cindy Reutt, injured in a car accident 5 years ago. "They just can't believe that we're out here on our own doing things independently."

"All of these students are attending the University of Massachusetts while confined to wheelchairs.

Each chose to come to UMass because of opportunities to get established and the accessibility and support given to disabled students.

As each talked about what is's like living and learning at the University, they also emphasized there is more to being disabled than just physical problems.

Both Steve and Gene live in Brett dormitory, located in Central, which has been recently renovated to aid the handicapped. Cindy, however, is living in an apartment off-campus in Colonial Village which had no modifications for disabled persons u til she installed a ramp and adjusted shelve. o her height.

"Handicapped people can live off-campus," said Cindy, "but, the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission won't give financial support for any adjustments you have to make to the living quarters, because renavated dorms are available right on campus."

Another reason which keeps most students from moving into apartments is theat the PVTA buses aren't accessible, and they can't get to the campus without transportation.

Plans are underway right now to make transportations on the PVTA routes accessible to wheelchairs. According to the Handicapped Student Affairs office, improved buses should be running by the end of Octaber.

Vans help to get around campus

On campus, transportation is less of a problem.

The van system, operated by the Handicapped Student Affairs office, will transport the students to their classes and around the area when needed.

Gene said he rarely uses the vans but, "They do become essential however when the weather gets cold, it's rainy, or time becomes a factor."

Steve has a motorized wheelchair, so he doesn't need the vans to get to classes while the weather is good.

"But, a lot of the roads and walkways around here are terrible, and it's difficult to get places with so many ruts and holes in the pavement," he said.

Time is also another major obstacle in a physically disable person's life.

"When a handicapped person does something it takes a lot longer and uses up more energy than it would for an able-bodied person to do the same task," said Steve. "We have to budget our time carefully when we're doing the littlest things that everyone else takes for granted—like getting dressed. It takes me a half hour while it would take a physically fit person five minutes."

"To get to a class on the other side of campus most students can just walk directly there by cutting through the grass area," said Cindy. "We can't. We have to follow certain paths, find accessible ramps, and use elevators - all of which takes time."

Once they reach their destination, students have few problems getting into their classrooms because most buildings are accessible.

If there are difficulties with getting a classroom, any course can theoretically be moved to accomodate handicapped students, said Paul Appleby, coordinator of Handicapped Student Affairs.

Unfortunately, other problems still exist.

"A lot of the buildings that are supposed to be accessible to the handicapped are done so by passageways through basements and storage rooms," said Steve. "So, while everyone else is walking in through the front door, you feel left out of the group."

In addition, even some of the newer buildings are not accessible. The main building which Steve, Cindy, and Gene would like to see renovated over is the Fine Arts Center.

"There are so many things there that I would like to see," said Cindy. "But, even once you have someone carry you in, the handicapped seating in the concert hall is totally separate from eveyone else, and you can't hear or see anything since they stick

Ellsberg anti-war stance balances DVP program

Daniel Ellsberg, victim of the Watergate-era break-ins will speak tonight in the Student Union Ballroom. (Collegian file photo)

By AMY HASBROUCK
Collegian Correspondent

Daniel Ellsberg, who became one of the victims of illegal break-ins during the Nixon Administration when his psychiatrist's office was burglarized, will be speaking tonight at the University of Massachusetts.

His 8 p.m. appearance at the Student Union Ballroom is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP), which said his speech will provide a good contrast to the recent appearance by G. Gordon Liddy.

Ellsberg has recently spoken out against the possible reimplementation of the draft and the arms race, and was present at the anti-draft rally held last Saturday in Boston, while Liddy discussed the advantages of a strong army when he spoke at UMass.

Ellsberg played a large part in the Vietnam anti-war movement in the late 1960's and early 1970's. He also is responsible for leaking the Pentagon Papers to the New York Times in 1971. The Papers, which contained a detailed account of American operations in Vietnam were viewed by the Nixon administration as embarrassing to the government.

In an interview in the January 1980 issue of Not A Man Apart, a periodical from the Friends of the Earth, Inc., Ellsberg discussed the possible holocaust that nuclear weapons could bring.

"A single, large, thermo-nuclear weapon would have more explosive power and in terms of fall-out could kill more people than died in Vietnam," Ellsberg said.

In the interview, Ellsberg discussed his experience with nuclear strategies while working for the RAND Corp. "In 1960 and '61 I was reading plans that prepared for the initiation of all-out nuclear war by the United States."

"We would cause 325 million deaths in Russia and China alone, not including deaths from fall-out," he said. "And when you added in the Russian retalliation and European weapons—you were talking about a war that would not involve less than 500 million deaths...I though then that I was reading how the human species was preparing to extinguish

A strange new world

Brad Shaw

At times we tend to lose our perspective, being confined in such a large university as this one. We sometimes forget that ours is not the only way of life, and that a number of different forces govern our daily affairs. When this happens, it may take an unusual event to wake us up to reality.

I'd seen it a hundred times before. But that didn't lessen the shock I experienced when the Captain and his crew slowly materialized right before my eyes. It was incredible! Kirk, Spock, Dr. McCoy; Lt. Uhura and two token crewmen were standing right there in front on Herter Hall at 9:25 in the morning. I immediately swore off of Wednesday night partying, but that didn't stop the vision.

"I'm Captain Kirk of the..." he began, but I interrupted.

"I know—of the U.S.S. Enterprise. I've seen every single episode. I can't believe you guys really exist!"

Spock raised his eyebrows in fascination; the captain hurridly asked to see someone in charge. I replied that I wasn't sure if we had someone like that here, but decided that maybe Whitmore would be a good place to look.

I told the Captian he'd better have his crew put their phasers on "stun" as we entered Chancellor Koffler's office. Before I could speak, McCoy rushed forward in horror and quickly began examining the office staff.

"Jim we've got to get out of here!" he raved. "All of these people are dead!"

I managed to convince the Doctor that there was no problem and that everyone was working at full tilt. After countless hours of waiting, we received some valuable advice. We were sent to the bursar.

Naturally, there was a line. Not as long as some lines I'd seen there before, but still my visitors weren't used to such things. Days passed. Finally one of the token crewmen keeled over and dropped dead on the floor.

"He died of impatience, Jim!" screamed McCoy, bending over the nameless one. "You're risking all of our lives by staying here!" he said.

Kirk remained cool, and we ventured on. With the aid of Spock's tricorder we located a life form reading up near the front of the line, and ultimately we reached or destination.

After I'd explained the situation as clearly as I could, the stone-faced woman behind the window said "So they haven't even preregistered yet. I can't do a thing until you're cleared through the registrar."

Kirk's temper flared. He raised his phaser, pointed it at the window, and braced to fire. But the woman was too quick for him. In one icy glance she knocked the weapon from his hand. We turned away, beaten and tired. Spock began to sob.

I felt awful for the way things were going. I apologized for our primitive methods, and suggested that we all might feel a little better after some lunch. We had to sneak into the D.C., which helped snap the crew out of the apathy which was beginning to overcome them. Things were looking better, until we sat down to eat. Instantly the other token crewman shrieked, gagged, and crumpled to the floor. Kirk open fired on the tray of food.

Mr. Spock had been analyzing his own tray, and uttered: "Fascinating. It is beyond any science I understand."

"Kirk turned to the doctor, who was examining the body. "Bones!" he pleaded. "What is it?"

"I've read about this in the ancient medical logs" McCoy replied. "Jim, this man was killed by a Meatloaf Italiano!"

Uhura gasped, "Captain, I'm frightened."

Kirk ordered Spock to try to contact "the creature" using the Vulcan mind meld. The First Officer leaned over the meatloaf in extreme concentration. The tension mounted as the entire D.C. looked on. Suddenly Spock screamed in anguish, his hands smoking. The Captain lunged for him and wrenched him free.

McCoy was now irate. "Jim, we've got to..." he began, but Kirk cut him off.

"Never mind, Doctor. I've seen enough," he said calmly.

Wheeling on the wobbly chair, he seized me by the collar and shouted, "I want to know what's going on here! Two token crewmen are dead. Spock may be badly hurt. I absolutely demand to see your leader!"

I stammered something about the difficulty of such a task, but Kirk was fed up.

"Who/rules this place! Who is responsible for all of this?!" he bellowed.

"Oh, I get it," I said, finally understanding. "You want to see Ed King."

Uhura fainted. McCoy, for the first time, was scared speechless. Kirk broke out in a sweat. Trembling, he flipped open his communicator.

"Scotty!" he begged. "Beam us up!"

Ethnocentrism not the answer

To the Editor:

*This letter pertains to Jane DeVirgilio's article "Mutilation Termed 'Female Circumcision'" (*Collegian 10/2).

Why is it that Africa, which has experienced hundreds of years of abominable exploitation from the "civilized" world, is always, I mean, too frequently the landmark of our greatest fears and horror stories?

You see, it's not that I like clitoridectomies. But what bothers me even more is when we, in the guise of equality, pick out a specific practice of a foreign culture, failing to listen to what the indigenous women and men have to say about it, and pretend to be experts on a very sensitive issue that we have hardly even heard of before in our lives.

No, I don't want to experience "female circumcision," nor do I want to experience any of the many "genital mutilations" practiced in my own society (i.e.—sterilization abuse, D.E.S., T.S.S., etc.). But please, ethnocentrism is not the answer.

Story offers slanted perspective

To the Editor:

*When I read about "female circumcision" in Africa (*Collegian 10/2), I became upset, perhaps even frightened.

You "educated" people could reverse the already slow process of white Americans' growth away from a deep racist mentality. We who peek through a pinhole to see where cocoa comes from or to be fascinated by those African architects and workers who built the Pyramids, are confused by your facts, figures and descriptive detail. Why drop a bomb now? Give us time to build a base, to construct a setting, a cultural context within which to comprehend your loaded statements. Then perhaps we could critically investigate further if we felt your fact, figure and detail did not correspond with our knowledge and understanding of the context.

Show us how African women have been struggling against oppression—as in the Aba women's riots of 1929 when Ibo women united in struggle to oppose British colonial domination through taxation and so on. Introduce us to the deep spirituality innate to African culture, a concept from which we have grown distant and cold.

What function do your facts, figures and details serve? Perhaps a few uninformed people learned that Africa is politically divided and maybe even glanced at the names Togo and Benin on the side of the map to see just where these "savages" live. But rest assured, all were disgusted, mystified and further compelled to view Africans with a slanted perspective.

It is a wise educational strategy, and far less dangerous in this case, to begin where students are at. I suggest that the next time you decide to "drop a bomb," consider your audience's mentality. We are ignorant of African history and culture. Teach us in sequence so that we may build upon knowledge to secure understanding and critically examine the issues. Sensationalism will only stimulate reactionary response. Is this what you want or we need? I don't think so.

Phillipinese not even close

To the Editor:

*In a report, 'Student teaches immigrants' by Robin Mandel (*Collegian 9/29), Ms. Mandel manages to insult the Filipino people, not once but twice.

The national language of the Republic of the Philippines is not, 'Phillipinese,' but Tagalog or, in its more colloquial form, Filipino. Were this not a sufficient affront, the article even misspells the word with two Ls instead of one. Instead of Mr. Hamel being given credit for his survival English class by Asian Studies, Ms. Mandel might consider taking 3 credits to learn something about the Philippines and Asia!

The path to a better appreciation of other cultures certainly does not begin by misrepresenting those cultural systems in print—most certainly not at an institution which offers such a wide array of courses, faculty, and programs designed to acquaint the community with the nuances of other cultures. As a Filipina and a member of this community I find Ms. Mandel's misrepresentations unacceptable.

America wastes, the world wants

To the Editor:

Death looms over the African continent, decimating thousands of human lives. How does it feel, I wonder, to look forward to nothing but hunger? The situation is nothing new—it has all happened so recently in Cambodia. Yet there is no need for people to starve to death in this day and age. Is this the end product of all human science, technology, and development? Is there no end to suffering and pain?

Here in America, the most powerful nation on earth, there is no physical hunger, but a general sense of madness. In the name of "efficiency," people are pitted against one another in a desperate battle for the "markets." Competition, not cooperation, rules economic aspects and influences all other aspects of peoples' lives. Commercialism and the media drown out the kinship and create an artificial world of fantasy. One hears so much about how badly the elderly and the young are treated. There is little sense of community. Pollution, economic distress for millions of workers, racism, cults, drugs, Titan, urban ghettos and the arms race. The reality that is American society is hardly comforting.

The American economy is built upon waste, with utter disregard for the future generations. And the amount of food wasted here could save so many lives, if the leaders had the will and the economic system could allow it. How can the individual stop this rot? Maybe the way to begin is by educating ourselves. And consciously acting upon what we believe is right. Next time you throw that food away, think. Maybe you can still make a difference.

Combat rape—care for each other

To the Editor:

Recently I received a letter from a close friend who attends Colby College. I was thrilled to hear from him until I read the second paragraph—John's girlfriend had been raped one night on her way back from the library.

I have read, or heard stories of, women getting raped on campuses throughout the country, but it has not been until this past week that I have felt compelled to think about what kinds of action colleges and universities can take in an attempt to prevent rape.

The only suggestion I can make is that this university follow the system used at Mount Holyoke College. There anyone who goes out at night is encouraged to return to their dormitory on the hour or the half-hour.

The purpose of this system is to ensure that all students have a companion to walk with at night. This system works at Mount Holyoke and, because of the large number of students attending this University, I'm sure it would work here.

For this system to work, however, the students and the administration must cooperate. It should be the responsibility of the University to post signs in all popular study areas encouraging students to follow this system, and it is up to us, the students, to take it upon ourselves to help our fellow students by acting upon this suggestion.

Harlem dancers are fiery

The Dance Theatre of Harlem
Fine Arts Center
October 3

By LISA WATERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Like a Key Lago sunset shooting through a Harlem tenement, the Dance Theatre of Harlem shot across the Fine Arts Center stage last night, igniting all those who watched.

In the past, Dance Theatre of Harlem has been acclaimed for its contemparary classical repertory and particularly for its productions by George Balanchine. This was illustrated by the clean, easy mobility shown in Allegro Brillainte. The work, restricted in area and time, illustrates fully choreographer Arthur Mitchell's ability to remain close to without repetition of Balanchine's style.

The highlight of the evening was "Greening," a mesh of Martha Graham style modern and classical ballet. Virginia Johnson, with her long tapering limbs, moved along the stage with decisive and sparkling foot and leg work, that created a stifled snicker at the thought once perpetrated in the closed classical ballet echelons that blacks were unable to dance classical ballet.

Mirage was a mixture of "Studio 54" disco and ballet steps. It was a tale with light-hearted humor and admirable flow in phrasing enhanced by the speed with which the dancers devoured space. It illustrated without self-consciousness the ritualized social games of the Central Park West socialites clashing with the driving flow of energy from the other side of the tracks.

The evening culminated with "Troy Game." The male corps assembled on stage to flex their muscles, making Arnold Schwarzenegger-style ripples against the percussive beat of movement that ranged from the narcism or a session in Pumping Iron to a hunt in an African bush.

There will be a mandatory meeting for all Collegian Arts Department writers tomorrow night (Wednesday) at 7:30 p.m. in the Collegian office.

The Collegian's monthly arts magazine is now soliciting manuscripts of poetry and short stories for inclusion in our first edition of the semester. All contributions should be typed, 67 characters across and should include the author's name, address and phone no. If mailing from on campus, send through campus mail. If mailing from off-campus, please enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope, as they will not otherwise be returned. Send all manuscripts c/o: Collegian Arts Dept., 113 Campus Center, Amherst, 01003. Contributions should be sent by no later than Monday, October 13.

Student vets to be awarded more benefits

By GREG GILES
Collegian Correspondent

US. Rep. Ray Roberts, D—Texas, chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, announced last week the passage of a GI bill increasing education and training benefits for the fiscal year of 1981.

The bill which has successfully gone through the House and Senate, only needs President Carter's signature to be instituted.

Officials from the University of Massachusetts Veterans Service said they had not heard anything about the bill.

"I'll believe it when I see it in my next paycheck. I've heard that for three years now," said a Veteran Assistance and Counseling spokesman. Veterans last received an increase three years ago, he said.

"We haven't heard anything official," said Leo Reilly, Acting Director of the veterans Assistance and Counseling Service. "We only know what the VA (Veteran's Administration) tells us. And I learned a long time ago that you can't trust this government as far as you can throw it."

Such cynicism stems from the numerous VA promises of more benefits to veterans, Reilly said. There are about 1,600 veterans at UMass, he said.

"Fifteen per cent increase, no questions asked, Reilly said. "They were telling us this all summer, and we haven't seen it.

"It's election year, so I don't know. But I can't go on record as saying this might come through. It could go either way," he said.

Acid punk Furs rock Rahar's

The Psychedelic Furs
Rahar's
October 2

By GARY EYNATIAN
Collegian Staff

No kidding, there actually is a band named the Psychedelic Furs. They're from London and they can put out a rock-steady beat.

Psychedelic punk, New Wave, however you classify them, you sure can't say that the Furs clone or imitate any well-known rock and rollers, although vocalist Richard Butler's style seems quite similar to John Foxx's, the former vocalist for Ultravox.

With two guitars, bass, drums and a saxophonist the Furs can produce complex sounds reminiscent of bands of the Psychedelic Era. Spacey guitar licks weave in and out and Duncan Kilburn's saxophone playing expands the sound remarkably.

Such innovative rockers as Bruce Springsteen, Lou Reed and more recently, ska revival bands like the Selecter and Madness have also used a rock saxophone in their music. The sound, so full of emotion, really reaches out.

But what are these guys' songs all about? Well, they're not too political...most of the songs seem to be about personal relationships and what goes on in the modern world. They played "Susan's Strange," which is, you guessed it, about a girl named Susan who's strange. "Soap Commercial" was a good one to shake to—if the B-52's can sing about a dog dyed dark green, why not sing about soap commercials?

The Furs got themselves into a real rock frenzy at one point during their reach-out-to-the-audience song titled "We Love You"—just like those lovey-dovey sixties psychedelic bands loved their audiences. But these guys can also sound mean, as they proved on the song "Imitation Christ."—Look out. Maybe it's about Bob Dylan?

So, if you don't mind slightly zany looking men singing about modern life in a new wave vein, check out the Furs. For some unfair reason though, I just can't seem to picture the Psychedelic Furs as being more than a short-lived phenomenon. But, they do have the musical maturity to carry on—if anyone cares...

When we have a problem with an instructor or a class, we can't just go to their office spontaneously. It has to be thought out and a place set up for us to meet. As a result, we can't get to know our instructors as well as other students can."

Emotional difficulties

In the dining commons and other areas, handicapped students have priority. Yet, it is emotionally difficult for many of them to accept.

"You're separated because you can't use the same route that everyone else does, so naturally you feel like an outsider when you come in from behind the counters instead of in front," said Gene. "Then, when you have to cut in front of people in line, you wonder what they're thinking about you. It's just harder to blend in."

As for nightly entertainment, the vans will go to the few accessible places in town, like the Pub, the Drake, Plumbley's, and the Submarine shop.

"If a business isn't accessible, most of the people are willing to help you. But, they do it in such a patronizing attitude that is seems you in the back. So, I've stopped going."

"There are also a lot of individual offices in buildings that we can't get to on our own. like we don't have a right to be there," said Cindy.

"I end up not going out a lot of times. I'm afraid to ask for help from the people, because I don't know if I should, or I feel as though it would be putting them out too much."

"We haven't had much exposure, so a lot of folks are surprised to see us out at night doing the same things they are," said Steve. "But, we're just out there to have a good time and meet people."

"Basically we're accepted here by most of the people we meet. Once in a while you get someone who stares at you while you're eating or moving along, and although they do it unintentionally, I wish they understood that we have feelings too. Then there are always a few people who resent us or don't like us, because they think we're different and have it easy. Boy, if they only knew," said Steve.

"It's not the same when you have a skiing accident and are on crutches for six weeks," he added. "You appreciate everything more when you know that you're not going to be fine in a little while, but that it's going to be like this for the rest of your life."

Dickinson where they will be counted by members of the Governmental Affairs Committee, under the watchful eye of a police officer.

Ron Keefe, commuter senator and assistant to the SGA presidents, said he developed the concept of the sticker campaign over the weekend, after failing to get his name on the ballot. As he developed the campaign, Keefe said, other candidates, concerned that they would be defeated by the PSA, began to join the group.

In their platform distributed yesterday, the group said their priorities would be expansion of the UMass bus service, the continuation of the annual spring concert, support of Third World and women's issues, rent control in the town and lobbying the state legislature and Board of Regents to provide for "low-cost quality education."

SGA co-president Rich LaVoice said the sticker campaign was initiated in response to the PSA running as a slate.

"When they (the PSA) initiated this type of election, it was just pragmatic to get together and work this way," LaVoice said. "I voted for people on and off the slate. These people want to keep going."

But Senate Speaker Linda Geary said the sticker campaign would only serve to confuse voters, who would be voting for the slate as opposed to individual candidates.

"People don't know who they're voting for," Geary said. "This is politics personified. It seems that certain people are organizing it. It's not like a grass-roots type movement of people who wanted to go on certain issues.

Ziggy Stardust and the Monsters from Earth

David Bowie
Scary Monsters (RCA)

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

As with Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, the Who and a select other few, David Bowie dwells amidst the "sainted" heroes for who we wait on the edge of our seat at the word of the next release. There we sit, waiting to fall on the floor in tears with the wrenching sounds of an apparent decline, or it's there we rise up to cheer the fulfilled expectations of another classic.

But with the release of Aladdin Sane's latest effort, Scary Monsters, we just stay on the chair and stare. And if this exposition sounds just a little too overdramatic, one need only take a listen to the LP to discover that it is not.

From the first track on side one, "It's No Game (Part 1)," through "Ashes to Ashes," "Fashion" and the last cut on the album, "It's No Game (Part 2)," we are left with the impression of mockery of self and trends, but with no apparent motif consistent throughout.

David Bowie, who's currently starring in the Broadway production of "The Elephant Man," has just released his 17th album—Scary Monsters.

The aforementioned first and last cuts are, to be sure, strange. Bowie seems to be in a semi-obsessed state of mind over his recent Japanese trip. But the effect of this translation, despite some neat alliteration in the English version, seems forced in a way that it wasn't in "African Night Flight" on Bowie's last LP Lodger. Bowie got more mileage out of his Berlin psyche, though. Interestingly, Robert Fripp contributed to the product of that era (Heroes), as he does here. Musically, Fripp is not as pronounced on these two cuts, though.

Perhaps the title cut is most descriptive of this LP, with longtime Bowie producer/co-conspirator Tony Visconti on acoustic, this ties together whatever unifying threads may exist on the album. Bowie delivers an unusual keyboard/vocal performance, with his monotone, droning Cockney and adding an audio effect that sounds like an overused cassette.

For those who anticipated a more melodic output on this one, in the vein of 'Hunky Dory or Ziggy Stardust, forget this one. The best of the lot for sheer "hummability" is "Up the Hill Backwards" or the radio cut, "Ashes to Ashes."

The former, an interpretation of culture shock and xenophobia interspersed has some great lines: "The vacuum created by the arrival of freedom/And the possibilities it seems to offer/It's got nothing to do with you/If one can grasp it." It could almost be Bowie's state of the union on Iran. Fripp shines here. The latter, a Bowie-type song (if such a thing exists) concerns the further alienation from self: "Ashes to ashes funk to funky/We knaw Major Tom's a junky" twists the protagonist of "Space Oddity" into self-parody, not unlike Dylan (a Bowie influence) employs with revamped versions of his original classics.

"Fashion" will be the disco hit. It's real danceable and one hopes Bowie is doing it all in jest, for if he isn't he has a real problem. Andy Clark's synthesizer adds the sound needed to make this tune sound genuinely zombiesque. The message of this song: "They do it over there/But we don't do it here." As Bowie's "death to disco" gospel (complete with "Bad Girl" hooks) it's acceptable because Bowie has never been afraid to borrow for effect, lest we forget "Young Americans" and "Fame."

"Teenage Wildlife" is rather mediocre, save Bowie's comment on the re-emergence or rock: "A broken nosed mogul are you/One of the new wave boys/Same old thing in brand new drag."

The second cut on side two, "Scream Like a Baby" has Bowie singing off-key, out-of-tune about a mythical lover (maybe) Sam. Sam is the catalyst figure for Bowie's lamentation on the anti-gay, extra Y chromosome role of men, but it strikes me as simplistic as Rod Stewart's "Killing of George;" "They came down hard on faggots/They came down hard on the street" lacks any sort of passion in context and delivery. Now maybe if it were hard-on faggots...hard-on the street?

The cover on this album, Tom Verlaine's "Kingdom Come" is the best rocker, while "Because You're Young" has some licks from the Who's Pete Townshend (again proving better solo than anything his band has done recently), but it's just filler.

Scary Monsters is less experimental than Low or Lodger, less melodic than Heroes or Station to Station, but it holds its own as a "good" turn-out by an "intriguing, often excellent" artist. No problem with the competency of the musicians here, nor the mix, yet there's something undeniably pretentious about it conceptually and lyrically. Not that pretense is unallowed in art, but one suspects Ziggy of being better at throwing the translucent veil over things than he has shown us here.

Yet I don't think this is the beginning of the end for Bowie, for as John Milward said in The Rolling Stone Record Guide in 1979: "Bowie's longevity has always been based on his ability to put the slip on his shadow." Critic's Cum.—3.0

Riders take 4th at meet in Smith

By PATTIE CARBONE
Special to the Collegian

The UMass intercollegiate Equestrian team placed fourth out of 24 colleges at their opening meet held last Saturday at Smith College.

Out of 180 competitors, Ken Whelihan was reserve high—point rider of the day with two first—place positions.

Along with Whelihan, other first—place finishers included Lori Usher and Sarah Boynton.

Finishing second for UMass were Bobby Myrick, Boynton, and Kathy Pacheco, while Diane Macbeth and Elise Waters placed third.

Last year, UMass stood at fourth place in the Eastern region. Several of the team riders qualified for the Regionals, while four were selected to compete in the Nationals.

UMass is seeking to once again qualify for post—season competition in both the Regionals and the Nationals, depending on team potential, especially within the talent of the individual riders.

UMass will compete this coming Saturday at Dartmouth College.

Women harriers finish seventh

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross-country team finished seventh out of 18 of some of the best teams in the East last Saturday at the Rutger's Inivitational in Princeton, New Jersey. UMass beat the only other New England team at the meet, URI, by a score of 196-202. Winning the overall meet was Penn State followed by Maryland.

First for UMass was junior Judy McCrone who placed sixth overall in 17:53 followed closely by Tricia Moores, seventh in 17:54. Running third for the Minutewomen was Cathy Petrick with 'Dill' Wilson fourth and Eileen Everette fifth for the team.

"They're trying a lot harder as a team now than they were at the beginning of the season," coach Julie LaFreniere said. Both McCrone and Moores improved their times over last year on the same 5000 meter course.

Running with a slight injury to her ankle, Moores finished with a strong kick in the last part of the race. "I lost concentration after the first mile and a half but I got it back after the two-mile mark. I felt good," Moores said.

The team's next meet will be tomorrow afternoon at 4:00 at Smith College. This is the first year that Smith has had a cross-country team. "I'm not worried about beating Smith, but I still want everyone to run hard. They need the hard work and we can't afford to run any meet easy. I think we can do well at the UConn Invitational next Saturday as well," coach Julie LaFreniere said.

JV gridders lose first of season

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

With the threat of rain imminent, fiesty Milford Academy bested the UMass sub-varsity football team, 14-3, in a well fought defensive battle. All the scoring occurred during the fist two quarters of play. During the second half, Milford and UMass were engaged in a power struggle, exchanging possessions for the remainder of the contest.

On the first possession of the game, Milford marched 65 yards, capping off the drive with a 10 yard touchdown pass from Marty Sunday to Alex Fabiano. UMass was slapped with a personal foul penalty in a key fourth down and 3 situation, keeping the scoring drive alive. Sunday and Fabiano connected again in the second quarter to make the score 14-0.

Offensively, the Minutemen were sluggish. They were continually plagued by organizational problems which Coach Clarence Brooks attributed to a lack of cohesion. UMass' only scoring came on a 39 yard field goal by John Ferrigno.

Tom Sweeney, Mark Tabor, and Barrett McGrath split the quarter-backing duties for the Minutemen. McGrath seemed to have the most success moving the team and controlling the tempo of the game when UMass had the ball.

Leading ground gainer for UMass was Loney Bond. "He ran hard and got some tough yardage for us," said Brooks. Bond was the workhorse for the sputtering offense.

During most of the game, the Minutemen were plagued by poor field position, starting drives deep in their own territory. "We didn't get a lot of breaks," said Brooks. "We put ourselves in the hole too." Early in the fourth quarter McGrath took a hand-off from center and scampered 20 yards into the endzone for an apparent UMass touchdown. A clipping penalty nullified the score. On the next play, Milford's Jeff Monk dropped McGrath for a 10 yard loss. A field goal attempt hit the uprights but failed to go through. UMass didn't get any breaks.

Defensively Brooks was pleased with the performance of Dave Wigmore, Steve Gootkind, Ed Vargas, and Steve McDonald. Steve O'Neil, Greg Wesson, and John Morley were credited with sacking the Milford quarterback. Linebacker Tom McEvilly played well for Milford. McEvilly is brother of former UMass quarterback Mike McEvilly.

Dias goal wins for UMass, 2-1

by SCOTT SOLOMON

SATURDAY'S GAME

Tony G. Dias' goal with a second left in the game gave the UMass Minutemen a come-from-behind 2-1 victory over the University of Vermont Saturday in Burlington. The goal was Dias' second of the game, as the 5'8" sophomore connected on a pass from Tony M. Dias at the 42-minute mark of the half, tying it at 1-1..

"We needed the win very badly," said coach Russ Kidd yesterday. "I still can't believe it happened. Psychologically it did a hell of a lot for us."

The second Dias tally came off a corner kick from Richard White. M. Dias directed the kick toward G. Dias with his leg, and Tony G. headed it past a frustrated Catamount goaltender, Skip Gilbert.

"We had been playing very even up to that point," commented Kidd. "After we switched to a 4-2-4 offense, we really started to pressure them. Our five corner kicks in the second half really helped us," he said.

The Catamounts opened the scoring at 23:06 of the first half, on a goal by Vermont captain Bill Nedde. The goal was the first for Vermont (0-4-2) this season while the loss was only the team's fourth in five years at home. Additionally, it was the first time that the Catamounts have lost to UMass at home in 16 years, dating back to Octover, 1964, when the Minutemen collected a 4-2 win.

It seems that UMass has finally found the right combination to success, after struggling long and hard through the first seven games of the season. At 3-5 the Minutemen still appear in the right frame of mind to prepare for the second half of the '80 campaign, as they will face the likes of Rhode Island, Providence, and number-one ranked UConn.

A standout in Saturday's performance had to be Minuteman keeper Brett Olsher. Olsher, who required nine stitches in his lip last week after being accidently cleated in practice, faced five Catamount shots and four corner kicks. Olsher will be handling the goaltending duties alone for the rest of the season, after the announcement this week that junior Matt Esteves had quit the team. Esteves' last start was Sept. 20 in a losing effort to Southern Connecticut.

"When the going gets tough, you just can't have guys quitting," said Kidd. "I feel that the team has responded well to the incident though," he added.

At last Saturday's rally, Ellsberg said the risk of nuclear war is great. He suggested that the draft is leading the U.S. to nuclear war. Ellsberg also said that no matter who was elected president, there would be a draft, and he cited the penalties for noncompliance with the draft; a maximum of $10,000 fine or 5 years in prison.

"We're not talking about unilateral disarmament; the objective has to be global disarmament. Nothing other than that will protect the human species," said Ellsberg. "But it's got to start somewhere and as long as we're going up, we are not starting the process of going down."

● The only action that would have totally prevented the shortage would have been the early completion of the Well Number Five on Bay Road in South Amherst, he said.

The monitoring equipment used at the pumping stations is outdated, and does not measure water levels below forty feet. The water levels during the shortage dropped to as low as 21 feet, Ziomek said.

Ziomek said there was a lack of communication between the University and the Amherst Water Division personnel as to the gravity of the water situation this summer. This lack of information inhibited the University from taking the necessay precautions to stem the crisis.

The Planned Parenthood Leage of Mass and the American Civil Liberties Union were denied a preliminary injunction to challenge the amendment in August under ofederal District Court Judge David Mazzone. The judge granted a 10-day stay and Planned Parenthood appealed to the Curcuit Court of Appeals and received a temporary stay until yesterday. The law, signed by Edward J. King in early June, was to be implemented Sept. 3 and all physicians were sent consent forms from the Mass. Department of Public Health Commissioner Alfred L. Frechette. But, the forms were never used because of Planned Parenthood's temporary stay.

Planned Parenthood Attorney Sandra Lynch said Att. Gen. Steve Ostrach was the only one who testified on behalf of the state in favor of the amendment. Planned Parenthood League of Mass. President Dr. Phillip G. Stubblefield one of many witnesses against the amendment said the state consent forms are less detailed than the forms he uses at Boston Hospital for Women. Stubblefield said he is against the amendment because, "I am against being compelled to take about the fetal development in the first trimester."

He said, "Women must be told of the risk, but they are still going to want an abortion after they are informed." He added, "The consent and fetal development description will delay the process, and every bit of delay increases the risk to the woman."

Joann Bach Supervising Counselor for Hampden County Gynecological Services in Springfield, Mass. said minors will either carry unwanted pregnancy's to full term or will be delayed into the second trimester, increasing the risk." The Hampden physicians perform 50 abortions a week.

Keyed by singles wins BU dumps netmen 6-3

By CLAY BORGLAND
Collegian Staff

The UMass tennis team went up against its toughest foe of the fall season yesterday as Boston University rolled into Amherst on the crest of a perfect 7-0 record. And these Terrier netmen rolled right back out again, having increased their mark to 8-0, with a well contested, but nontheless expected, 6-3 victory over the Minutemen team.

"Actually, everyone played pretty well today," said Coach Steve Williams, "and if we had a couple of breaks go our way, we would have been in this match."

Among those needed breaks was a tough three set match lost by Number 4 singles player, Matt Modlish. After winning the first set, 6–4, Modlish dropped the second 2–6 and wound up tied in the third at six games apiece with BU's Dave Kotz. A nine–point tiebreaker was played to determine the victor. Unfortunately for Modlish, he ran out of gas and bawed in it, 5–1.

In the Number 1–3 singles, BU reigned king, as all three Terrier seeds took their opponents in straight set victories. In Number 1, Neil Mackertich lost to last year's New England singles finalist, Bob Green, 6–3, 6–1, while next to him, Sergio Strepmon fell 7–6, 6–4. And in court three, Mark Huettemon drapped a pair of identical 6–4 sets to Tom Laspinoso.

At the far end of the Boyden courts came the only two UMass singles points of the afternoon. Nick Julian, hitting Number 5, dealt with Rob Leroy in a 6–2,3–6, 6–3 foshion, ond Poul Jaffe, the third different Number 6 player in as many matches for UMoss, proved his worth with an easy 6–0, 6–4 sweep of Bill Olshon.

Heading into the doubles, down 4–2, the Minutemen still had o slim chonce to pull out on upset, but it wos not to be. At Number 1, Green and Field for BU took advontage of Mackertich ond o tired Modlish for o breezy 6–0, 6–2 win ond the match was decided. At Number 2, Nick Julion and Mork Huettemon lost in three sets, 1–6, 6–4, 6–0, with the lost set being one they would love to forget. But at Number 3 doubles, Mike Horrelson ond Poul Jaffe, continued their strong play ond conquered Leroy ond Soslow from BU, 6–3, 7–6. This mode Jaffe a double point winner for the afternoon, o tremendous accomplishment considering the level of competition he did it ogainst.

UMass, now 3–2, ploys next ogoinst Albany Stote this Wednesdoy ot 2:30 on the Boyden courts.

Minutemen go for fourth against Wildcats today

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Coming off a dramatic 2-1 victory over Vermont on Saturday, the UMass men's soccer team hosts New Hampshire today at 3:00 p.m. at Boyden Field.

The Minutemen earned their third victory of the season by scoring two goals late in the Vermont game to overtake the Catamounts.

UMass Coach Russ Kidd was ecstatic, after the triumph.

"It was the most incredible game I've been in since I've been involved with soccer," he said. "It was dramatic."

"They (Tony G. Dias, Tony M. Dias and Doug White) are our bread and butter players and they came through," Kidd praised. "But it was a good all-around team victory."

The 3-5 Minutemen now set their sights on today's clash with the UNH Wildcats, who enter the game with a 1-6 mark.

The Wildcats have scored but three goals in their seven games and have been shut out in all six defeats. The lone UNH victory came in a 3-1 decision over Keene State.

"They're struggling; they're up and down," Kidd said. "But the fact that they beat Keene 3-1 shows they have something.

"They'll be as tough as all the other damn teams," he warned. "We really need the win against them."

The Wildcats are led by co-captain midfielders Sam Welch and Dave Douglas who is a native of West Springfield. UNH's starting goalie will be George Gaitlardetz who has seen more than his share of shots this season. In the Wildcats single win, forward John Czajkowski scored two goals, while Welch tallied the other.

The Minutemen, who looked impressive in the second half of the Vermont game, will be hoping for a continuation of the team style of play which was displayed Saturday.

"Our whole backfield played great," Kidd applauded. "We've finally gotten over the hump with these guys. I hope it continues."

Golfers take fifth place at Toski Invitational;

By MARK P. BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen ended their short fall season yesterday with a fifth place finish at the Seventh Toski Intercollegiate Golf Invitational held at Hickory Ridge Country Club in Amherst.

Ramapo College of Mahwah, New Jersey won the tournament for the second straight year. Ramapo, a division three school, finished second in the nationals last year.

"This team could be better. We have three All-Americans returning. We have a good chance to win a national title, and this could be the year," said Ramapo coach Vince Nardiello.

Junior Jeff Thomas of Ramapo won the individualist medal when he birdied the first hole of a playoff to top his teammate Bob Dacey. The two finished the thirty-six hole tournament, with a score of 143.

Ramapo had a team total of 593. The University of Rhode Island, which led the field of twenty-five teams after the first round came in third place with a score of 600. Central Connecticut University had a 300 for the second round good enough to move into the second place spot with a 598.

UMass had a score of 621 for the tournament. St. John's University squeezed by the Minutemen in the second round with a 310, which gave them a 617 for the tournament.

"St. John's sneaked in ahead of us today, but overall we held our own in the tournament," said UMass coach Ed Vlach.

Senior captian Marty Hunt had the best scores for UMass. Hunt had a 76 and a 78 for a 36-hole total of 154.

Hunt called the season "short and not too sweet." "We played well in this tournament, but the team didn't play up to its potential all season," said Hunt.

"We could have definitely been a little bit better this fall," said UMass junior Rich Wells. Wells had a 78 in the second round to give him a 163 for the Toski.

The other UMass scores were Ron LaVerdiere with a 156, John Gallagher with a 157, and Bob Grassetti had a 161.

In other golf news, the UMass women picked up a victory last Friday, when they outplayed Mount Holyoke College at The Orchards in South Hadley.

The Minutewomen had a team score of 356 compared to Mount Holyoke's score of 398. UMass had the top three scores of the day. Marlene Susienka of UMass led all finishers with an 83. Karen LaVerdiere had an 87 and Robin Hayes had a 91. Barbara Spilewski, a senior at UMass, had her best score of the year at 95. Spilewski finished sixth.

Mount Holyoke's top scorers were Elaine Stankiewicz with a 93 and Kate Kiel with a 94.

"I think we are starting to play well," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "It will be interesting to see how we do in the Easterns, although Penn State is a heavy favorite.

"I'm really looking forward to the Easterns," said LaVerdiere. "It would be nice to beat the teams in our area, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Springfield."

They're not just your basic volleyball team anymore

"...and there's five minutes left in this game, and really, Eliot, this game was decided in the second quarter..."

"C'MON, MASS! THEY'VE JUST BEAT THEM DOWN IN KINGSTON! FINISH 'EM OFF! TAKE IT, MASS! DIG IT OUT!"

That was perhaps the most definitive voice of the festival of voices surrounding the UMass Tournament last weekend. It was in the final match against the University of Rhode Island, the tiebreaker in which UMass won the first game 15-10, lost the second 8-15 and were leading (thanks in part to a scorekeeping error that stripped URI of the serve) when the news came over WMUA—UMass was beating the Rams, 26-8.

Maureen Sullivan

About 100 people, scattered around the court, encouraged UMass both in Kingston and in Boyden.

"C'MON, MASS! TWO MINUTES LEFT! THEY'RE LEADING BY EIGHTEEN POINTS! HOW 'BOUT IT, BRENDA? MAKE 'EM EARN IT! ACE IT! BE ALERT, PEOPLE. EASY...NICE SHOT, ELLEN! WAY TO GO, MASS!"

UMass won both in Kingston and in Boyden, for the Minutewomen took the match by winning 15-9. UMass placed third, URI was fourth, and the University of Delaware, a team UMass almost beat, swept Providence College to win the Tournament.

Most of the players couldn't help but be disappointed, especially at losing to Delaware by so close a margin. But there was a satisfaction in all this, for they proved to some of the best teams in the region that if they were not there already, they were coming, fast and strong.

"When you almost beat Delaware and you beat Rhode Island for the first time, you can't help but be pleased," said Coach Elaine Marasco, "they're a good team. My girls are as tough as nails."

To describe UMass' overall performance in one word or two, it was still a little inconsistent, but no longer the struggling team of two years, one year, three weeks ago.

No team looks awesome against them any more. No team looks overpowering, dominating, assured of winning any more. Only when UMass makes the errors that UMass loses composure, points or the game. Even that is not happening often anymore.

Take those two matches against Cortland State, for example. UMass came so close to losing that third game Friday night, but they fought back. In the match after they lost to Delaware, UMass was low after that tough match. Tired, lethargic, almost. Cortland breezed 15-11. But they fought back, holding off and winning 17-15. Then the uplift, the sure uprising of momentum. That game ended with UMass breezing 15-11.

URI was the anti-climax to the whole thing. In taking the lady Rams for the first time in seven years (when the team began), UMass finished off respectably, with the whole team taking part. Offense and defense were one; the outside attack hummed (though there were a few spurts), while the blocking and the digging took care of most of the opponents' offense.

The only other thing dominating the play was the noise. Referees' whistles blasted above the voices, the screaming, the sound of leather bouncing hard off extending forearms or off the swing of an open hand.

God, it was loud. A very supportive loud, though.

Now, the tourney is past, and UMass gets set for Springfield College, who finished tenth last weekend ahead of Northeastern University and Queens College. These two teams meet Wednesday night at NOPE gym at 7:00 p.m., following the JV match at 5:00.

For a team who almost beat the top team in the East, UMass should no longer be dominated by Springfield.

But Wednesday isn't Saturday, so we shall wait and see.

Treasurer defends allegations

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Treasurer Albert Wallace said yesterday that the allegation that Student Senate Speaker Lindo Geary may possibly have misappropriated student funds was made by an individual he would not name.

Wallace, who declined to name the person until he reports his findings Friday, said the investigation is based on an allegation that some money the senate allocated to buy picket supplies for striking Amherst Nursing Home workers was used to pay for leaflets supporting the Progressive Student Alliance in the recent senate elections.

He said Monday that he was investigating the transaction because receipts from purchase orders could not be found. He also said the materials bought, including staple gun, magic markers, and other sign making supplies, have not been accounted for.

The PSA is a recently formed student group which ran 26 candidates in the senate elections which ended yesterday.

Geary said, "I flatly reject his assumptions. I haven't done anything wrong."

Geary said the investigation was unsubstantiated and was allegedly brought about to harass her. She said, the investigation was "definitely related to a move brought by SGA co-President Richard Moran to oust her from the Legal Services Office Board of Governors at last week's senate meeting.

"It's not being done maliciously. It's serious, but I don't want to defame anybody. It's (the investigation) being accused of being political. I don't think it's political," Wallace said.

Wallace said the person who made the allegation seemed to know where and how money for the picket supplies was being spent. "This person was well briefed. He said the extra supplies were being used by supporters of the strike and members of the PSA who happened to be at the strike."

"I will show reasonable and just cause for opening the investigation," Wallace said.

"It's just not the lack of documentation and receipts. It's also due to the fact that the original allegations were made," he said.

Wallace said the person was not a member of the SGA and that he had never met him before. "In my judgement, this person knew alot about the financial operations," he said.

Although Wallace said he did not think senate money was used by PSA members to print campaign leaflets, and that PSA members had indicated they were willing to provide receipts for materiel they bought with their own money, he would continue the investigation to account for the supplies.

PSA member Michael Sussman who said he paid for most of the materiel himself after money was raised at a benefit party for the group last Friday, said, "There's no reason to believe that any of that (nursing home) money went to PSA. There's no substantial reason. There must be some other motivation."

Wallace also said the investigation was being done to force Geary to provide receipts as an example to other student groups to maintain their own finances.

Wallace said he had sent a memo to Geary requesting copies of receipts last week. "I got tired of asking and asking for the receipts. I decided to make the investigation to get something done."

Geary said, "I'm disgusted that the treasurer of the senate could not speak honestly and up front to the speaker before he escalated his assumptions."

He said he discussed the investigation while it was proceeding because "I don't think it's anything to hide."

Wallace maintained that each student or student group using senate purchase orders must retain receipts to verify which supplies were bought.

But Elizabeth Konieczny, principal clerk in the Student Activites office who coordinates payment of purchase order bills, said, "for the most part we do not ask for the receipt. It's not common. It would be impossible to keep track of all those receipts."

Wallace said he wants the receipts to account for the money, which came from the senate operations account because he is responsible to keep track of all money that is used.

Ellsberg urges disarmament effort to counter threat of nuclear war

The United States has 30,000 nuclear weapons, and that is enough, said Daniel Ellsberg last night to a capacity crowd of 800 in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

The Soviets have 20,000, he added.

Ellsberg, who became a victim of the Watergate related scandals when his psychiatrist's office was burglarized, said he was in this part of the state to support Proposition Seven, a referendum on the ballot in three Massachusetts counties which calls for a "U.S.-Soviet moratorium on all nuclear weapons."

Ellsberg cited several instances in which American presidents used nuclear weapons in a threatening manner, the way "a gun is used in a crisis situation when it is pointed at someone's head."

All the U.S. presidents in the last 30 years have brought this country close to nuclear war without the public being aware of it, Ellsberg said.

"Every time allied troops have been in danger, the President has considered the use of tactical nuclear warfare," Ellsberg said.

Ellsberg had a hand in the design of a nuclear war strategy, he said, when he wrote the official guidance for the Kennedy Administration's top secret nuclear war plans in 1961.

The plan, a revision of the Eisenhower strategic plan, could have killed 325 million people, Ellsberg said, if the U.S. had retaliated to "conventional aggression" by another

Election results not available

The results of the 120 seat Undergraduate Student Senate were not available at press time last night.

Diane Mueller, chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee and a candidate for a seat, had originally invalidated the commuter senate ballots because of apparent violation of election rules. After heated debate between committee members, the sticker backed candidates and the Progressive Student Alliance, it was decided to count all the ballots without stickers affixed.

Attorney general Dana Collier said she would submit a petition today to the speaker, the treasurer and the Coordinating Committee of the SGA to protest the entire election.

Collier pointed out 30 other possible state election laws that had been violated throughout the entire election.

U.S. representative convicted of bribery scheme aiding Arabs

WASHINGTON — Rep. John W. Jenrette, D-S.C. was convicted last night of accepting a bribe from an FBI undercover agent, who said he represented two wealthy Arabs needing special immigration legislation.

The jury also convicted John R. Stowe, a Richmond, Va., businessman, who was charged with aiding and obetting Jenrette in the bribery scheme.

The jury of eight women and four men returned their verdicts in U.S. District Court after some four hours of deliberations that began just after lunch. The verdict was announced at 6:15 p.m. EDT.

After the jury foreman, Sylvia Parker, announced the verdicts, Jenrette, sitting at the defense table, bowed his head and sobbed with his hands cuvering his face. Stowe sat impassively as he had during most of the five-week trial.

Fire experts hope to board hull of ravaged cruise ship

YAKUTAT, Alaska — Skies cleared yesterday in the Gulf of Alaska, giving firefighters hope of boarding the listing, fire-rovaged cruise ship Prinsedam. The Coast Guard sought help from a civilian expert on ship fires, and said the flames might be fought while the vessel was under tow.

All 533 passengers and crew were rescued after fire broke out Saturday, and the passengers were on the last legs of their journeys home yesterday. They were flown to Seattle overnight after an ordeal that included up to 20 hours in lifeboats, and transfers by tanker and aircraft.

Some passengers complained lifeboats were ill-equipped and lacked crew and provisons, charges denied yesterday by a spokesman for the ship's owner, Holland Americo Cruises.

Catholic bishops don't agree on church birth control stand

VATICAN CITY [AP] — Roman Catholic bishops discussing family issues here are sharply divided over the need for a reappraisal of the church's stand on birth control, posing a potential dilemma for Pope John Paul II.

Some cardinals and bishops from Western and Third World countries have asked Pope John Paul's first synod to examine the problem of the Catholics who do not accept the church ban on contraception.

In most cases, the bishops made it clear that they are not pressing for any specific change in the church doctrine and that they accept Pope Paul VI's 1968 en cyclical "Humanae Vitae" which reiterated the chur ch's opposition to all forms of birth control except the rhythm method of sexual abstinence.

But they are pressing for greater "pastoral concern" and a more sympathetic approach by the Church to couples using banned birth control methods.

U.S. lies low in Mideast war

BOSTON [AP] — The United States will remain neutral in the Iran-Iraq war, but will act if oil transportion is endangered or if its allies are threatened, Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher said yesterday.

Christopher also said the hostage crisis in Iran is no reason to welcome the war, which has deloyed Iranian action on the fate of the American captives.

"The United States has not taken sides in this war and we will not," Christopher said.

But he said neutrality should not be interpreted by other nations as indifference. He also urged the Soviet Union to stay out of the conflict and ta stop what he termed fobrications that the United States was involved.

Christopher said the United States will continue to work with the United Nations to restore peace in the Persion Gulf and is prepared to take whatever steps are needed to protect its interests.

"We have vitol interests at stoke in the Persian Gulf region, and as President Carter has made clear, we will defend them," he said in o speech ,at a United Press International editors' conference.

"With other concerned notions, we hove substontial military strength in the area. Our purpose is to defend our vital interests if they are assaulted. It is not to dominate the affairs of any nation in the region, but to help buttress their dependence," he soid.

Christopher soid there must be no interference with free transit of oil in the Strait of Hormuz ond the Persion Gulf. "We will do whot is required to prevent such interference," he said.

"The United States will commit its forces, along with its allies, if there is interference with shipping in the Strait of Hormuz," he soid.

Iran, he said, recently announced it has no intention of blacking traffic through the strait, a move Christopher termed o positive step.

The United States, he said, also stonds ready to aid allies that feel threotened by the conflict.

Supreme Court orders higher auto insurance rates for 1980

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON [AP] — In a decision affecting the pocket books of all Massachusetts motorists, the state Supreme Court found yesterday that 1980 automobile insurance rates may be too low and ordered that new rates be set.

The decision could mean that motorists will be asked to pay additional premiums at the end of this year on policies which are expiring.

George Morrison, president of the Massachusetts Automobile Rating and Accident Prevention Bureau, on industry association, said, "The size of the additional premium probably is not going to be large."

It might average about $10 per policy statewide, he said. But the cost to individual motorists depends on how much coverage they have.

The court, in its 25-page, unonimous decision ordered Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh to reconsider the 1980 rates because his estimates of investment income to the companies may have been too high.

The amount of investment income is deducted in determining the premiums the companies receive. The premiums are set by the commissioner each yeor.

The court did not specify changes to be made in 1980 premiums but ordered Sabbagh to "fix and establish 1980 rates ofter redetermining the allowance for pro fit.."

The companies, in their petition, claimed correc tions made in investment calculations by Sabbagh would entitle them to $20 million in additionol premiums. Morrison used the $20 million figure in determining the $10 average, but he noted that Sab bagh might decide on less.

Sabbagh, in a statement read by an aide, said he will make the review ordered by the court and "re establish rates reflecting that review."

Any adjustment, he said, "should not have an upset ting effect on the automobile insurance buyer in the commonwealth."

The companies hod asked for o $142 million rote in crease for 1980, omounting to 20.6 percent.

Sabbagh allowed only 5.7 percent, or $39.3 million, and the industry appealed to the Supreme Court, seeking the balance of the request. Yesterday's ruling, in upholding Sabbagh on all but the investment aspect of his rate decison, could be interpreted as more of a victory for the commissioner than the companies.

"The record before us does not enable us to say whot the allowonce (for investment income) should be, and we must remond the case to the commissioner," the court said, adding: "We do not suggest that he should begin (the entire rate process) again."

Anderson continues 'fight'

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, [AP] — Declaring "I have just begun to fight," independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson delivered perhaps his sharpest attack against President Carter on yesterday, alleging tactics offensive to the American public and harmful to the political process.

Despite polls showing him faltering with only four weeks left until the Nov. 4 election, Anderson said, "I am not going to abandon this race...I have just begun to fight."

He said he did not believe a New York Times-CBS poll that showed his support had fallen below 15 per cent.

Anderson said Carter and Republican candidate Ronald Reagan "have turned off the American people to an unprecedented degree" and that this would give him a chance.

"I am appalled by the low level to which I think both of the traditional party candidates have taken this campaign," he said.

Opening two days of campaigning in New England, Anderson addressed the 21st annual conference of United Press International editors and publishers in Cambridge, then held a news conference before flying to Connecticut for appearances in Hartford and New Haven.

"I think that Mr. Carter's desperate attempt to reduce the campaign to absurd simplicities is really masking his own fear that he is now not going to win the election," Anderson said.

"I believe that on the basis of what I'm reading, his fear is well founded. I believe his tactics in response to that situation have been offensive to many thinking Americans and really harmful to the political process."

Anderson accused Carter of making "totally outrageous" remarks during an appearance in Chicago on Monday night.

Search for missing student continues at Lake Norwich

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

HUNTINGTON — State and local authorities continued their seorch of Lake Norwich yesterday for the body of University of Massachusetts student James Duffy, 18, native of Winchester, Ma., living in Grayson Dormitory, who apparently disapeared in a boating accident Sunday morning.

Trooper Thomas Dion of the Mass. State Police said four boats drogged the bottom of the lake with grappling hooks yesterday in an effort to locate Duffy's body. Dion said scuba teams had searched a portion of the loke on Sunday and Monday but poor visibility in the lake hindered the underwater search.

"(The victim) is officially listed as missing and presumed drowned," Dion said, "but we are exploring every possibility."

Dion said other possibilities included that Duffy may have swum ashore and been lost in the woods or that the incident may have been some sort of prank.

According to police, Jacob R. Chase, 19, of Longmeodow, and Robert Klahre, Jr., of Ryetown, N.Y. (both residents of Grayson Dormitory) were canoeing with Duffy on the lake about 1 o.m. Sunday, when the craft overturned, sending the three into the water. The students then attempted to swim ashore and Chase, the first to reach safety, entered one of the 94 cabins along the lake and called friends at a nearby cabin who informed police of the incident. Klahre was found wandering around the area later that morning, after apparently spending the night in another cabin, police said.

The three students were apparently staying with about 10 others for the weekend at a cabin owned by the parents of UMass student Christopher Saner of Northampton, another Grayson dormitory resident.

Trooper Dion said the students were unable to provide the exact locotian of the accident, but said Duffy was last seen swimming ashore by one of the men.

Officer Rick Cross of the Southwick Police Department, the head of the diving operations, said about 15 acres of the square-mile lake had been dredged yesterday and the operation would probably continue today.

"We've covered a good half of the loke," Cross said. "Half with divers and the other half with hooks."

Cross said visibility was hampered Sunday and Monday by a heavy layer of mud. While the lake is relotively free of weeds, there is much debris on the bottom, slowing the dredging operations, he said.

Trooper Dion said several members of the Springfield Police Department Diving Team had searched the lake Sunday and Monday, aided by a State Police helicopter and a private seaplane, owned by a summer resident of the lake.

Participating in yesterday's search were members of the State Police, the Huntington Police and Fire Departments, the Department Marine and Recreational Vehicles in Springfield, the State Department of Natural Resources, the Southwick Police Department and the Army Corps of Engineers from Knightsville Dam in Huntington.

Northampton Board of Health rejects new dumpsite

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

In the wake of recent local dumping problems, the Northampton Board of Health last week unanimously voted to reject a proposal for a new dump site, and has instead made plans to improve the quality of its present landfill site on Glendale Road.

Armond Duseou, co-owner of Calduwood Inc., a Florence-based solid waste disposal firm, hod proposed a four-acre addition to the present city dump orea. Duseau's proposal states that the additional property would be privately owned by the Calduwood firm, not city-owned-as the present site is, City Councilor Robert Joyce said.

Joyce said state officials from the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering had advised the town to correct their current problems before attempting to open up new land.

The state told him that the current dump did not have an adequate line, allowing chemicals and deposits to seep into the grounds water.

The state told him that the current dump did not have an adequate liner, allowing chemicals and deposits to seep into the ground water.

Joyce said he was also told by the DEQE that the dump was only at one third of its capacity and that the town was to "get more life out of the current dump" before any attempts to expand were made.

Northampton City Health Agent Peter McERlain said up until now the Calduwood firm has done a "reasonably good" job at operating the dump, but that new federal and state regulations will be put into effect soon, and there's a question of whether the Northampton dump will be able to comply to the new regulation.

"At this point we're not sure if we can continue to operate on the new regulations," McErlain said.

The new regulations require that a liner be applied to the landfill to prevent water from seeping through the waste and causing leaching to occur, said McErlain. He said one farmer owning property adjacent to the dump has complained that traces of iron have been found in a stream that his livestock drinks from, and that the animals will not readily drink the water.

"We suspect that some leachate is underground and moving into nearby spring water that flows into the Hannum Brook," McErlain said. "The spring water does show that iron is present, but a certain amount occurs naturally. The noticeable red tint has been proven to be iron, but it can't be proven that it came from the dump."

DYSLEXIA:
Student displays noblest effort

When Jeremy Scott was in the 5th grade he was told by one of the top psychiatrists in the country that he would have to drop out of school by the time he reached the age of 16, or he would suffer a nervous breakdown.

Jeremy ignored her advice and is now a 21-year-old junior at the Universify of Massachustts maintaining a B- average.

This is one way a dyslexic person might see the sentence. "This is what a learning disabled person frequently has to contend with when attempting to read a book."

This si waht a lear-

Jeremy is just one of over a million people in the United States suffering from the learning disability known as dyslexia, a brain abnormality which impairs an individual's ability to read, write, spell, and sometimes even speak. The person may confuse the letters b, d, p, and q, for instance. He may not hear the differences between similar words. Cramped, illegible handwriting is another frequent symptom, along with transposing letters without realizing it when writing a word.

Paul Appleby, coordinator of the UMass office of Handicapped Student Affairs, estimates there are at least 100 dyslexic students on campus.

Not many people are aware that dyslexia is prevalent in society because it is so easy to hide. Some of the more notable people who had reading disabilities include Albert Einstein, Woodrow Wilson, Nelson Rockefeller, Thomas Edison, and Hans Christian Andersen.

Though Jeremy's IQ rate is in the genius category, he can only read at the 4th grade level.

"I am able to understand extremely complex concepts, but then I can get confused by the simplest equation," he said. "My comprehension and retention rate when reading are unbelievably low because the images of words don't get implanted in my brain properly."

Besides dyslexia, Jeremy is also afflicted with an eye problem.

"My eyes diverge because the muscles are weak, and I see double up to three and a half meters in front of me unless I really focus on an object. This is just another problem when it comes to school and reading because I have to strain slightly to see. So, no matter how interesting a book may be, after a period of a half hour, I fall asleep."

Although they have glasses which would help Jeremy, he doesn't wear them because his eyes would get weaker. Instead he does exercises every day to strengthen them.

"I sit in a dark room and move a pen light towards my eyes while I concentrate on it," Jeremy said.

Perserverance pays off

Jeremy's family discovered he suffered from dyslexia when he was in the 3rd grade.

"I had a teacher who noticed by talking to me that I was obviously above normal intelligence, but was failing the most menial of academic tasks," Jeremy said.

From there he went on to doctors, optometrists, psychiatrists, and psychologists who gave him brain wave tests, custom-made IQ tests, and a variety of other examinations.

"People were concerned that I was always working too hard and not getting any reward for it," Jeremy said. "When I was little I'd come home crying frequently because I was trying twice as hard as everyone else in my classes and was still failing most of the subjects.

"My parents built up my confidence. They didn't care if I failed just as long as I tried my hardest. I decided to come to college because I knew I couldn't quit. Perserverance pays off."

There are only a few people at UMass who know Jeremy has dyslexia.

"I never tell anyone about it anymore, because when I was younger I told people and they thought I was strange or a freak or something."

"Other kids think I'm stupid because I often get bad grades, and I don't feel like explaining to them what's wrong, because they don't understand," Jeremy said. "I don't want them to think I'm different, so deep down inside I just say to myself that everything is going to be fine. As long as I know that I'm doing my best, that's all that counts.

"I rarely tell my professors about it either, because I want to succeed on my own and there's nothing they can do anyway," he added.

"One of my most frustrating experiences at this university came about when I wanted to buy an abbreviated version of a text book for a class. The professor didn't believe that I had dyslexia and thought I was just trying to get out of the work," he said.

Jeremy said he never looks for any special breaks, favors, or advantages. "I want to do it on my own," he said.

"However, if it looks like I'm going to flunk a course, then I will go to see the professor. I just approach the instructor to see if he can assist me in any way to learn the material faster. Unfortunately, there's not much they can do."

The Handicapped Student Affairs office urges students with dyslexia to let them now so they can inform their professors that the student may have some difficulty with a course.

Jeremy said he wasn't aware of the service, but he wouldn't use it anyway, because he wants to do things himself without anybody knowing.

This attitude, apparently common with people who have

He said he is concerned that because an audit of the Student Activities Trust fund is being done by an outside firm, he wants to pay particular attention to all transactions.

Wallace said he did not think the possible charge of alledged misappropriation of funds was overly dramatic in order to make his point.

Wallace said the only indication he received from Geary that materials were bought was a yellow piece of paper which indicated that $102 of the $300 senate allocation was used to purchase supplies.

"I know someone has those receipts," he said.

Wallace said his statement earlier this week that the senate mimeograph machine could only be used by members of an RSO group, was incorrect. He said he wanted a new paplicy to limit the use of senate equipment.

The PSA, which is not an RSO group, printed some leaflets on the senate machine.

Eunice Kanieczny, senior clerk in the senate office said that during her 20 years in the positian any person who supplied their own paper and ink cauld use the machine.

Wallace said, "I'm wrang in precedent."

Wallace said he would nat request judicial action but would present the material to the senate's finance committee.

"All I'm going to da is try to finish the investigation and let the (finance) committee decide what to do," he said.

He had said Sunday that he was going to approach the Student Attorney General to request judicial action an the charges.

Geary said she did nat know why Wallace was halding her responsible for the maney.

Wallace said, "She task the P.O.s (purchase orders), so she's responsible."

Conference at reservoir indicates low water level

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Staff

Amherst officials held a press conference at Hawley Reservoir in Pelham yesterday to dramatize the seriausness of the persisiting water shortage, and to remind town residents that the ban an outdoar water use is still in effect.

Amherst Town Manager A. Lauis Hayward said a reduction of 25 percent at "narmal water cansumptian" rates will be required until sufficient rains came to alleviate the shartage. He said that consumption rates have risen to "normal levels" of approximately 3.7 million gallons per day in the last two weks.

Hayward stressed that "canservation is vital" as lang as dangerauslay low water levels at area reservairs persist. Hawley, Hill and Atkins reservairs all have water levels eight feet below normal, a memarandum from Hayward to the Baard of Selectmen said. It also said, "the total community is nat conserving at the level anticipated."

"Hawley reservoir is virtually dry, and the Atkins reservair pump has been placed an law-speed," Hayward said. These two reservairs, which are part of the Pelham water system, are needed to supplement water supplies from three area wells, he said.

Yaffa Grassman, a member of the Amherst Water Project, said a great deal of water conservation can be accomplished simply through changing water-use habits in the home.

"Over 40 percent of water-use in households goes to toilets. Each flush uses five to seven gallons of water," she said. A plastice jug, weighted down with a few stones and placed in the toilet-tank, can conserve up to a gallan of water per flush, Grossman said.

She said that easily affordable water-saving shower heads and turning off water while brushing teeth are conservation aids.

"The selectmen are asking that everyone take three minute showers," she said.

Black caucus berate Reagan

Courtesy of The Miami Times

WASHINGTON — "We will see a strong and swift loss of civil rights gains" if Ranald Reagan becomes president, according to Cardiss Collins, chair of the Congressional Black Caucus and Illinois congresswoman.

Representative Callins held a press conference on the Capitol steps today with several members of the Caucus to speak as individual congressianal members about Reagan's "claims of support far black people."

Addressing an audience of 30 to 40 reporters including the three major networks, Callins said blacks have to be vigilant to ensure the gains of the past 20 to 25 years are not lost, so "we can continue to gain the rights we deserve. We cannat afford to roll around in the inertia af complacency."

Congressman William Gray of Pennsylvania lambasted Governor Reagan's advisors wha he says "support apartheid in South Africa and support guerillas in Anglola." Speaking about Reagan, Gray said he doesn't understand "our concerns are not only domestic, but are with our brothers and sisters in Africa."

Gray also cited Reagan for support of minority rule in Zimbabwe and support of minority rule in Namibia. Governor Reagan would react to the Afghanistan situation by blocking Cuba and intervene in Angola by sending military aid, Gray added. "this would be a disaster."

As for domestic issues, Gray said "Governor Reagan is insensitive to the needs of minorities. He has described people on unemployment as grappling young bucks looking for foodstamps so they can buy a T-bone steak."

Representative Charles Rangel of New York responded to a reporter's question by saying "I wouldn't call the governor a racist, it might attract support to him. But, more impartantly, we are concerned with his stand an particular programs and particular issues."

country.

Counting deaths from the resulting nuclear fall-out, Ellsberg said the death toll might have neared five to six hundred million.

The U.S. used eight million tons of bombs in Indochina, Ellsberg said. This, he added, was equivalent to a Nagasaki a week for seven-and-one-half years.

"I believe the Carter Doctrine and the way it is used in the Persian Gulf is the most public threat of nuclear weaponry in recent history," Ellsberg said.

Both Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan are offering similar arms policies, Ellsberg said. There is "some advantage in voting for Carter who says what he proposes is disasterous. Four years ago Carter campaigned for the abolition of nuclear weapons. We have taken a circuitous path to that," he said.

Graduate Senate backs tax debate

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate agreed unanimously last night to help sponsor the October 22 debate organized by the Campus Coalition Against Proposition 2½.

The debate will include representatives from the Statewide Coalition to Vote No on Question 2, a spokesperson from the Campus Coalition Against Proposition 2½ said. She said she would hope people of the business community in favor of Proposition 2½ will also participate in the debate.

Proposition 2½ is a referendum on the November 4 ballot to limit property taxes to 2½ percent of the property's market value.

The problem with proposition 2½, the spokesperson from the Coalition Against Proposition 2½ said, is that local townships will suffer. The tax limit will create about a 40 percent cut in revenues to the towns. Two-thirds of most towns' budgets are used to fund school systems. Therefore a large monetary cut would be from public education.

The Graduate Student Senate took a stand against Proposition 2½ last year, and reaffirmed their position. Co-sponsoring the debate, the Senate will show the support from student Government groups on this issue, said president Jack Delmond.

The Senate also voted on an increase in the Graduate Senate Tax. It was agreed by an eleven to nine vote that the tax would be increased by $1 for the next two semesters.

Another financial matter discussed was the decision of the finance committee to donate $250 to help the workers at the Amherst Nursing Home.

The finance committee will look into how this money should be spent. The money is intended for reimbursing nursing home employees for some of their pay lost inthe strike. Other uses for the money have been suggested but not agreed on.

Editorial/Opinion

Introspection

This is the fourteenth consecutive year that the Municipal Buildings Officials Conference has been held at UMass. According to one conference organizer, the conference is comprised of public building inspectors, working for state, city and town governments. They are all aggressively concerned with creating better approaches to inspections, developing future educational programs, dispensing information on structural system, fire safety and energy conservation, and the safe use of alternative energy systems in public buildings.

A lively university campus amidst the splendorous foliage of a Berkshires autumn must offer at least aesthetic advantages over other conference facilities in the state. As an added bonus, our university can provide this group with a case study in which to conduct their investigations of inspection approach improvements.

Held in the Campus Center, which has earned the dubious distinction of being one of few similar concrete structures where water can pass from the roof down through eleven contiguous floors, the conference has tens of different building flaws around campus to use as samples of what not to allow to persist in their own communities.

We can be sure the building inspectors will implement some of the programs they develop at UMass back home. Also, we can trust the University not to invest conference fees into building repairs, thus preserving the campus' model-of-decay qualities. But can they keep up the foliage?

The PVTA

For those of us who have stood shivering in the cold far from home the relief felt at the sight of a warm PVTA bus approaching is a well known and understandable feeling.

The PVTA bus service we enjoy here in the Amherst/Northampton area is the second largest in the state and the best run. Yes, that's right, the best run. The graffitti covered, rattling; stinking buses of the Metro T simply cannot compare to the clean "whisper-buses" that glide through our community.

Despite the fact that PVTA bus driver's watches are always two or three minutes ahead or behind of our own, no matter how often we adjust them, the closeness afforded our spread out community by the bus service radically improves the quality of life for us and the non-student community.

The failings of the PVTA—service that begins too late on Sundays and ends too early on weeknights, to name two—pale in the face of the tales and legends of frustration, confusion, and red tape that characterize another important part of our lives, the University.

Paul's Confusion: Part Six

by Eric Janszen

Six weeks have passed since Paul's first class, where his professor rendered harsh judgement on him and his classmates for having some part, as affluent Americans, in the suffering of millions of total strangers the world over...

Now, as the midterm exam period approached, Paul's housemate Peter sits in the library furiously studying in an attempt to engrave the important from the trivial, the pertinent from the irrelevant; to pass gibberish into coherence, noice into candence. Thank God, he thought, turning over his textbook and pressing it hard against the formica desktop, I don't have to discern the lies. He pressed until the binding crackled.

He had studied his calculus, his physics and his logic. Now Peter prepared to do his Humanities coursework. This he did by slipping a half pint of Jack Daniel's from his backpack, removing the cap and taking a long sip.

"Graaaahl" he exclaimed and shook his head, banging the bottle down onto the desk. Seven students crowded around a table adjacent to his little desk turned simultaneously to stare at him. Peter glared back, widening his eyes as if shocked, and barked.

"Ruff! Rurrruff-ruff!" he said. The table of onlookers returned their eyes haltingly to their books and writing. Peter continued to gaze at the bushy-haired woman who was the only one at the table to remain oblivious, even though she was closest to him. My hero, he thought.

Peter took out a xeroxed article and put it on the desk before him. He had another sip of JD, read the opening paragraph and had another sip. He reread the forth sentence three times. "Rational Man is a set of assumptions used by economists to make the human element in their models easier to handle." He underlined the word "easier" and took another sip of JD. "Gibberish," he said.

Suddenly, the woman who had ignored Peter before placed her finger in her book and turned to him. "What?" she asked politely.

"Gibberish," he replied, pointing to the xerox.

"It's not good?"

"Nothing I'd break copyright laws to give to a bunch of students like me."

"Maybe your professor's not concerned about students like you." Peter took another sip. "There probably aren't a lot of students like you, I mean, that are still in school," she said, eyeing the now half empty, black labelled bottle clenched in his hand.

"State dependent learning," he said, taking a large gulp. A man to the woman's right glanced at her irritably. She went back to reading.

Peter spread the New York Times out in front of him and read the headlines. He looked for something about the Presidential election but there was nothing, only a comment from one of the candidates, Ed Jockalot, on the Secretary of Defenses's announcement that U.S. ground troops had been sent to the Persian Gulf. He said, "Finally our President seems to understand the importance of defending our allies. It is unfortunate that he allowed the enemy to build up its own forces before taking action. Now it's too late to deter them. We are in a dangerously defensive position."

"They keep this up and I'll have to change my plans to go to law school..." Peter said aloud, cutting himself off with another swig. To the bushy-haired woman, "I was so looking forward to cheating elderly ladies out of their husbands' estates," he said.

"You shouldn't try to study and keep up with the papers also," she said, not looking up from her book. "It gives you the sensation of picknicking in a mine field."

And now financial aid cuts

To the Editor:

In the face of today's economic disasters, students of this univesity and other public institutions of higher education are experiencing increasing difficulty in affording a quality education.

Education should be a right, not a privilege. But annual budget-slashing, tuition hikes, and now financial aid cutbacks make it difficult for many—and impossible for some—to pursue an education here.

Academic departments have also been affected. Last year there were problems with the Spanish department's budget, to name one of a few. This year, several sections of a popular math course were cancelled because of inadequate funding.

Financial aid reductions have afflicted a large portion of the student body with added monetary burdens. Some are forced to take out loans, while many others are being informed that they personally owe the University, which in turn must reimburse the government agencies which administer financial aid policies.

These issues should be a matter of serious concern for all students, regardless of their personal financial status.

Students United for Public Education (SUPE) is a group that exists to combat the grave attacks on these economic aspects of public higher education. This struggle involves researching the issues, informing the public, and communicating our needs and concerns to elected officials of the government, among other activities.

Become involved in this critical aspect of your education!

King still vetoing bottle bill

To the Editor:

It's been seven years of fighting, and Massachusetts still doesn't have a bottle bill. Despite overwhelming support from people throughout the Commonwealth, Governor King, backed by the bottling industry, has managed to ignore the public interest and has failed to sign the bill into law.

Outraged by this anti-consumer attitude, Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) students vowed to continue their fight for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill. The goal now is to gain support of two-thirds of the House and Senate in order to make a future King veto ineffective. To accomplish this, MASSPIRG has once again put the issue on the ballot.

The Bottle Bill imposes a state-wide mandatory deposit on every bottle and can. This measure would reduce highway litter and solid waste, conserve energy and bring down the price of beer and soda. This bill is currently working in Oregon, Vermont, Maine, Michigan, Connecticut, Iowa and could work well in Massachusetts.

MASSPIRG, in conjunction with local environmental and civic groups, is launching an educational campaign in the Third Hampden District (Agawam and surrounding area) in an effort to formally direct their representative, Edward J. Connelly, through a strong referendum, to support the bill.

MASSPIRG volunteers collected the necessary signatures to place a Bottle Bill advisory referendum on the November ballot in the district of a state representative who has continued to vote against the legislation, despite the substantial public support in his district.

Our goal cannot be accomplished, however, without the support of student volunteers and faculty endorsers. The success of our campaign depends largely upon cooperation and response from Amherst and the University community. To achieve the two-thirds vote necessary to override a veto, we must show legislators that we are serious about this fight and will not stop until Massachusetts has a Bottle Bill. For more information call MASSPIRG at 256-6434 or stop by our office in the Carriage Shops (Upper Level).

Police plan to double patrol over masquerading weekend

By HENRY GRIFFIN
Collegian Correspondent

In addition to the Campus Center closing on Halloween weekend evenings, the University of Massachusetts police department will impose a more stringent policy to deal with the increasing problems of the event, according to Police Chief Robert Joyce.

Joyce said that "although there were no effective steps that weren't taken in the past" to prevent such a crisis, his department will be "doubling patrols and maintaining a high visibility over the entire compus to prevent a similar situation. He referred to the high levels of anti-social behavior present during past Halloween weekends.

A report published by the Office of the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs said the University police made 4.1 percent of their arrests and 10.7 percent of their protective custodies for the 1979-80 academic year during the Halloween weekend. Over all, there were 14 arrests and 28 protective custodies, according to the report.

The report also stated that alcohol abuse was severely high over the weekend, resulting in the high number of protective custodies, and mentioned the large amounts of broken beer bottles littering the compus. Fourteen of 51 persons treated in the emergency room at the University Health Services had alcohal-related complaints.

The report stressed however, that many of the problems involved non-students: 23 of 28 protective custody cases, 9 of 14 arrests, and 15 of 51 persons treated for traumo injury at the Health Services were non-students.

One step taken to reduce the instances of violence and vandalism this year is the closing of the Campus Center. Joyce was hopeful that the news of the building's closing would "discourage outsiders from coming on compus by limiting their access to university property.

dyslexia, is demonstrated through the office of Handicapped Student Affairs which deals regularly with four dyslexic students, even though its coordinator estimates the university to have 25 times that number.

No programs help

Jeremy said there are no programs available at UMass to aid dyslexic people.

"The only thing that comes close is the Communications Skills Center," said Jeremy. "However, it's just a waste of time for me because it's not geared towards a person with my type of disability."

One thing Jeremy has been able to excell in all his life is athletics. Doctors can't understand how he can play with his eye problems. Yet, year after year, Jeremy has been a star in every sport he attempts and has set many records.

While at UMass, Jeremy has been competing on a varsity team since he was a freshman. "I hope to go on and build a career in some sort of athletic field because that's the only thing I've ever really been able to persevere in and gain self-esteem," he said.

College life at UMass has not been much of a change for Jeremy because he has had to deal with the same types of problems all his life.

Jeremy did not want his true identity made known because, "If people know who I am then they might make exceptions for me, and I don't even want people to think about it, because I don't think about it as a handicap."

A melody of 'Fools' focuses on partying tunes at the 'Nail'

The Fools
The Rusty Nail
Sunderland

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

These guys are nobody's fools.

They were smart enough, after all, to make sense out of an otherwise pathetic tune — "Psycho Killer" by the Talking Heads — and rewrite it as "Psycho Chicken," eliminating the French entirely. At the Rusty Nail on Saturday, the Fools showed that correcting the works of others is their forte. Simon and Garfunkle's "Sounds of Silence" was a show-stopper as a hard rock tune, and "Hang on Sloopy" had the packed "Nail" dancing frantically to this three chord classic. Better still is their clearly relevant rendition of "I Won't Grow Up" from Peter Pan.

In a brief interview after the show, lead singer Mike Girard said: "Glad to meet you, Rob, excuse me..." (leaves dressing room). The other Fools are Rich Bartlett, guitar; Doug Forman, bass; Chris Pedrick, drums; and Stacey Pedrick, guitar. Together, they comprise and irreverant group of mirthmakers who are on the verge of making it big nationally. Their first Album, Sold Out, (EMI), doesn't unfortunately, contain "Psyche Chicken" (available as a single if you can find it) and falls short of capturing their live foolishness. Sold Out does, however, include "It's a Night for Beautiful Girls" the sweetly sexist, almost-reggae, almost-hit which was previously released as a single.

On stage, the Fools endorse partying with such vigor that it would seem impassible to come away unaffected. And just think — someday all America might be listening to this stuff.

The opening band Singnal has been getting quite a bit of exposure lately. Group leader Michael Gregory Jackson is undeniably talented, and is featured in this month's issue of Guitar Player magazine. Many of Signal's songs are repetitive to the point of annoyance, and the band seems unclear of their direction. With time, luck, and work, though, this band could become the next Zark and the Quasara.

THE WILD, THE INNOCENT AND THE TICKET LINE SHUFFLE — More news on Bruce...Yawn...Springsteen's dates at Madison Square Garden (November 27 & 28) have sold out by mail order and all that remains to be announced on the itinerary are the dates for the wind-up shows at the Palladium in NY and the gigs in Boston and Providence. A CBS spokesperson told me yesterday that since all of the dates are grouped together near the earlier part of the tour on the East coast swing, it's likely the remaining shows will take place sometime in late December. Looks like Brucy wants to spend Xmas in New England...In a related development, CBS New York announced yesterday that beginning January 1, 1981, the Boss will begin another tour to hit the cities he missed on this one...

BREAKING UP IS ... UH ... HARD? TO DO — New Musical Express, that elitist British rag, reports the disintegration of Public Image. This is the second time that Johnny tydon (nee Rotten) has been involved with a "less than successful" group, lest we forget the infamous Sex Rifles. For all the mouthing off about his desire to "destroy the record industry," it looks like the industry might have similar feelings about Johnny...And speaking of break-ups, the Patti Smith Group is not, contrary to vox populi, only on an "extended vacation." PSG's lead guitarist Lenny Kaye was married last month to Stephanie Richardson of Spokane, Washington and is still talking about the release of a live album real soon. In the meantime, Patti, who was married last summer to ex-MC5 member Fred "Sonic" Smith (no incest, that's his name), was last seen in August at a benefit concert-poetry reading for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. She is reportedly writing new material and will make a comeback soon. Let's hope so...all these Debby Harry clones are getting silly.

..."THIS IS A RECORDING" — Virgin Records artists XTC have a new one out, it's called Black Sea...Local new wave favorites the Paper Dolls have a first single in the works; "I Thought You Knew" b/w "Shouldn't Do This." It's coming out on the Techno Tunes label... Rolling Stones Record's new protege jim Carroll will release his first album Catholic Boy on October 13. This ex-junkie, dubbed "the male Patti Smith" promises to be real hot. We'll look forward to hearing him...And, as was mentioned in last week's column, Springsteen's next LP, TheRiver, will be out next Monday, October 13. Though CBS said October 6 for this release date last week, due to shipment arrangements, as yours truly predicted, a week delay was considered the norm. So cough up a fin and a half for this two-record set!

...SEND THEM TO ME —Well, not quite yet. In a late afternoon telephone conversation yesterday with Rolling Stones Records, I was told the following: "The Rolling Stones will tour the US next year." Of course these boys are unpredictable, and things can change, but what this response seems to indicate is that Decadence Incorporated is holding true to their standard practice in putting their main product on the American road only once every three years. The Stones have toured, in the last decade, only four times through the States; 1969, 1972, 1975 and 1978. But what this news also means is a new album will be released in conjunction with the tour, which goes along with Keith Richards' babble in all the rock mags about having more tunes in the can and spending more time on the road. So tell all your friends back in Brooklyn and Newton to sit tight, they won't have to sleep out at the Gardens for awhile yet...

LOCAL STUFF— Don't forget Jeff Beck tickets are still on sale for tomorrow night's show at the Cage. They'll cost a dollar more if you wait. Also, UPC has asked me to inform you that Bob Marley tickets may be exchanged for Beck's concert, or, if you're really dead set about your plans for tomorrow and don't want do that, you can get your Marley money refunded...The Hatch will feature hree nights of music this weekend. On Thursday it's The New Flames, Friday it's a special edition of the regular Tuesday night Rock 'n Reggae" disco with WMUA's Jim McDee spinning vinyl for you until one in the morning, and on Saturday it's Martian Highway, a local band that does some good Grateful Dead covers, as well as originals...At Rahar's nest Monday, The Sranglers will perform for all you Albert DeSalvo worshippers...This Friday and Saturday it's NRBQ at the Rusty Nail, and at the QR an Saturday will be Arista recording artists the Elevators with the Paper Dolls opening for them. Later!

TASTE THE BEER THAT OUTSELLS MOLSON GOLDEN IN CANADA: LABATT'S.
Good news!
Labatt's, Canada's No. 1 selling beer, is now imported to the U.S.
So, now it's easier to compare the taste of our Labatt's with the brew of our friendly competitor.
See what you think.
We, like most other Canadians, prefer a bottle of Labatt's Beer over a Golden.
If we didn't, we'd likely be drinking Molson® instead—and we certainly wouldn't be running this ad.
THINK OF CANADA
THINK OF LABATT'S

P.S. The green Labatt's bottle comes equipped with one of those twist-off tops—which can be rather handy especially whilst one is otherwise engaged

Rahar's happening with the newest positively free funk

The Bush Tetras, the Scientific Americans and the Suburbs
Rahar's Northampton
Oct. 3 and 4

By STEVE WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

The Scientific Americans, probably the Valley's best known local band, played a three-night stand at Rahar's in Northampton this weekend. The band played Thursday night with the Psychedelic Furs, Friday with the Bush Tetras, and Saturday with the Suburbs. Together, these four bands presented the best example of what is happening in music today that has been seen in this area in recent memory.

The Bush Tetras, a four piece band from New York City, dispelled any notions the audience might have had about what a "GIRL BAND" is supposed to be. The Bush Tetras lineup is all female except for drummer Dee Pop, but the group engage in none of the cutesy, coy "feminine" actions of, say, the B-Girls or Pat Benetar. With guitarist Pat Place of the original Contortians, the group's sound is fast and funky with roots in soul music and the "no-wave" movement in New York. Laura Kennedy on bass is rhythmic and refined and Cynthia Sley on lead vocals is quite adequate if somewhat subdued, but accolades go to Ms. Place's amazing guitarwork. She has became much more melodic since the Contortians, while still experimenting with add sounds and textures. She may miss occasionally, but the hits make it well worth it. The Bush Tetras were well received by the crowd, which packed the dance floor throughout the set. More should be said about this fine band, but unfortunately this reporter was far too liberal in his libation that night, which has resulted in a certain haze settling over the memory of the performance. Ah well, we learn by our mistakes.

The Suburbs, a quintet from Minneapolis, also did quite well at Rahar's the following night. Although the band claims that its roots are in black music, such as ska and funk, they sounded a bit raunchier than that. The guitars predominate, backed by a sturdy rhythm section of Hugo and Dave on drums and bass, respectively. Chan on piano adds a melodic touch that keeps the sound from ever becoming noisy or irritating. The other Suburbs are Chuck and Bruce on guitars. In their three years of existence, the Suburbs have made quite a respectable name for themselves. Their album, on TwinTone records, reached Number 7 on the British music charts, and the band has toured successfully all over the country. We'll be hearing more from the Suburbs. Although they're not as innovative as the Bush Tetras, they are a lot of fun.

Despite the quality of the aforementioned bands, I still found the Scientific Americans to be the most memorable of the weekend. Although based in Northampton, the Sci-Ams are not highly visible and do not play every night. Furthermore, except for a benefit gig in Northampton this Friday, these shows were the last that the band will be playing in this area for a while. Consequently, these shows were particularly exciting for their fans.

The Scientific Americans currently consist of three performing members--bassist, guitarist, and keyboards-- plus a saundman. A rhythm machine is used in lieu of drums, and although this is often a very limiting instrument, it helped that the box was actually played and not just set for each song. The band's sound has evolved from a more conventional rock format into a laaser, freer, funkier sound. The absence (or lessening) of crashing power chards and the use of the bass for melody rather than only rhythm make the sound more danceable and more original. The overwhelmingly positive reaction of the crowd on both nights is ample proof that the Sci-Ams are moving in the right direction.

The Scientific Americans, who played at Rahar's last weekend, are, from left: Jim Whitemore, keyboards and synthesizers; Craig "Crank" O'Donnell, bass; and Chris Vine, guitar.

Sugar and Spice was the winning team led by Liz Skelton and Wilma Tynes who each won an event and placed second.

Beta Kappa Phi was the men's team champion winning five of 11 events.

★Zoo Disc

Zoo Disc came out strong, stayed psyched up, and inched by the Boston B.A.D. men. The ever-poised and confident visitors managed to score three quick goals in the game's final minutes, closing to within one, but Zoo Disc held on, 12-11. UMass joined Cornell and the New Jersey Knights of Nee in the diminishing ranks of the undefeated.

Cornell received a bye in the next round, and so the home town favorites took on the bank of giants from Jersey, in the team's first meeting ever.

The Knights are led by a sullen skyscraper called Igor, a gentleman credited with initially forming the Glassboro St. College ultimate team, the 1979 world champions. There are other Glassboro alumni on the Knights, as well as former Rutgers students. (Rutgers, one of the first schools to ever play frisbee competitively, is nothing less than an ultimate institution.)

Zoo Disc, playing against a zone defense that could just have well been barbed wire, was outclassed, outmatched, and outplayed, to the tune of 19-8. That left the Knights of Nee to play Cornell on Sunday for the championsip of the winners bracket, a game that the Knights subsequently lost.

Zoo Disc, playing in the quarterfinals, took on the Disc Demons of Cent. Conn., a team which surprised themselves, and the whole tournament field, by making it that far. It was a tie game at the half, 7-7, but then UMass fell apart, and Central went ahead by six. With less than 10 minutes to play, Zoo Disc began a dramatic comeback scoring five straight goals, and tying the game with less than two minutes to play. Central, receiving the disc, maintained enough composure to score another goal before time expired, winning 12-11 and eliminating Zoo Disc from the tourney.

The Knights, by going home after losing to Cornell, forfeited, so the final was between Cornell and Boston Aerodisc. Boston, whose only previous loss of the weekend came at the hands of Zoo Disc, played their usual solid game, but could not quite handle the "Buds" of Cornell, and lost by two.

Zoo Disc, whose season record dropped to a still-respectable 12-4 after the weekend, takes on Hampshire College this afternoon in the team's fifth meeting of the year. Gametime across from the Southwest horseshoe, is 4:15.

Booters make it two in a row

Dump UNH 2-0

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

"It wasn't the prettiest game, but a win's a win," UMass coach Russ Kidd said following his team's 2-0 victory over the University of New Hampshire Tuesday at Boyden Field.

The victory, which was the first home triumph for the men's soccer squad this season and its second consecutive win, keys the team up for Thursday's home battle against Boston University. The Terriers are ranked third in New England.

Tony M. and Tony G. Dias once again teamed to spark the Minutemen to victory.

Tony M. notched his fifth goal of the season on a penalty shot with 12 minutes left in the first half and Tony G. scored his third of the campaign with 2:22 remaining in the game.

The penalty kick was set up when Tony G. was tripped in the penalty area by Wildcat fullback Chip Rogers. Tony M. drilled a low, hard shot into the left corner past UNH goalie Bob Remeysen, who replaced starting netminder George Gaillardetz after he was injured early in the game.

Tony G. added the insurance goal when he left-footed a hooking shot past Remeysen after taking a feed from (you guessed it) Tony M.

UMass goalie Brett Olsher made six saves in the shut out. Olsher, who is now the Minutemen's number-one tender because of the absence of Matt Esteves, made the save of the game with five minutes left. With UMass clinging to a 1-0 edge, New Hampshire's Larry Westlake, a senior midfielder, had a partial break down the right side. As Westlake fired, Olsher charged out and made a diving save to prevent the deadlock.

"When they got it going Brett made that big save," Kidd said of the play.

Remeysen, who faced 16 UMass shots and made four saves, played goal for the first time in his college career following the leg injury to Gaillardetz.

"That kid never played there before," Kidd said. "He came in and just did a helluva job."

The Minutemen, who raised their record to 4-5, received a fine performance from freshman fullback Dave Shilo. Five-nine, 180-pound Shilo played in his first full game in the college ranks. Freshmen Kevin Flynn and Mike Runeare again looked sharp for the UMass booters, as did Dave Harrington and Chris New.

The Minutemen dominated play in the first half as they outshot the Wildcats 9-2 and contained the action on the UNH half of the field. However, UMass had its sloppy segments in the second half, and did not take the play to the Wildcats as they had in the first 45 minutes.

"We had some sloppy moments in the late part of the game," Kidd admitted. "We should have had four or five goals today."

UMass will have fullbacks Gary Deets and Gregg Draudt back for Thursday's game. Both Deets and Draudt are coming back from leg injuries. The status of fullback Joe Bortolotti, however, is still uncertain. Bortolotti suffered a minor concussion in the October 1st Harvard game.

"Hopefully we'll have everybody here (on Thursday)," Kidd said. "We're toughening up, that's for sure, but we're still too sloppy."

Chiefs at NOPE tonight

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

In what is considered to be the most important home match of the season, Springfield College will come to NOPE gym tonight to take on the UMass women's volleyball team.

Coming off a 5-1 performance and third place in the UMass Tournament last weekend, UMass will be seeking to defeat the Chiefs for the first time since forming as a varsity seven years ago.

"This is the most important match this year at home," said coach Elaine Marasco, "and I'm psyched for it. I think Springfield College is due for a re-awakening, because I think we should beat them."

Springfield College finished tenth in last weekend's Tournament, losing to tourney winner University of Delaware, runner-up Providence College and the New York Institute of Technology, who finished eighth.

Last year, the Chiefs beat UMass in three games 15-10, 15-8, 15-12.

The varsity will begin at 7 p.m., following the JV match at 5 p.m. At Clark University Monday night, the UMass JV's split a tri-match with Clark and Franklin Pierce College. The Minutewomen swept FPC 15-6, 15-4, while losing the Clark 13-15, 4-15. The split gives the JV's a 3-1 record. The varsity is 11-9.

Homecoming weekend includes road race

In addition to a bonfire on Friday and a parade on Saturday, this year's Homecoming Weekend will feature a seven mile Minuteman Road Race sponsored by the UMass Sports Club.

The race will preceed the Homecoming parade on Saturday and go through downtown Amherst and the countryside then return to the playing fields north of Alumni Stadium.

There will be prizes for males and females in open, masters, juniors (16 and under), UMass undergrad, grad student, UMass alumni, and UMass employee divisions.

Anyone interested can get entry blanks from 303 Whitmore, the main office in Boyden and at area sporting goods stores.

Starting time is 11 a.m. on Saturday.

Zoo Disc 5th in tourney

By JOEL ZUCKERMAN
Special to the Collegian

Zoo Disc, the University of Massachusetts ultimate frisbee team, won three out of five games this weekend, a record good enough for fifth place in a field of 24 teams.

The tournament was captured by perrenial ultimate power, Cornell University.

Zoo Disc, hosting the largest ultimate tournament ever to be held in the Northeast, started off strong on Saturday morning. They trounced Yale, 15-6, and advanced into the winners bracket of the double-elimination tourney. A bitter, hard-fought battle with Boston U. ensued, but Zoo Disc dug in, came from behind in the second half, and won, 12-10.

The third round of the tournament, played at about 3 p.m. on Saturday, would leave only three teams still undefeated. By this time, six of the original 24 teams had been eliminated. Among the teams which lost their first two games were neighboring Amherst and Hampshire Colleges, Boston College, and Brown U.

Zoo Disc was paired against the current New England champs, Boston Aerodisc, who earlier this season defeated the UMass team by more than 10 goals.

Fortunately, this rematch was no repeat.

TURN TO PAGE 15

The tide turns

Kevin Cullen

We all think about it. As kids we rehearse it, practice it to perfection. Count down the seconds. Three, two, one...

We always wanted to kick that last-second field goal, belt the bottom-of-the-ninth home run, hit the half-court player at the buzzer.

Tony G. Dias did the same thing as a kid. But, unlike most of us, Dias got the chance to act out his fantasy.

On Saturday, way up in Burlington, Vt., Tony G. Dias shut up a crowd.

Dias' goal, coming with one second remaining, lifted the University of Massachusetts soccer team to a 2-1 win over Vermont. More significantly, it could be, perhaps, the start of a new season for UMass.

"It came off a corner kick," Dias said, describing the last-second winner. "Douglas White crossed the ball with about six seconds left. Tony M. (Dias) tried to push it towards the net and it came over to me. I just headed it into the net."

Did he look to the clock?

"No way," Dias said. "I just cheered my brains out."

Dias' goal not only won the game, it put a muzzle on a boisterous Vermont crowd accustomed to seeing the Catamounts frustrate UMass up at the UVM field.

"When they (Vermont) were leading the whole game, that crowd was loud as hell," Dias said. "They were really noisy. But after we scored two goals in the last fifteen minutes to win, they shut up in a hurry."

Curiously enough, Saturday's dramatic goal was not Dias' biggest thrill here at UMass.

"It was up in Vermont, too, a couple of years ago," Dias says. "I scored a goal against (UVM goaltender Bart) Farley (now of Detroit in the NASL), and even though we lost (2-1), that was my biggest thrill."

Saturday's win, along with yesterday's 2-0 shutout of New Hampshire, could be a new start for a season which has been nothing short of frustrating for UMass.

"This team is all sophomores and juniors," says midfielder John J.T. Thomas. "Naturally, it was going to take some time for us to play together at our best."

Thomas and fullback Scott Cooper are the only senior starters on head coach Russ Kidd's young squad. Veteran midfielder Doug White sees UMass' rebirth as coming from within.

"We've had a tendency to hang our heads," White says. "We're a young club, and we had trouble playing when we got behind. I think people just got tired of losing.

"We needed a morale booster," White said. "And that Vermont win was just that."

One obvious improvement in the Minutemen's play is the abandonment, at least at Vermont and for the first half yesterday, of the long ball. Short, one-touch passes have helped produce two wins.

"Today was the first day we used the short pass all over the field," White said after yesterday's win. "Before we were using short passes just up the middle. We're using the whole field, now."

Cooper agrees.

"We are controlling the tempo of the game much more now," he said. "This team is a 100 percent better than when we were scouted by B.U. (who UMass plays tomorrow). We've just improved that much."

Of course, it may all be rhetoric. All this talk of change and improvement and short balls and long balls and last-second goals – all this could be a bunch of baloney. It could be nothing more than wishful thinking on the part of a team which still lacks a big goal scorer; a team which seems to lose a goaltender every month; a team which remains unranked in New England.

It could be all this, but it isn't.

"Is this the start of something big?" J.T. Thomas repeats the question. He pauses and grabs his chin.

"I think so," J.T. says. "I really do."

Technics New Class A receivers give you so much because they give you so little. 0.00% switching distortion. 0.00% FM drift.

Technics SA-616 and SA-818 (shown). Two uncommon receivers because of the two things they have in common: Technics synchro-bias circuitry and quartz-synthesized tuning. Together they give you that special something you've come to expect from Technics: sonic excellence.

Synchro-bias. What it does may seem complicated, but it sounds simply beautiful. With conventional amplifier designs, the output transistors constantly switch on and off as the input waveform goes from positive to negative. Technics synchro-bias eliminates switching distortion because it constantly sends minute amounts of current to the transistor not in use. And since the transistors don't switch on or off, distortion is eliminated.

So is FM drift because both receivers include our quartz-synthesized tuning system. With its quartz-crystal oscillator both the frequencies broadcast and those received are quartz-synthesized so tuner drift is completely eliminated. So is the hassle of tuning because both models can be preset to receive eight AM and eight FM stations.

MODEL	SUGGESTED PRICE*	RMS POWER PER CHANNEL (RATED BANDWIDTH)	RATED THD MAX.
SA-616	$680	80 watts, 20 Hz-20 kHz	0.005%
SA-818	$850	110 watts, 20 Hz-20 kHz	0.005%

*Technics recommended prices, but actual prices will be set by dealers.

You'll also like Technics acoustic control because its high and low range boost and filter switches can attenuate or boost two different frequency ranges.

IN ONE EAR

I saw the ad in the September Ampersand for the Warner Bros. album Troublemakers. Do I have to send away for it or will it be available in the record stores? If it's in the stores, will it be the same price?

Art Cobb
Bloomington, IN

Troublemakers is a mail-order-only sampler album—two albums, actually, for a mere $3. Send WB the money, they need it. If you can't find last month's Ampersand, here's that address: Warner Bros. Records, Box 6868, Burbank, CA 91510.

So what's wrong with my campus? I was down at Eastern Michigan University last year, visiting a friend, and saw Ampersand. Why aren't you distributed by Western Michigan? Prejudiced against westerners?

Tom Joyce
Western Michigan U.
And proud of it

It's not our fault. Ask your campus newspaper's business manager.

I enjoyed your article about Murray Langston, alias the Unknown Comic.

Could you tell me how to get one of those "centerfold" posters of Murray? I have an empty space on my wall, and I think it's just what I need.

An address and the cost would be most helpful. Thanks.

Darlene Ryle
Charlottesville, VA

Alas, Mr. Langston tells us the original Unknown Comic poster is no longer available, but he promises a new one soon. We'll stay alert.

You too may have your wise and wonderful words printed in this letter section, but first you must write us a letter. Simple! Send those kudos, complaints and comments to In One Ear, Ampersand, 1680 N. Vine Street, Suite 201, Hollywood, CA 90028.

The witch cat on the pumpkin, October's Halloween Ampersand of the Month, is by Karen C. Copeland of Hillsborough, NC. This is her third appearance in this slot (no, she is not related to any staff member). But anyone may submit an Ampersand of the Month; art must be original, in black ink on sturdy white paper, with artist's name clearly printed on the art. Send the goodies to Ampersand of the Month, 1680 N. Vine, Suite 201, Hollywood, CA 90028. Each chosen Ampersand of the Month earns its artist $25.

& OUT THE OTHER

Too Many Mamas

NO LESS THAN THREE projects based on the life of the late Mamas and Papas singing star Cass Elliot are currently planned. Cass' sister, Leah Kunkel (herself a singer/songwriter on Columbia and legal guardian of Cass' 14-year-old daughter, Owen Vanessa) announced plans for a film to be written by Carl (Jaws) Gottlieb, who will also direct (no title yet). Kunkel said she initiated the project simply because "I want an authorized, tasteful biographical film that would not exploit Cass' memory ... like The Buddy Holly Story, something that would protect her privacy but also inform. Actually," Kunkel added, "I'd like to see no project done for a long time, but people were coming out of the wall at an alarming rate." Actress Michelle Phillips, once a member of the group with Cass, announced, while a guest on the Merv Griffin Show, that she's working on a screenplay about Cass; about the same time Mamas and Papas cofounder John Phillips (recently in the news for his drug-peddling bust) said he would write a screenplay (a TV movie, reportedly) on Cass' life, collaborating with New York actor-director-writer Tamara Wilcox. It is this Phillips-Wilcox project to which Kunkel objects, passionately, which could lead to a serious collision ... in court.

Surprise Musical Partnerships of the Year

"WE'RE NOT AT LIBERTY to discuss it," say Tom Waits' managerial forces, and also a few of his close friends, but we have it on good authority that the ultimate saloon singer has wed Kathleen Brennan, an employee of 20th Century-Fox Studios. This would explain why Waits made several nervous phone calls to Ampersand before our September cover story hit the presses with the information that he was looking for "A white girl, with bad teeth and big tits." We wish him every happiness.

NEW WAVER JOHN HIATT, will play guitar on the upcoming Ry Cooder album. Cooder is best known for re-arranging blues and folk and ethnic musics into intriguing mosaics, most recently on the R&B-flavored Bop Till You Drop. Furthermore, Hiatt and his band will tour Europe as Cooder's backup band, a position once held by the legendary Chicken Skin Revue. "This Is the Way We Make a Broken Heart," a Hiatt tune, is scheduled for the next Cooder album, possibly with Rickie Lee Jones.

R. Hood & K. Arthur

SEAN CONNERY, Shelley Duvall, David Warner, John Cleese and Michael Palin (the latter two of Monty Python) will star in The Time Bandits, about which we know little except that the film takes place in Robin Hood times, was filmed on location in Morocco (that looks like Sherwood Forest?), was written by Pythons Palin and Terry Gilliam (the animator) directed by Gilliam, and executive-produced by Dennis O'Brien and George Harrison (who did the same for Life of Brian). Meanwhile, John Cleese starred in a BBC version of The Taming of the Shrew, directed by Jonathan Miller, which, if we're lucky, will eventually appear on American TV. The long awaited new Python album, released September 17, is titled Contractual Obligation Album, probably because it fulfills the group's commitment to that label. One of the tracks: "Life is Fine When You're 69," and they don't mean age.

GEORGE ROMERO, the director who gave us Night of the Living Dead and Dawn of the Dead (and featured in the September '79 Ampersand), has just finished shooting Knightriders (filmed in Pennsylvania, where Romero lives). Due for release next spring, Knightriders is a modern-day King Arthur legend on wheels, about a circus troupe in medieval drag that features twelve "knights" who joust (brutally, no doubt) on motorcycles. By December or January Romero will begin Shoo-Be-Doo-Be Moon, a science fiction fantasy about Fifties rock & roll in the future (say what?), after which Romero still has to film two Stephen King works, Creepshow and The Stand. Then, maybe, we'll get the final installment in Romero's trilogy, The Day of the Dead.

ANIMAL HOUSE and Blues Brothers director John Landis, the man of a thousand camera angles, is off to England, there to direct An American Werewolf in London. Landis wrote the script in 1969 while eighteen and "a flunky" on the set of Kelly's Heroes. "It's definitely not a comedy," says a Landis associate, "but it happens to be very funny." A Landis re-make of A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court is also tentatively planned. The Mark Twain satire has been filmed five times—Will Rogers did both a silent and a talkie version—but, so far, none has ever been faithful to the original. Landis was recently married to his long-time sweetheart Deborah Nadoolman, a costume designer.

Hit & Miss

ALIEN, 1979's hit film about the bloodlusting, ratchet-jawed people eater hiding in a spaceship, is semi-officially the first "hit" in the home video market, a segment of show business many observers believe will be worth tremendous bucks in the years to come. Released on videocassette in June, Alien has remained the industry's biggest seller ever since, expected to do $2 million by the end of the year. Suggested retail price is a horrifying $55.

WITH NO ONE HERE GETS OUT ALIVE, the Jim Morrison biography, high on bestseller charts, Elektra/Asylum will repackage several of the Doors' greatest tracks as Famous Radio Songs, due in early October.

TV or Not TV

YOUNG AND RESTLESS SUDS' stars David Hasselhoff and Wings Hauser, who play the Foster Brothers on the daytime weeper, have formed their own rock group called, yep, the Foster Brothers. Hasselhoff is the singer, Hauser the writer and player of guitar and keyboards (he had an RCA album in 1977 titled Wings Hauser).

Introducing the Italian sports car from Detroit. We gave Alejandro De Tomaso one of the most aerodynamic automobiles built in America. Dodge 024. We asked Italy's automotive legend to create a sport coupe that would satisfy all his exacting standards of style and performance. And Dodge De Tomaso was born.

Outside you are dazzled by a front air dam, rear air spoiler, wheel-house flares, rear quarter louvers and a distinctive brushed metal roof band.

Inside you are tempted by the comfort of the black cloth and vinyl high back sport bucket seats, the feel of a leather-wrapped sport steering wheel and the visual interplay of the instrumentation.

Fire up the 2.2 liter overhead cam engine and feel the power surge around you. A smooth four-speed manual transmission gets the show on the road with help from a 2.71 overall top gear ratio. Cast aluminum wheels and wide steel-belted radials. Front-wheel drive. A four-wheel independent sport suspension, rack-and-pinion steering and front disc brakes help Dodge De Tomaso shrug off the corners, smooth out the bumps and snap to a stop, quickly and precisely.

Of course, Dodge De Tomaso is not for everyone. But if you insist upon superior design, state-of-the-art engineering and an exhilarating driving experience, Dodge De Tomaso may be what you've been waiting for.

It's the one exotic Italian sports car that's made in America for the American road.

The Number of the Beast

ROBERT HEINLEIN

Plot Number One (Real Life)

The circumstances surrounding veteran science fiction author Heinlein's latest book are almost as interesting as the novel itself: after successful brain surgery, Heinlein tore up his novel in progress and started on TNOTB. Rights were auctioned off for an estimated $500,000. The Science Fiction Writers of America Model Contract was signed for the first time ever and immediately renegotiated upward. The book has split the Sci Fi world into very loud opposing camps.

Plot Number Two (The Book)

A scientist-genius, his daughter-genius, their friends the yenta-genius and the boychick-genius—all prime examples of Heinlein's "Competent Man"—are forced by aliens to leave their own universe. They start exploring the 666 immediately accessible universes (explaining the title).

Phil Farmer's Riverworld is a grand concept wherein anyone in history can meet anyone else. Heinlein goes one better and allows fictional characters. His genii go to Barsoom and Oz, where they meet both Alice and Lewis Carroll. Heinlein himself and all his friends show up. Best of all, Lazarus Long and all of Heinlein's past characters join the fun.

The book itself is very high value per dollar. It's an oversized trade paperback, the equivalent of over a thousand regular pages. Richard Powers' drawings are more illustrative than illuminating, but they're pretty.

I'd read about twenty pages and stop because I couldn't stand his too-perfect characters or the controversial statements he throws off as fact. Half an hour later I'd be back for another round. Heinlein is very exasperating and very good. TNOTB will probably annoy you, but it will never bore you. Give it a try.

The Soldier's Embrace

NADINE GORDIMER
Viking Press, $8.95

The short story form, which demands clarity, precision and strength, separates the writers from those who merely embroider with words. In today's literary climate where wretched excess often passes for profundity, the sheer stinginess of the short story form makes it fascinating, and there is no finer practitioner of the art than Nadine Gordimer.

Gordimer lives in Johannesburg, South Africa, where her books are banned by the censors as immoral and seditious. She's an insightful, knowing story-teller who weaves politics so tightly into her stories we're almost unaware of its presence; yet we could no more pull that political thread out than we could separate the warp from the woof in weaving without destroying the material.

Many of her stories deal with the duality of life in modern Africa: "A Soldier's Embrace" concerns a liberal white couple who want to stay in their homeland after the blacks take control, but find that too difficult. Far easier to go to a white-dominated country (implied but not expressed as South Africa) and work for the civil rights of blacks under a cruel system that still favors whites. No less stunning is "Siblings" about a crazy girl and the cousin who can't let go of her love, or "Time Did," in which a mature woman tells herself and her lover that he will soon leave her for younger flesh, less demanding minds.

Another story deals with a Swedish scientist who without thinking defies the race laws and takes as his mistress a colored girl, a transgression with dire consequences which neither of them will ever attempt again. Still another details an old love affair renewed when a piece of graffiti reminds a woman of what once was.

Gordimer uses words carefully; there are no wasted adjectives or gratuitous digressions. By writing so specifically about Africa, she lays a strong claim on universality. These short stories are a masterful collection of intensely drawn observations that, without moralizing, always reveal the moral center.

The Harder They Come

MICHAEL THELWELL
Grove Press, $12.95

The Book of Jamaica

RUSSELL BANKS
Houghton Mifflin, $10.95

The Book of Jamaica is a novel disguised as a first-person memoir. It suffers from 60 utterly superfluous pages of speculation on Errol Flynn's involvement in a Jamaican murder (is this international dump-on-Errol-Flynn-year or what?), a conclusion that doesn't resolve a damned thing and Banks' clumsy style throughout. I may not be a college teacher (as Banks is), but somehow stringing clause after clause of pointless detail into sentences that run on farther than Rosie Ruiz did in the Boston Marathon doesn't strike me as particularly good writing.

The bulk of the book concerns the nameless narrator's gradual immersion in black Jamaican culture and subsequent effort to bring together two scattered villages populated by descendants of the Maroons (prospective slaves who upon landing headed for the Jamaican interior and waged a 100-year guerrilla war culminating in a you-don't-bother-us, we-won't-bother-you treaty with the British circa 1739). The Book of Jamaica isn't very good but the rub is that Banks has tackled a good subject: the quandary facing a white person who has no sympathy for the exploitive actions of his own race but is irrevocably separated by color and culture from "the others" he feels more philosophically in tune with. It's a shame such a potentially rich theme goes to waste.

Michael Thelwell set out to write a Jamaican novel, not a novel about Jamaica, and The Harder They Come, like Perry Hentzell's classic film of the same name, is based on the exploits of the Jamaican folk hero Rhygin. Thelwell faithfully follows Hentzell's script in tracing protagonist Ivan Martin's development from naive country boy to street-wise urban hustler, reggae singer, ganja dealer and cop-killer hero, but this is a far cry from the quick-bucks novelizations being cranked out these days.

Thelwell's crucial contribution is an extensive account of the events and beliefs shaping Ivan as he grows up in rural Jamaica, which provides the necessary background for the emotional and ethical dislocations of life in the modern city. Thelwell also wisely avoids Anglicizing the rich Jamaican patois; it only takes about 50 pages (maybe 100 for reggae neophytes) to adjust to the rhythm and phrasing, making the book infinitely more authentic.

The one problem for me is that Ivan seems just a mite too unaware of the forces shaping events outside his own immediate world, particularly the transformation of his old rural homeland into a tourist wonderland that triggers his final blitzkreig bop through the Kingston ghetto. Still, The Harder They Come is an excellent book for the sheer enjoyment of a good, exciting story and the information to be gleaned about Jamaican society from the bottom up.

Getting by on $100,000 a Year (& Other Sad Tales)

ANDREW TOBIAS
Simon & Schuster, $10.95

Tobias may or may not be an astute financial advisor, but he is funny most of the time, charming when he isn't funny, and interesting always.

Getting by is a collection of his articles published in various magazines in the Seventies, including interviews with Paramount Pictures' Frank Yablans, a fabulously wealthy New York building tycoon, a blind investment broker, and several others. In one brief chapter, "Household Finance," Tobias writes simply and pithily about buying his co-op apartment in New York City, an episode that had me not laughing, howling. "Darts" tells us what we've always suspected—if we throw darts at a list of stocks and then buy those stocks that we impale, we'll come out equal to or ahead of the knowledgeable brokerage houses. The book's title piece is written with just the right balance between the tongue in Tobias' cheek and the concern in his heart for a friend who can't live within his $100,000 income.

In his introduction, Tobias explains the pitfalls of owning stock in a small Ohio oil company (the wells don't gush, they ooze—slowly): "I don't think of my oil as the batch in the tank of a speeding ambulance. I see it as the batch chauffeurs use to keep the motor running, air conditioning going, and windows rolled up when it is 70 degrees outside and they have two hours to kill while their passengers are in watching A Chorus Line. Mine is the oil that generates the electricity it takes to heat the water that's left running while the nation shaves."

A man after my heart. For years I've been ignoring Tobias' articles in Esquire, New York, et. al., reasoning that since I had no money, what did I need with financial advice? Now I know: I'll invest in Tobias. I'm on my way to find copies of his previous books, The Only Investment Guide You'll Ever Need, The Funny Money Game and Fire & Ice.

Periodical, $3.

Kingsley Amis, the author of Lucky Jim, The Anti-Death League, and a host of other smart, stylish and occasionally quite silly novels, writes wise and vaguely stodgy poetry, full of long gentlemanly metaphors but without much crispness of language. His Collected Poems 1944-1979 is, as any bag of 35 years' worth of anything has every right to be, a bit of a hodge-podge. There are some prematurely greying early works of some elegance, rather reminiscent of early Philip Larkin or John Wain ("Belgian Winter," "Retrospect"); there is some doggerel ("Fair Shares for All"); there is some sophomoric drivel ("Toys," "Report"); there are fine things ("Science Fiction," "A Song of Experience"—the latter with witty, well-crafted verses like "He tried all colours, white and black and coffee/Though quite a few were chary, more were bold/Some took it like the Host, some like a toffee/The two or three who wept were soon consoled."). Amis is an able versifier, but he seems dispassionately distant, the outsider looking through the window—noticing death behind the carnival mask of sex, say, then shrugging smugly and moving along the sidewalk.

An English-born poet only slightly younger than Amis, Dennis Silk, writes with an air of distance, too, but of a very different sort. In The Punished Land the author, who has lived in Jerusalem since 1955, seems to feel more strongly than most the spiritual implications of the ordinary, the deep religious possibilities of the merest object or encounter; these feelings seem to awe him. He is like, not a prophet, exactly, but a philosopher (in the older sense), passing (invisible?) through a "punished land," "too beautiful for its inhabitants"—but passing, at the same time, far too readily from the real world to the spirit world. Hardly getting his feet dusty he writes of "... the toes that attack me/because I am with them so seldom." His is the distance of riddle from truth.

R. G. Vliet's Water and Stone is a deceptively quiet collection of neat, image-rich work, largely what might be described as observations ("In a Photograph by Brady") or apercus ("The Shade," "Girls on Saddleless Horses"). There is also, incidentally, some particularly chilling cancer imagery in various places ("... cobalt's/basilisk stare, the destroyed blood"; "the crab/under the heart, the thickening node"); and the death-soaked title work, a sort of Japanese No drama, is frighteningly memorable.

Poetry East (paperback, $3) is a new periodical, edited by Richard Jones and Kate Daniels. This debut edition offers an eclectic, mostly finely-wrought bunch of verse, including a section of Swedish poems, from the imagist miniatures of Harry Martinson to the brusque commonplaces of Sonja Akkeson ("There is an interest in Swedish poetry here in America which is quite remarkable," says editor Jones, perhaps somewhat hopefully); a healthy chunk of presumably new American work (including a moving tribute to Cesare Pavese by David Wojahn and a backhanded one to the Irish poet Patrick Kavanaugh by the redoubtable Louis Simpson), and welcome translations of works by the Spanish poet Gloria Fuertes and the Hungarian poet Miklos Radnoti (who was executed in 1944 and some of whose works, including several represented here, were found on his body when it was exhumed two years later—a posthumous work if ever there was any).

If you think you could pick your beer with your eyes closed, here's your chance.

Probably just one beer drinker in 3 can pass this test.

All three major premium beers are distinctly different in taste. After all, they're made by different brewers using different ingredients and different brewing processes. Still, it takes a pretty educated tongue to tell them apart.

You may not win, but you can't lose.

This test requires a blindfold. That's so your eyes won't influence your mouth. Because taste is all that counts—in this test, and in a beer. Here's how the test works. You pour Schlitz, Bud and Miller into identical glasses. Have a friend label them 1, 2 and 3 and switch them around. Now, taste. The one you pick may not be your beer, but it's the beer with the taste you want.
See? You can't lose.

What is that taste you're tasting?

Maybe beer tastes so good because you're really tasting each sip more than once. First, the lively, refreshing character of beer comes from the aroma and flavor of the hops. Next, as you swallow, you sense the richness—the body—that barley malt adds. Finally, the finish. Now the balance of tastes becomes clear. No one taste should intrude on your total beer enjoyment.

How do Schlitz, Budweiser and Miller compare on taste?

That's for you to decide. Simply rate each beer from 1 to 10 on the flavor characteristics below. When you're finished, try to guess the brands by name. Very, very few people can do this.

Does the taste of a beer ever change?

Yes. All beers have changed over the years. One example is Schlitz. Two years ago a master brewer named Frank Sellinger came to Schlitz. He came to be president. And to brew a Schlitz that was smoother than any other beer. Taste that beer for yourself. Because taste is what it's all about.

The best beer is #_____

ON SCREEN

Willie and Phil

with Margot Kidder, Michael Ontkean, Ray Sharkey. Written and directed by Paul Mazursky.

Paul Mazursky makes movies the way Californians are accused of embracing fads—tasting everything but digesting nothing. Willie and Phil is a primary example of this slippery superficiality. It's as tedious and condescending as a smirk, but it sure does hit all the high points of the late Sixties and Seventies. Mazursky can't pass up any trend, philosophy or argument that may have made the cover of New York magazine.

Willie and Phil is inspired by Francois Truffaut's classic love story, Jules and Jim. Two men, Willie, a Jewish intellectual (played by Michael Ontkean) and Phil, a streetwise Italian scrapper (Ray Sharkey) meet at a Greenwich Village revival house and decide that because they both love Jules and Jim they can be friends for life. In a life-follows-art progression they both pick up a free-spirited girl in Washington Square (Margot Kidder) and spend the next fifteen years of their lives trying to live with and without each other.

Paul Mazursky has always had a propensity for eulogizing the ordinary, but never before has it seemed so defeating. Willie, Phil and Jeanette are simply not interesting enough to hold our attention; each lacks complexity, drive and passion. Their ambitions are out of a Werner Erhart training manual while their parents, who unfortunately play a major role in the movie, are out of a Norman Lear sit-com.

Those who enjoy Mazursky movies say he's the poet of the middle class, raising the banal to the level of art. Nonsense. What he does is bring a medium which has the potential for greatness down to a level of mediocrity that renders it fit for K-Tel marketing. Willie and Phil picks up and discards issues as if they were nothing more meaningful than Bloomingdale's latest baubles.

Mazursky is a director without ideas and without visual style, leaving nothing for the audience but his characters. And here, Mazursky defeats his interesting cast completely. It's impossible to figure out what these three people see in each other, and the connection they make is so cursory we can't imagine why it holds together over the years. In the wake of this vacuum the actors are left struggling. Michael Ontkean is an extremely charming actor, but by the time his Willie runs off to India to find the meaning of life, we're ready to drown him in the Ganges. Sharkey is a fine character actor, but he can't conjure up the magnetism needed for a romantic lead. Oddly enough, neither can Margot Kidder, an intelligent, lovely actress who unfortunately lacks the mystery to make her "love object" seem viable.

Ultimately what destroys this movie is Mazursky's lack of heat as a director. He's all surface smoothness: he has the moves, but he doesn't have the depth. He's fooled a lot of people with his movies because they all have an "au courant" veneer, but when we strip away the tinsel of this movie, we're left with nothing. By the end, when Willie and Phil are back together as best buddies and Jeanette has found herself a Russian dancer (what else?) as her new lover (she's also making a documentary in New York City), we feel totally bloated, even though we have a sneaking suspicion we've missed the meal.

The advertising for Willie and Phil asks us, "What is this thing called love?" Casablanca has an answer; so do Notorious, Annie Hall and Jules and Jim. Willie and Phil doesn't even have a clue.

CONFERENCE BOWL
A College Football Nickname Quiz

In our continuing effort to enhance the college experience, we at Games have devised this little item to keep your brain warm during those long halftimes. (We're sure that you already have a few methods of keeping the rest of your body warm.)

Below are the names of twelve major college football conferences. The object of the quiz is to identify the school and nickname of each 1979 conference title holder. Since few of you have the time to sit down and memorize a sports almanac, we've provided you with cryptic clues for each nickname. If you're still stumped, the letters italicized in each clue provide an anagram of the team's college.

If you savor competition, try playing against your buddies with a ten minute time limit. You might even be able to round up some cheerleaders. Go team!

THE FORBERT SAGA

Don't Call on Me, I'll Call You

by Byron Laursen

Like his songs, Steve Forbert has plenty of surprises beneath the surface. Sure, the diffident 25-year-old Mississippian has his modest ways: "I'll have a go at talking," he says, wrapping up a thuddingly difficult New York interview on the eve of his first Japan tour and third album, "but what I do is write songs and sing them." Nonetheless, inside that denim-jacketed heart, behind those covertly smiling eyes and that radical pug nose, one senses big ambition. Alive on Arrival, his heel-kicking 1978 debut, moved zealous writers to compare Forbert with classic heartland American musicmakers the likes of Gram Parsons, Bob Dylan, Elvis Presley, Hank Williams, Woody Guthrie and Jimmie Rodgers. Then came Jackrabbit Slim, the 1979 follow-up, a helping of string and chorus-sweetened love songs, and the critics scooped their superlatives back again.

Though the public embraced Jackrabbit and its hit single, "Romeo's Tune," 600,000 copies worth, Forbert remains glaringly suspicious of the media. Many reporters, early on, stereotyped him as "the new Dylan." The comparison was inevitable, given Forbert's harmonica and guitar-driven, folk-flavored style, but the singer resented being written into a corner. Moreover, with an eye on the kind of tragedy that came to Presley, Parsons, Williams and others in his line of work, Forbert seems terrified of the psychological fallout of fame.

"I'm obsessed with the idea of the loss of innocence," Forbert told a Newsweek reporter a year ago. An innocent quality certainly suffuses the country boy-meets-New York City material of Alive on Arrival,. As I watch Forbert rehearse his road band, that innocence sparks again. Every time they run through Arrival's "Goin' Down to Laurel," the singer breaks into an exuberant, cowboy-booted shuffle. Music, including his own, is Forbert's obvious delight. A Meridian, Mississippi guitar teacher recalled him as "... an average player, but all fired up." In 1976, Forbert left home and a truck driving job to play Greenwich village coffeehouses.

"I tried for months to get him as a client," says Danny Fields, Forbert's manager. "He was always wary. But then one day he called up and said he was 'behind schedule.'" Soon Nemperor Records executive Nat Weiss saw the singer open a show at Trax. Then New York Times critic John Rockwell predicted "huge success, and soon." Both Nemperor contract and public acclaim came shortly thereafter. Forbert made his schedule.

Ampersand's interview, which followed the rehearsal session, culminated

Take Henny Youngman...Please

By Dale White

Surely those old gags would have gasped their last. How long can a comic repeat the same wife-ethnic-sex jokes and secure a strong laugh? If the comic is Henny Youngman, the answer is—a lifetime. "The King of the One-liners" has used the same schtick for almost 50 years—and it still works.

The advances and ads in the press for his recent University of Florida appearance were few and brief, though occasionally tagged with a boastful "Take your wife—please." Nearly 2,000 students appeared to hear his 40-minute routine; noted poets, playwrights and politicians have failed to attract so large an audience at the campus.

When the comedian finally lugged his 6-feet-2-inch frame across the gymnasium floor with his famous short-step gait, the audience immediately granted him a standing ovation.

At 74, Youngman seems to be as enduring as his jokes. His hair has thinned, his back and shoulders are perhaps more noticeably hunched, the bags beneath his eyes darker and deeper. But time hasn't altered him much. The black suit with the silk lining, the stiff bow tie: the image is intact. And so are the jokes.

"I got an offer to do a movie with Bo Derek—you know, that 10 girl." Some male members of the audience hooted and whistled. "Producer called me up. Said, 'How about $50,000?' I said, 'I'll think about it.' He called again. Said, 'We'll make it $20,000.' I said, 'I'll pay it.'

"Derek and I got dressing rooms next door to each other. I noticed there was a little hole in the wall. I thought, 'What the hell—let her look.' "

Years ago he may have used the name of Racquel Welch or Ursula Andress, but the joke would have been the same. It hasn't changed and neither has its response, an almost unified laughter that comes right on cue.

In an interview after the program, Youngman admitted his "biggest thrill is playing colleges such as this—seeing a couple thousand students come out to hear my stuff."

From a generation that usually identifies with the humor of a George Carlin, Gabe Kaplin or Richard Pryor, Youngman extracts laughs without reference to drugs or four-letter words.

"I try to keep it clean. I don't think it has to be filthy. But it doesn't bother me when younger comics do dirty stuff. They're doing their own thing."

Youngman's style is what grants his humor a lasting quality. It's a rapid fire technique that hasn't changed since he mastered it in the Thirties. He'd been working as a night club comic, employing a cigar instead of a violin as his prop, when he signed (without an audition) to do a six-minute spot on the Kate Smith radio show. He was an instant hit and the producer extended his routine to 10 minutes. With a $250 check in his pocket for 10 minutes of work, Youngman realized he was a sudden success. Since his time was so brief, he decided to stick to jokes that could be delivered quickly. Youngman's jokes not only had punch lines, they had punch words.

"The 'take my wife—please' thing started kinda by accident when I was on the Kate Smith Show. About 15 minutes before it was supposed to go on my wife can up to me with several ladies. They had tickets but she didn't. So I asked them to take my wife—please. It stuck." The wife in all those jokes is Sadie Youngman, who sold sheet music at Kresge's when they first met. They've been married 52 years.

Wife jokes have become a Henny Youngman trademark and he relied on them heavily with his college audience:

"I'm bow-legged. My wife's knock-kneed. When we stand beside each other we spell OX."

"My wife is on a diet of coconuts and bananas. She hasn't lost any weight—but can she climb trees!"

"Man walking through a cemetery sees a funeral procession. A hearse with two caskets, then a line of men following this guy with his dog. He asks the guy with the dog, 'What happened?' 'My dog bit my wife and my mother-in-law.' Man asks: 'Can I borrow the dog?' Guy says: 'Get in line.' "

Then, of course, a few ethnic cracks:

"A Polish terrorist was sent to blow up a bus. He burned his lips on the exhaust pipe."

"A Polish rapist is in the police line-up. They bring the woman in. He points at her and yells 'That's her!' "

The key for Youngman, though, is to incorporate those well-worn gags with some audience participation:

"Any of you out there Italian?" Scattered voices in the crowd yelled in the affirmative. "Okay then—I'll talk slower."

"Two men are talking. One says, 'I just lost my third wife.' 'What happened to the first?' 'She died from eating poisoned mushrooms.' 'And the second?' 'She died from eating poisoned mushrooms.' 'What happened to the third?' 'Cracked skull.' 'How?' " Youngman lifted his hands toward the audience. " 'She-wouldn't-eat-the-poisoned-mushrooms,' " chorused 2000 people.

Youngman raised his 19th century Italian violin and his audience cheered, encouragingly. "There are two ways I play the violin. For pleasure and for revenge."

Few of his jokes are originals, he admitted. "I don't create. I gather. I have writers." Joke collecting occupies a great portion of his time. He has estimated that he has spent more than $250,000 on his four-hour repertoire. (His writers have included Morey Amsterdam, Norman Lear and many others.) He knows more than 1500 jokes, but the jokes themselves aren't what makes him successful, he said. "It's the way I do it."

Youngman thinks of his jokes as cartoons. They have the same impact, a simple image and a simple punch. His method is hit-and-run. If a joke flops, it doesn't matter. He's already into the next one.

An avid student of such glib greats as Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson and George Jessel, Youngman incorporated everything he could learn into an act that is strictly his own, and it works so well, he can't give it up.

"I try to be on the road as much as I can. Last night I was at a convention in Chicago. The night before that I was in—." He sorted out the dates and places in his mind. "Let's see, I was in Philadelphia. I'm always working." He acts as his own agent, sometimes booking more than 200 shows a year.

His silly joking and sour technique with the violin have guaranteed Youngman a steady six-figure income. It makes him glad he'd never pursued a career as a concert violinist as his Russian father intended.

"If I played the fiddle any better, I'd be making $125-a-week."

OFF THE WALL

MOST CAR STEREOS SHOULD NEVER LEAVE THE SHOWROOM.

No matter how powerful your receiver is, no matter how sensitive it is, once you hit the road, you're in for trouble.

It's a jungle out there. Mountains. Buildings. Tunnels. Telephone wires. They all add up to fuzzz, fading and overlapping stations. Some real ear-boggling interference.

The road is one mean obstacle course, but the Craig Road-Rated Receiver was built to handle it.

But Craig has changed all this with a whole new line of stereos based on one crucial fact.

Cars move.

And the Craig Road-Rated™ Receivers were made to move with them.

The engineers at Craig turned a new corner in car stereo by carefully balancing the sensitivity, RF intermodulation, alternate channel rejection and capture ratio. So you get clean, clear sound on almost any road you drive.

While the Road-Rated Receiver is protecting your music from the outside world, add a Road-Rated Equalizer and you've got control over the inside world.

With its ambience expander, you can turn your car into a rolling rock concert.

Now prove it to yourself. Listen to ours. Listen to theirs.

In the showroom, they sound good, too. But out on the road, they just won't move you like Craig.

ON TOUR

The Flying Karamazov Brothers

OREGON COUNTRY FAIR, EUGENE

Having synthesized themselves into juggling siblings four years ago while attending the University of Santa Cruz and Stanford University, the Brothers Karamazov decided that performing and traveling the country in their converted school bus marked "Weird Load" was more fun than using their degrees. The Karamazovs have since performed at colleges, theatres, on national television, and even placed second in the World Team Juggling Competition.

On stage in wooded fairgrounds, the foursome, clad in black velvet berets and gypsy balloon pants, expertly juggled sickles and meat-cleavers and then displayed their musicianship during "Percussion Quartet for Jugglers" as they tapped out 5/4 rhythms with flying tenpins.

Later, the Brothers proclaimed a contest in which Ivan would attempt to juggle for 10 counts three objects produced by the audience. If he met with success, he would receive a standing ovation—if not, his face would be met with a cream pie. Ivan failed in his first two attempts at keeping a music stand, gas mask and disposable diaper airborne, but finally the cheering crowd was obliged to rise.

Perhaps even more impressive than their feat of juggling nine objects—including loosely-corked champagne bottle, torch, skillet and egg—which landed neatly in the pan at its conclusion—was the finale performed for fair merchants at a special midnight show. The four doffed their clothing and fearlessly juggled 12 flaming torches—a foolhardy feat for anyone less skilled.

And just for the record, the Karamazovs once juggled a chainsaw in their act, but didn't do so at the Fair.

The Heatwave Festival

MOSPORT PARK, BOWMANVILLE, ONTARIO

Avid festival goers arrived believing they'd see the Clash, the Ramones, Graham Parker, Dexy's Midnight Runners, Third World, Rockpile, Holly and the Italians, Teenage Head, the Pretenders, the B-52's, Talking Heads, Elvis Costello, the Kings and the Stars—but the first five in that lineup didn't perform. Even so, most in attendance seemed to agree that Heatwave was just fine.

This big New Wave bill wasn't a Woodstock, a Monterey Pop Festival or any of those powerful old things. Mosport Park was plagued by millions of genuine locusts jumping to the music and on the crowd. This formed the ambience for rock adventure: we were all on a wagon train rolling somewhere rugged and unknown.

The morning events were like a late Seventies stadium gig. The Canadian Teenage Head ram-rocked rockabilly numbers at the horde, but few danced. Then Rockpile spouted pop music with wit; the crowd leaped to its feet, but only those near the stage danced. a man with a safety pin earring, a woman draped in imitation leopard-skin, lots of folks with painted hair—the hard core folks finally woke up. When would the mass dance?

Chrissie Hynde and the Pretenders know what to do. When they played rock with reggae, blowing it through the giant speaker stacks, the bodies begin to bob. Hynde flung off her satiny blue jacket and turned on the power in her independent, pouty voice. "Private Life" was like a rhythmic transfusion; the bobbing became quicker. The B-52's, with their white child rhythm and blues, rescued everyone's childhood with the beach party movie-ish "Rock Lobster," the festival's first real showstopper. The dressed up New Wavers, the jeans and tee-shirt people, the drunks, the urban cowboys all jumped and the locusts scattered.

The Talking Heads hit the stage, enlarged to a nine-member funk ensemble with Nona Hendryx singing backup. The result was a sort of space disco—primal dance music without a particular time frame. The rhythm was rubbery during "Life During Wartime," the tone elastic during "Take me to the River."

Elvis Costello pumped in with an uncharacteristic happy expression. With the original Attractions, Costello crooned the new popper, "Clubland," enhanced the reggae in his older songs and romped in his exaggerated stage presence. Finally, in a reversal of his usual stage tactics, a five-song encore of "Radio, Radio," "Pump It Up," "What's So Funny 'Bout Peace, Love and Understanding," "Mystery Dance" and "I Can't Stand Up for Falling Down."

Janis Ian

THE ROXY, LOS ANGELES

It's always been easy to feel sorry for Janis Ian. Fifteen years ago, she gained notice as a persecuted teenager condemned for interracial dating with "Society's Child." In the mid-Seventies, she won public attention again for her melancholy recollection of high school, "At Seventeen." In those cases, at least, her sorrows were transformed into moving artistic statements. These days, though, she's in a sorrier state: yet, attempting to conform to the musical tastes of the moment.

Ian's appearance at the Roxy seemed to reflect her worries over her place in the record marketplace. Having failed to sustain a comeback effort, she is currently striking out in a rock direction, punching up her usually restrained style with almost New Wavish touches. At least at this concert, her tougher stance was not convincing. There were some impressive moments in her performance, to be sure—but they did not come when she stepped out as a born-again rock and roller.

The show's opening minutes were promising. Striding into the spotlight with guitar in hand, Ian offered "When the Party's Over," one of her best upbeat songs. Next, her three-piece band joined her for a tastefully-rendered, diverse selection of tunes, including the brooding "From Me to You" and the breezy, samba-tinged "I Would Like to Dance." When Ian again took a solo spot for the plaintive "Jesse," the pacing and atmosphere of her concert couldn't have been better.

Unfortunately, Ian was intent on proving that even "sensitive" songwriters can rock and roll, and ran through several tepid compositions from her last LP, Night Rains. Worse, Ian turned over the spotlight several times to her guitarist, Scott Zito, whose cliched rock star showboating was difficult to endure. Ian went through a few of the motions herself, essaying an awkward leap or two in her high heels.

It was sad to see Ian laboring in a style inappropriate for her, because she proved herself capable of handling so many other musical genres that night. She ventured into European cabaret balladry with "Party lights" and "In the Winter," singing with a Continental touch of theatrics over her melodramatic piano work. "Silly Habits," a warm supper-club blues tune, was equally charming. Her encore, the bittersweet show business ode "Stars," presented her at her finest, revealing great songwriting craft while ringing true emotionally.

Apparently, these qualities are not enough to score points in the music biz right now, and Ian feels she needs to refashion her sound and image. At the Roxy, these attempts brought few positive results. Ian wants to rock out in front of audiences rather than win their sympathy—and that's the real pity.

DAVE DAVIES
AFLI-3603

(RCA) Staunch Kinks fans have been predicting/anticipating a Dave Davies solo LP ever since his solo single "Death of a Clown" soared to the top of the British charts in 1967. There are dashes of wry Kinksian humor in the packaging—AFLI-3603 is named after its catalogue number and Davies' head is replaced by a computerized bar code on the front cover portrait—but the music is a bit slight for those who've been waiting 13 years.

It's strictly a one-man operation, save for four songs with an outside rhythm section, and the chief villain is producer Davies. He's chosen a simple, hard rock sound dominated by multi-layered guitars, but lead singer Davies winds up badly buried in the mix. And producer Davies should spring for a rhythm section next time; the rudimentary nature of musician Davies' bass and drums work leaves it to the guitar licks to create melodies and hooks.

Songwriter Davies has contributed some absolute gems in the past but the neo-Nugent power rock of "Nothing More to Lose" and the simple keyboard melody to "Doing the Best for You" are the best things he comes up with here. The lyrics tend towards little-people-against-the-impersonal-modern-world-but-we'll-still-beat-'em-in-the-end sentiments that are altogether admirable and practical in normal conversation but sound cloying and a mite naive coming out of stereo speakers.

PAUL SIMON
One-Trick Pony

(Warner Brothers) "Mature," "tasteful," "polished"—not the most exciting accolades with which to praise a pop musician, I'll admit. Yet it's Paul Simon's gift to turn moderation into a virtue. As a solo artist he's recorded quietly charming music that's soothing without being dull. His talents have grown over the years, and One-Trick Pony, his first all-new LP since 1975, is evidence of his sure touch.

As befits the score for an upcoming film, One-Trick Pony has a consistent musical mood, sustained by a glossy studio sound which refines Fifties rock and r&b styles into a sophisticated whole. While Richard Tee's shimmering electric piano is overused and Tony Levin's bass lines are muddy at times, the overall sound mix is lovely, highlighting Simon's understated vocal manner to good effect. The basic tune-writing is strong—"Nobody" gently rocks to one of the prettiest melodies I've heard in ages. Simon put a lot of care into the composing, arranging and recording of this album, and it shows.

If craftsmanship were the LP's only virtue, it would be a superior record. But Simon has too much poetry in him to let arranging skill carry his songs alone. Offbeat, ambiguous images pop up in "That's Why God Made the Movies," "Oh, Marion" and "God Bless the Absentee," adding color to the vaguely melancholy feel of the verses. Simon has his occasional missteps—"How the Heart Approaches What It Yearns" is an awkward hook line no matter how cleverly it scans. But the album is more than redeemed by compelling lines like "Who was the witness to the dream/Who kissed my eyes and saw the scream . . . Nobody."

One-Trick Pony's theme is of an aging rock star trying to cope with his confused lifestyle. In Simon's own case, though, he's playing the role of pop elder statesman quite well. He's a genuine rarity: a veteran singer/

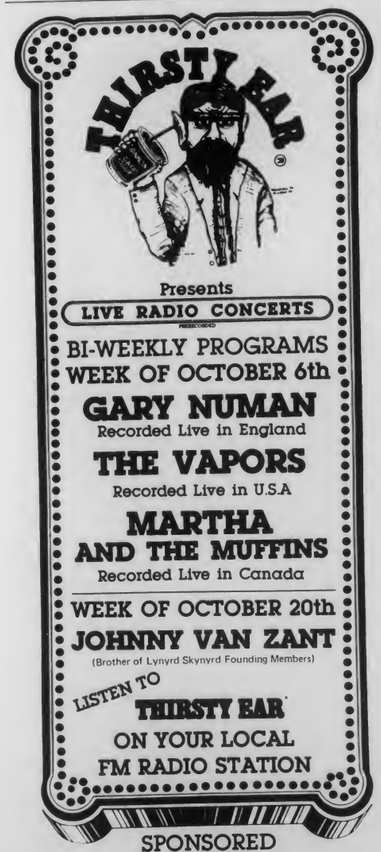
THE CARS
Panorama

(Elektra) When the Cars first broke through anti-New Wave biases of radio programmers two years ago, their sound was a refreshing change. Their brand of rock was crisp and catchy, an easy-to-like backdrop for Rick Ocasek's more challenging verse. But yesterday's innovations can become today's status quo, and it's clear from Panorama that the Boston-based quintet are standing pat for the moment.



The elements that made the Cars' debut so much of a kick to hear in '78 remain—Elliot Easton's jangly guitar licks, the slamming-door drum bashings of Dave Robinson, the keyboard blips and tweets of Greg Hawkes. What's missing is any real sense of change or growth on the group's part, any sign of a desire to build on past accomplishments. Truth be told, the melodic content of Panorama is somewhat lower than earlier efforts—there's no inspired cut like "My Best Friend's Girl" or "Let's Go" that leaps out as a natural hit. It's all formula, formula.

Ric Ocasek's lyrics retain their Op Art evocativeness, though their intriguing qualities lessen a bit with each album. As before, some of what he writes is gibberish ("I get rhythm/I get cornflakes"), but on occasion his flair for imagery is arresting ("The peeping keyhole introverts/With the monkeys on their backs . . ."). Again, no major complaints, but no exceptional praise either. Ocasek is in a creative holding pattern on this album.

In this lean period for the music biz, a group can't really be faulted for playing it safe. Still, the Cars always had the air of artists about them, and it would've been nice to have seen them stretch their talents. As it is, their Panorama exhibits a rather limited musical horizon.

SPLIT ENZ
True Colours

(A&M) Australia's Split Enz presented themselves as sort of Down Under Mothers of Invention on their first two Chrysalis LPs. Like a house band at the Laughing Academy, the group relied heavily on strange hairdos, clown makeup and other loony props to make their point. True Colours, their first album for a new label—A&M—reveals Split Enz for what they really were all along—a lightweight pop band whose delusions of whimsey were ill-suited to the septet's musical skills. Neither as outrageous as the Bonzo Dog Band nor as wicked as Deaf School, Split Enz belonged in the harmless ward. Be that as it may, True Colours is their most engaging effort to date. Stripped of the heavy-handed nuttiness that marred both previous efforts, the Enz have concocted a pleasant enough collection borrowing heavily from the Anglo-pop bag of licks. The Hollies ("I Got You"), Sweet ("Shark Attack") and the Beatles ("What's the Matter with You") are all quoted with shameless aplomb. The ballad "I Hope I Never" that closes the first side pretty much sums up the band's reliance on threadbare formulas, yet it still manages to make its point with some hand-me-down hooks and a performance that could be described as consummately mediocre.

As forgettable a hit-making unit as Split Enz may be, one can only be grateful that they have left their former excesses behind, perhaps realizing that emulation, in their case, is the better part of valour.

CONTRASTS
Sam Rivers

(ECM) ECM is a label with two different streams: the ephemeral Euro-techno sounds and the more earthy American and African black sounds. In Sam Rivers' first ECM release as leader, the music definitely falls into the latter category.

Rivers restricts himself to tenor and soprano saxes and flute (no piano ramblings here) and renders seven miniatures with ensemble. The profound bassist Dave Holland and AACM drummer Thurman Barker are old friends, but trombonist George Lewis is the kicker in this lineup, the wildcard quadrant. Lewis adds a dimension of tones, colors, shapes and textures that complement Rivers' corporeal hornwork.

"Solace" illustrates what an illusive structuralist Rivers can be as a composer. His soprano and Lewis' trombone are phantoms flickering across a de Chirico landscape provided by Holland's arco bass and Barker's dramatic marimbas. This coagulates into a traffic jam where all four face off and deliver epigrams to each other.

Living up to the title of the album, "Verve" is an engaging funky stew served up by Rivers' Caribbean-flavored flute. He is one of the few jazz artists who has made the funky beat interesting as well as danceable. On a cooker like this, Dave Holland isn't about to be relegated to ostinatos—his bass lines are just as mobile and pithy as Rivers'.

Rivers is revered for his tireless explorations on his instruments, especially the tenor sax. The complex tenor lines on "Dazzle" alternately bring to mind a fervent Baptist minister and an aural chess game. Lewis comps in a detached manner and then takes his most personal and evocative solo on the album. On "Images," Lewis punctuates with accents that suggest the colorful rectangles in a Mondrian painting.

Rivers has enlarged the language of the tenor saxophone in many different contexts, covering new ground each time. Contrasts is a welcome addition to his already impressive discography.

ART ENSEMBLE OF CHICAGO
Full Force

(ECM) The Art Ensemble of Chicago (Lester, Bowie, trumpet; Roscoe Mitchell and Joseph Jarman, reeds; Malachi Favors, bass; Don Moye, drums, and all members play various additional instruments) is the current darling of contemporary music, garnering fervent critical acclaim and a growing popular following. Full Force, a substantial offering, clearly shows that the band's success is warranted. In these performances—which combine elements of jazz (though the AEC is by no means strictly a jazz band), chance music and drama—there are many moments of charm, wit, fun, and good music.

The group's strong suit is surprise, the compositions, structured with adventure in mind and played with verve, lead the listener (this isn't background music) on the most unpredictable aural voyages. The prime example is "Magg Zelma," a 20-minute work which begins with a forest of blended sounds—oriental bells, sitar, noisemakers imitating ducks and babies crying, flutes, saxes, whistles, et. al.—interspersed with patches of silence. The intensity grows to a tumultuous climax that mimicks the roar of a human crowd. Then Favors plays a tidy bass figure, getting a rotund, pleasant sound, and Mitchell lends some full-bodied statements on his tenor, though the louder he plays, the weaker his intonation becomes. Suddenly, Moye sets up a pattern in 6 and an African-based chant, reminiscent of Randy Weston's "African Cookbook," which itself was an African derivative, ensues, with the saxes barking out a three-note centering figure while Bowie's dripping-at-the-edges trumpet spouts crackling phrases. A free-for-all with the reedmen madly playing one horn after another, is finally superceded by a short, colorful ensemble passage—part swing, part mariachi—that closes the piece. "Old Time Southside Street Dance" and "Full Force" are also in the who-knows-what-next vein but the subdued "Charlie M," which we surmise is for Charles Mingus, is in contrast to the others, evoking a feeling of unfettered Thirties swing, with Favors' bouncing notes underpinning a brash, flutter-tongued Bowie solo, as the saxes contribute support. In the manner of the great Cootie Williams, the marvelous trumpeter who played with Ellington for decades, Bowie whispers, growls, sings, shouts and expounds during this winsome outing. In his solo, Favors exhibits simplicity, a sure sense of pulse, and an honest, woody sound.

The only disappointment with this recording, given the mixed musical bag the band assumes, is the absence of strong reed soloists (neither Mitchell nor Jarman are technically well versed), but since most people won't buy this album to hear the perfected elegance of a Count Basie or the superb line playing of a Sonny Rollins, this drawback is hardly noticeable AEC, which won this year's downbeat critics poll, is touring extensively until the end of November.

BYRON LAURSEN

Rockabilly Romeo

One of the newest Hopefuls on the L.A. club scene is Keith Joe Dick, Rockabilly Romeo, who — in the process of reprising some of the best of Elvis, Gene Vincent, Eddie Cochran, et al.—often does a sort of reverse strip tease. The first few numbers are delivered in white socks, strap-style t-shirt and jockey shorts. After gradually adding pants, shirt and sports jacket, all of them appropriately Fifties-ish cat clothes, Mr. Dick checks an imaginary wristwatch, exclaims "You just caught me getting out of the shower, I've got to leave," and vanishes.

MARTHA AND THE MUFFINS
Metro Music

(Virgin) Funny names do not the New Wave make. It's a point proved in spades by Toronto's Martha and the Muffins, along with Pearl Harbor and the Explosions, Scott Wilk and the Walls, Pam Windo and the Shades and a distressing collection of others. Once the mid-Seventies frenzy of Punk had spent itself, groups of this ilk were faced with a crisis of direction. In the binary world of rock, the choice was obvious—go progressive. What we are witnessing here is the birth of a new generation of Yes, Genesis and Gentle Giant. That the vaunted new wave has become the repository for such noodling obsessions is an indication of how limited rock horizons have really become.

The problem here is not so much the Muffins as Martha—actually two Marthas, both vocally indistinguishable. Instrumentally, the band acquits itself ably enough. The mix is somewhere on the mellow side of the Motors or Bram Tschaikovsky and chugs along unobstrusively under its own steam. The Marthas, on the other hand, dredge up a lead-lined vocal style so ladened with pretense and humorless profundity that the listener is tempted to take the next flight to Toronto and cut their wrists for them. These girls make Nico and Marianne Faithfull sound like the Andrews Sisters. It's toneless, emotionless and hopelessly unmusical singing that utterly bogs down the proceedings. Oh and on they drone, ruminating at length over Saigon," "Indecision," "Terminal Twilight," "Monotone" (perhaps their theme song?) and "Revenge Against the World." When it's all over the question left begging is—who cares? Martha and Martha need an expector-ant, an enema and a blood transfusion without delay. Then they should look for another job.

THE ROOTS OF ROCK & ROLL
Various Artists

(Savoy) "We give away more copies than we sell," moans a Savoy publicist. Too bad, because these nine double discs should be anything but the best kept secret in Rock & Roll.

The Roots was begun in 1977 and a fresh volume has emerged every three months since, more or less. The first, titled simply, The Roots of Rock and Roll, presents an amalgam of early styles to which later volumes are entirely devoted. Wild Bill Moore, a Texas tenor sax player, kicks off side one with a 1947 recording of "We're Gonna Rock, We're Gonna Roll," one of the earliest references to R&R in it, boogie-woogie piano, screaming sax and uproarious vocals meet an immovable backbeat, and rock & roll is born. Other noteworthy artists introduced in this set are sax legend and wild man Big Jay McNeely, pianist/writer extraordinaire Sam Price and the little known but immensely talented and important blues singer from the Fifties, Big Maybelle. For the variety included, from very early Do-Wop to some of Rock & Roll's first shouters (Nappy Brown, etc.) to straight ahead boogie woogie rock, this LP is a perfect cross example of roots music. And as with all Roots volumes, the extensive and well-written liner notes are invaluable.

Volume 5, Ladies Sing the Blues (featuring Big Maybelle, Little Esther, Albinia Jones, Miss Rhapsody and Linda Hopkins) is a must-have primarily because of an entire side by Big Maybelle (eight tracks), one of the most explosive singers of all time. Born Mabel Smith in 1924, she reduced the 1958 Newport Jazz Festival to ashes with her performance. Unfortunately she died after a long bout with heroin in 1972. She is sorely missed.

Honkers & Screamers (vol. 6) is perhaps the most definitive Rock & Roll album in the series. This instrumental LP of very early (mostly around 1948) sax-led rock features Paul Williams (not the short blond mutant), Hal Singer, Big Jay McNeely (the main argument for this set) and other important sax screamers. McNeely's ferocious sax attacks coupled with some of Rock & Roll's earliest arrangements are powerful statements indeed. In a sense, this record hints at a very primative form of jazz rock highly improvised yet controlled by the arrangement sax playing is set against Jazz's traditional "walking bass" and pounded home with a solid 4/4 beat. Uplifting stuff.

Also uplifting (to say the least) are four sides of Sam Price & the Rock Band (vol 7). Backed by some of the most important players of the day—sax legend King Curtis and jazz guitarists Mickey Baker and Kenny Burrell, Price is a wonderfully versatile boogie woogie piano player and writer (he wrote or co-wrote all 25 tunes). This set, mostly from 1956 5", features Curtis at his absolute best, his stuners, yowls and screams on sax constitute the perfect Rock & Roll instrumental voice. When Sam Price and friends hit their boogie woogie stride on tracks like "Roll 'em Sam," "Bar B Q Sauce" and "Honky Tonk Caboose," nothing else seems to matter.

The Shouters (vol. 9), just released, presents frontmen like H Bomb Ferguson, Nappy Brown and Gatemouth Moore in their earliest and most passionate incantations with performances showing the evolution to come of R&B-based rock singers.

Each release in this series is an important one and several are of the Highest Order of Rock & Roll importance. May it never end.

Punk Flicks (Old Tricks)

Clash in the Cannes (Film Fest)

BY P. GREGORY SPRINGER

It took almost too long to squeeze the punk rock rationale through the multi-million dollar movie needle.

When punk finally did raise its little pointed head on the whore-worn streets of the Cannes Film Festival this year, most of the new rock movies arrived outdated, blaring examples of being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Hopeful eyes were fixed upon Dennis Hopper's new film, Out of the Blue, expecting it to do for punk what Hopper's Easy Rider had done for communes and cocaine. Unfortunately, Out of the Blue keeps slipping back into country flowerhead basics with New Wave trim. It takes its title from Neil Young, dresses up Linda Manz (Days of Heaven) as a rebellious punkette who alternately sings Supertramp songs and punches safety pins through her face, and it glaringly dates the death of Elvis Presley incorrectly, somehow linking him with Sid Vicious.

Hopper also stars in the film as Linda's father, whose alcoholism and sexual perversity have contributed to Linda's spiraling decline, obviously. Linda, suited for the part but laboring under the random references to last year's chart listings and a script that forces her to embody a homicidal punk metaphor, finally snuffs her folks while singing "Teddy Bear."

Although it was filmed in Vancouver, someone at Hopper's flippant press conference had to ask where the film was supposed to take place. Was it a contemporary Western, an urban melodrama in cowboy drag, or just another Canadian tax shelter project?

Breaking Glass was given tuxedo reception at Cannes, confidently announced as a "post-punk" tale, with stereo Dolby treatment, and followed by a blow-out reception, dubbed "event of the year" by some hyperbolic press bulletins. The film details the rise and fall of a London band (bearing many resemblances to X-Ray Spex), with street-found star Hazel O'Connor as leader of the idealistic group. She self-promotes on subways, takes on gigs at skinhead pubs and political rallies, and ends up with record contract and sold-out laser light shows. Phil Daniels, star of last year's Quadrophenia, plays the little manager who gets squeezed out by the big label but retains his integrity. Breaking Glass gets the dynamic concert finish, with electric costumes and tight-tuned music (penned by O'Connor), but it is unfortunate that the flashiest, most appealing part of the picture comes at the narrative moment of the heroine's greatest moral and psychological decline, casting doubt on the purpose and impact of primal rock's message. The movie also charts the rise and fall of the original punk movement, if one allows some metaphorical leeway. It's The Rose of a revolution.

An even greater contradiction is Telephone Public, the hottest ticket among French locals in Cannes. French New Wave group Telephone, in stark contrast to the espoused ideals of the band in Breaking Glass, relishes its role as supergroup, spreading itself thinly across the Cinemascope screen. The members give opinions on any and every subject, frequently flaunting their new wealth. Female bassist Corine Marienneau even lets her motherhood be interviewed. The "what is your favorite toothpaste?" dialogue is interspersed with the roguish posing and extended amplification of this lightweight heavy metal band in New Wave drag.

Although director Paul Verhoeven (Soldier of Orange) has a certified hit with Spetters in his native Netherlands, this Dutch version of Saturday Night Fever would have to cross many cultural barriers to be accessible to American youth. Riding motorbikes with glee, munching french fries and mustard, and wrangling with Calvinist consciences, the Spetters (translated Aces) are rebellious youth who "live like there's no tomorrow." The soundtrack consists of second-rate juke box numbers from the Johnny Rotten timevault, but it is probably the flaunted flesh in Spetters which has made it a box office success. There are masturbations, erections, girl-swappings, older women, and a penis-measuring contest, all apparently dear to international punks.

Cha Cha, another Dutch film, combines phoney detective dramatics with comic violence and political protest, but impromptu performances by Lene Lovich and Nina Hagen more than compensate for lapses in the story. When they sit together at a bar, spontaneously crooning up lost melodies and inhuman sounds in deadpan seriousness, they win the "Lucy and Ethel of the Eighties Award" hands down.

On the spare aesthetic side are Radio On and Union City, two story films with rock references. Radio On (title signifying the primary mechanical function for properly operating a motor vehicle) was financed by Road Movies, the Wim Wenders film company. It comes as no surprise that the film is the British equivalent of the early Wenders movies, Alice in the Cities, Kings of the Road, and others. Punctuated by songs of David Bowie, Kraftwerk, Ian Dury, Lene Lovich and more, the black-and-white film follows the odyssey of a man in search of his brother's house, where an unexplained suicide has just taken place. After a confrontation with a psychotic lower-class hitchhiker, an encounter with a German woman searching for her daughter and asides for pinball and pool, the conclusion of Radio On strands the roving philosophical boy on a precipice where the car refuses to budge. Dedicated to the electronic age and Fritz Lang, the film also offers Sting, the Police singer, in a brief cameo, crooning tearfully as a garage attendant in love with Gene Vincent.

Union City has the chic punk sensibility of New York fashion. Starring Deborah Harry in a non-singing role, the story is based on a cheap thriller, The Corpse Next Door. With garish Fifties sets and color, astutely overacted in Eisenhower-era soullessness, the psychological disintegration of a jealous husband is slowly depicted. The husband thinks he has accidentally murdered a milk thief and hides him in the empty apartment next door, a plot mechanism which allows the actors and actresses to camp up their roles to the limit, while dressing up in fashionable rags as well.

Debbie Harry's performance is an analogue for the psychological violence of the cold war days, all pouty and conformist. She invests her love in new shoes and a blonde bleach job.

The soundtrack is credited to Chris Stein, the other Blondie personage, but his electronic accompaniment resembles a melodramatic mix of Robert Fripp and Bernard Herrmann, not the band's dance beat.

The Clash steered clear of the Festival, unlike the Who, whose appearance the year before sold out a Roman coliseum. Perhaps the philosophy embedded in Rude Boy kept the Clash at an ideological distance from Cannes' party-hopping.

Rude Boy, filmed in 1978 at the peak of punk, uses an extreme of European minimalist filmmaking technique, allowing little storytelling. The film offers, also, the most accomplished interaction between documentary footage and staged events since Medium Cool, although Clash fans aren't likely to care much. The band members fought distribution for a while, sensing that they might be revealed in an awkward stage of their career.

Joe Strummer, Mick Jones, Paul Simonon, and Topper Headon are shown living their day-to-day lives, doing things like standing trial for shooting pet pigeons and discussing the Red Brigade ("It's a pizza parlor, isn't it?"), while their fictitious counterpart, played by Ray Grange, wanders from concert to concert, drinking heavily and prying comment from the band. More than once, it seems that the filmmakers have intruded upon Clash concerts in order to beef up the action in the film, including the taunting of an unruly Rock Against Racism crowd. Late into the rambling film, a racial element is pasted on, but the real meat of it is in the (spontaneous?) dialogue coming from Strummer, as he talks politics or introduces the song "I'm So Bored with the USA," dedicating it to Freddie Laker, "the man who made it all possible." Later, Strummer sings lyrics a cappella on a studio dub of "All the Young Punks," undermining his own lyrics with harmonic "c---s" on the final rhyme. One senses validity and importance in this early version of the Clash; one also imagines Clash Muzak in some future elevator.

The fans awaiting the premiere of Rude Boy at Cannes were impatient, loud, and rowdy outside the theatre, but except for jeers at some well-integrated footage of Margaret Thatcher, there was little response throughout except stunned silence.

The Sex Pistols have a double autopsy in D.O.A.—the Last Tour in America (which, appropriately, failed to arrive in time for a Cannes screening), sub-titled, in mock self-denunciation, The Great Rock-and-Roll Swindle. The latter goes through agonized, pornographic, animated, insistent, transcontinental, and terminal lengths to prove that the Sex Pistols were nothing more than a "Cash from Chaos" scheme of their kilted manager Malcolm McLaren. It is not only fascinating, but convincing. Like the film's beleaguered production, its distribution is currently haltered, but you'll probably get a chance to see it someday. It's slick revisionism.

The belated appearance of punk movies will likely perpetuate the musical momentum of the old New Wave for a while. Other projects, planned or underway, include Times Square (promised as New Wave Saturday Night Fever, argh, by producer Robert Stigwood), and Urgh: A Music War, concerts of Magazine, Pere Ubu, X, Dead Kennedys, and Wall of Voodoo, the new New Wave.

Credit the Cannes moguls for one thing. They know when to drop a cold potato. Except for The Apple, an Israeli version of The Wiz, and a pathetic promotion for Can't Stop the Music, there was no mention of disco at all.

Punk Tracks (New Acts)

Record Biz Success The New Way

BY DON SNOWDEN

The so-called "Big 6" record companies (CBS, WEA, Polygram, EMI/Capitol, RCA and MCA) control the distribution of 85 per cent of the records released in America and the radio airwaves still cater to their tried-and-true favorites plus the occasional newcomers. Yet the two most influential musical forces of the late Seventies, Disco and Punk-New Wave, developed outside of established channels, Disco, originally the province of Latinos and gays, was wholeheartedly embraced by the industry, but the New Wave has spawned an alternative, underground network of small record labels, distributors, clubs and publications convinced that the music business is hopelessly out of touch with the musical times.

"Record companies are still conditioned to the late Sixties style of breaking new bands," charges Greg Shaw; "their whole approach to underground music is completely outdated." Shaw's independent Bomp label and distributorship was formed in 1969. "The most effective marketing strategy today is to go through import channels. Elvis Costello, to name but one, was broken in this country through imports."

Inspired by the do-it-yourself ethic of the British new wave scene, independent labels and imports are exerting an increasingly powerful influence on the American music industry. Devo, Pere Ubu, the Shoes, the Romantics and 20/20 all parlayed self-financed and independently distributed singles or albums into major label deals. Several majors have attempted to keep abreast of the times by striking up distribution deals with leading British independents—Polydor with Radar, CBS with Stiff, Atlantic with Virgin and A&M with the recently formed International Record Syndicate (IRS).

The Clash's first American release, Gitre 'Em Enough Rope, barely nudged the lower reaches of the Top 200 album charts but import sales of its debut LP and singles were so strong that the British punk quartet was able to sell out a 12-date tour of 2-3,000 seat halls in February, 1979. English new wave bands 999, Magazine, Gang of Four, Penetration, Ultravox and Sham 69 toured America without the benefit of a Stateside recording contract—acts of unprecedented chutzpah and optimism—and found enthusiastic crowds already familiar with the music packing their club dates. The Gang of Four and 999 subsequently landed domestic label deals.

The Police story is a blueprint for a successful alternative approach to making it in the record industry. Formed in the wake of the British punk uprising, the band released one single on its own Illegal label before signing with A&M. They shattered precedent by undertaking a short East Coast tour in late '77 without any record company support—flying Laker Airways and carrying drums as hand baggage to cut down on costs. When the Police concluded their first proper American tour in Los Angeles in May, 1979, they turned down a $12,000 offer to play a second night at the 3,300-seat Santa Monica Civic in order to perform at Madame Wong's, a small restaurant in LA's Chinatown which only months before had changed its entertainment policy from Polynesian dancers to local unsigned bands.

"There was a lot of resistance to my ideas, initially," reflects the Police's intense, bespectacled manager Miles Copeland. "A&M didn't want to release 'Roxanne' as a single. They told me the way it was done in America is you release the album and take the single when the DJs tell you what to play. I said we know what we want as the single and we don't want a DJ at some s...tass AOR station telling us what we know is right.

"The other secret ingredient we had was the Paragon (booking) Agency. My brother Ian was there and he gave us the license to bring unsigned bands over here. American agencies just don't do that because they don't want to know about you until you're on the charts. You can't even get 'em on the phone unless you've got a hit act."

"When I first started bringing the English bands over, I had to turn over rocks to find something," admits Ian Copeland. "I'd almost have to trade promoters an Allman Brothers date just to do me a favor and give me a date for this band.

"We found a kind of circuit, the Rat in Boston, CBGBs in New York, the Hot Club in Philly and the Edge in Toronto. That was it, those four clubs. Each tour got bigger and bigger as the word spread and we were able to add cities to get us further across America. Since then, every little town in America suddenly has a New Wave room."

Ian now heads the Frontier Booking International (FBI), an agency specializing in New Wave performers. Miles created the International Record Syndicate (IRS), an umbrella organization of seven young, aggressive independent labels which are distributed by A&M while retaining complete artistic control over their releases.

Independent labels have traditionally served as a renegade force within the record industry. Fifties labels like Atlantic (then an indie), Chess, Specialty, and Sun brought the black blues and Rhythm & Blues (previously classified/stigmatized as "race" music) and Rockabilly of such artists as Chuck Berry, Elvis Presley and Ray Charles into the pop mainstream. The first British invasion in the mid-Sixties launched a stream of American one-hit wonders released on small independent labels such as Soma, Laurie, Tower, Bang and Crescendo.

The American music business has since evolved into a multi-billion dollar industry aimed largely at an expanding older audience. It now takes about $250,000 to establish a new band, so the major labels, their sights firmly locked on platinum-plus sales figures, are less and less willing to take a chance on adventurous music, the new independents are stepping into the breach.

"It seems the majors have gotten to the point where they're only interested in selling millions of copies," contends Bob Say, the head of the west coast branch of Jem Records, the largest distributor of import records in America. Jem started in 1971 as a three-man operation pushing a catalogue dominated by progressive rock albums out of a house trailer in New Jersey. Their business mushroomed dramatically when the major American labels turned their backs on the Punk bands emerging in England three years ago.

"The New Wave definitely gave Jem Records more prestige in the United States," Say relates. "It created a lot of news, both good and bad, and we were bringing in 80 per cent of the records at the time and we're still bringing in the majority of them."

Currently, Jem operates with a staff of 60 employees and approximately 50,000 feet of warehouse space in the States in addition to a small London office. The company now has two labels of its own (PVC and Visa) and handles those Stiff, Radar and Virgin artists not picked up by a major label.

Fans agree that the quality of import pressings and the total packaging are superior to the domestic editions. Import singles frequently contain songs that never appear on an album and the LPs often feature different tracks. American albums are often a collection of the best songs from two import albums (the Fabulous Poodles' Mirror Star) or a combination of album cuts and singles (The Clash).

Major labels sneer at import sales figures: only one of 50 import singles sells more than 500 copies and a good-selling import album does about 2500, compared to the 100,000-plus sales needed for a Big 6 group just to stay afloat, just to earn the chance to make another album.

But import sales can sometimes exert a marked influence on major labels. Warner Bros. was forced to rush-release Dire Straits' Communique, fearful that imports would cut heavily into domestic sales figures. Both Deep Purple's Live in Japan and Bob Marley & the Wailers Live earned domestic release as a result of their enormous import popularity. Cheap Trick's Live at Budokan was Jem's fastest-selling import earlier this year. Epic took heed, rushing a domestic release that finally established the band's long-predicted stardom.

"We sold 25-30,000 of At Budokan in 26 months and that was selling for $12-$15 in stores," reports Say. "Epic wasn't planning to put it out here but it got so huge they had no alternative."

The chief obstacle remaining for new music in America is radio. In its early days, FM was an important outlet for artists who didn't fit into the context of Top 30 AM programming. Now FM is mostly computerized formats staffed by "air personalities" more concerned with getting their egos stroked, buying that new Porsche 914 GT and making their condominium payments than exposing the music of the young performers who will set the standards in the Eighties.

"American radio has gotten to a tremendously stagnant situation because they're afraid to take a chance," Miles Copeland complains. "I personally can't listen to any station in this country for more than five minutes without tearing my hair out.

"We want to help those stations that will play new stuff and that's college radio because they're not caught up in the commercial necessity of playing the hits. We hope college radio can do to radio today what FM did ten years ago.

"I think it's time the world buries the likes of Foreigner, Aerosmith and Boston. It's time they begin to see real bands again, get back in the clubs and see the new generation because that's where the real excitement is. I think kids ought to wake up and stop listening to forty-year-olds and their clones.

"Sitting back and crying about it and saying you're bored isn't going to do anybody any good. In ten years we'll expect a new generation to come along and move us out, just like that."

Cheap Trick's Rick Neilsen: following the new import route to success.

IN BOTH EARS

Portable Radios

The earliest portable radio was the most portable ever made, the lightest, the least expensive and completely solid state. And this was almost 60 years ago. It consisted of a galena crystal detector mounted on a necktie stickpin and had four connections, for antenna, ground and headphones.

It required no batteries, could work forever, had no moving parts except for the detector. It had its problems, though. It picked up all broadcasting stations but could not separate them and its sound volume was barely noticeable.

When vacuum tubes came along the popular approach was "the bigger the better." Portables were the "in thing" in the thirties, but since they were battery operated, they demanded a strong back. The batteries alone, and each portable needed three different types, weighed much more than about a dozen modern units. These portables were popular for beach use, but to prevent physical exhaustion had to be carried there in a car.

The solid state semiconductor transistor changed all that. Capable of being powered by tiny batteries and of delivering loudspeaker volume, transistors revolutionized the portable receiver. They were made so small they fit easily into shirt pockets or dangled by a chain from the wrist. Some could be worn like wrist watches.

Early portables were AM only. FM became possible by making the circuits do double duty. For AM reception a built-in loopstick antenna is used; for FM, a telescoping antenna which recesses into the case of the portable.

When cassettes showed they had music reproducing abilities, the portable became the popular unit it is today. The portable became more functional and it wasn't too long before short wave bands were added. All this meant price increases, so today it's possible to buy a portable for as little as $10, or several hundred.

The $10 and under portable sounds too cheap to be any good, but at one time the cost of a single transistor in these radios sold for much more. Mass production and low labor cost in Hong Kong and Taiwan has brought these down to where they are highly affordable. They cover only the AM band but they have a tuning control, combined on-off switch volume control, and a lightweight "in your ear" headphone is supplied. The battery is a single 9-volt type and the overall weight, with battery, is 10 ounces or less. Many portables, including the least expensive, are supplied with a wire type built-in metal stand so they can be put in a tilted position.

The name of the portable game is features, but these bring up the cost. The first of these is the two-band unit, covering both AM and FM; it has a carrying strap and a rear mounted switch for selecting AM or FM, a telescoping antenna and a jack for an in-the-ear headphone. It's possible to pick up stereo FM stations but these portables are designed for mono only, and have just a single small speaker. The power source is a single 9-volt battery. Total weight, including the battery, is about 10 ounces.

Portables can be quite sophisticated. One unit is not only AM/FM but is equipped with a liquid crystal diode (LCD) digital clock. A separate lithium battery with a service life of one year is used for the clock and three AA penlight batteries for the radio. The clock is equipped with a beep wake-up alarm that will run for about four minutes after the selected alarm time has been reached and it will then turn off automatically. Unlike analog clocks, the digital in the radio has an AM and PM indicator. The clock has an hour switch, minute and second display switches.

Some of the larger portables are designed for stereo FM and use a pair of 4" to 6" speakers. But because the speakers are separated by a few inches, all sound, whether stereo or not, will be heard in mono only.

The sound quality of portables is nothing to get excited about. Many of them distort seriously, particularly when the volume control is advanced. There is less distortion with headphone listening since less sound power is required.

Portables with a built-in cassette tape facility are heavier and larger than the AM only or the AM/FM types and weigh about 4 lbs. including the batteries, usually four size C cells. In some portables the cassette is for playback only and these are less expensive than those that have a playback/record facility. Those that can record have a condenser microphone built into the case. An interesting feature is that these units generally have a tone control, not found in less expensive portables. The cassette tape section is operated by switches, either piano keys or pushbuttons. The cassette section includes fast forward, play, rewind, record and a button that is a combined stop and cassette eject.

With a portable of this kind it is possible to take along cassettes recorded at home, or commercially prerecorded cassettes, and to record any external voices or sounds. portables are also available that are cassette recorder/players only, but aren't radios.

Portables now range from a few ounces in weight to a few pounds or more. Size, weight, features, styling—all of these affect the cost. But no portable manufacturer emphasizes sound quality—or its lack.

very embarrassing to his superiors (and his inferiors), so the rest of the film is simply the CIA chasing Matthau and his book. Matthau is aided in his cat-and-mouse game by Jackson, whose astringent looks and acerbic wit are here exaggerated to butch effect. Their few scenes together have none of the wit or underlying sexual currents present in House Calls.

Matthau, lovable in his curmudgeonly way, is not convincing as a superspy, and though there are lots of plot twists and a requisite amount of action, none of this intrigue is very intriguing. It isn't even mindlessly diverting fun because it's slow and unattractive; the whole film looks as if it were photographed with second-hand film stock, washed out and grainy. Even the far-flung locations, from Salzburg to London to Washington, D.C., are ho hum. If there's nothing to delight the eye or the mind and very little to nudge the funny bone, what's the point? I spent most of the time wondering why Sam Waterston isn't a leading man instead of a second banana.

Judith Sims

Those Lips, Those Eyes

starring Frank Langella, Glynnis O'Connor, and Thomas Hulce; written by David Shaber; produced by Steven-Charles Jaffe and Michael Pressman; directed by Pressman.

For some of us, Frank Langella's face on screen is enough to ensure two hours of rapt attention, but Those Lips, Those Eyes offers even more: a sweet, nostalgic look at a third-rate summer stock company in Cleveland, 1951, plus the sentimental (but not maudlin) coming-of-age of a stage-struck young man (Hulce).

Like so many stories about The Theater, this one believes that a life devoted to the stage (or even behind the stage) is infinitely more rewarding than any mere job, and certainly more fascinating than the life of a doctor. This group narcissism is forgiveable only because the film's characters emerge as people and not just set decorations. Langella is complex, a helpful co-conspirator in Hulce's sexual pursuit, nasty when he's hurt, but generally all too aware of who and what he is. O'Connor is one of the company's dancers who makes Hulce's summer memorable in more ways than one. Hulce (remembered as the man who unhooked a bra in Animal House) is the most predictable character, bumbling at first, eager to learn, who abandons his medical studies because he's "hooked" on the magic of the theater.

And what magic: garish, painted sets, and those dreadful/wonderful musicals that have been "thrilling" (or perhaps just numbing) audiences for generations, like The Desert Song, The Vagabond King, Rose Marie, all done up with corny choreography and energetic overacting. This is a valentine to Broadway-in-the-Boondocks, and it's completely charming.

Judith Sims

The Great Santini

starring Robert Duvall, Blythe Danner, Michael O'Keefe, Lisa Jane Persky, and Stan Shaw; based on the novel by Pat Conroy; written and directed by Lewis John Carlino.

Santini isn't his real name; it's the nom de guerre (literally) of "Bull" Meecham, Marine colonel, pilot extraordinaire, drunk and practical joker, outrageous egomaniac, and father of a large family which he likes to run like a boot camp. Ben, his oldest boy, is a gentle soul who's beginning to chafe under the discipline, to say nothing of his father's determination to mold him in his own macho image.

This is the stuff of classic (not to say old-hat) family drama, and Carlino makes it work primarily by putting Duvall and O'Keefe in front of the camera as father and son and letting them have at each other, with Danner, the long-suffering mother and wife, as occasional reluctant referee. Since all three are tremendous, it comes off beautifully. Duvall, in a full-voiced extension of his Kilgore character in Apocolypse Now, is one of the recent movies' great eccentrics, and O'Keefe foils him by showing more range than an actor his age deserves to have.

What is most likely to upset people who see Santini is the refusal, as in life, of its volatile mix of comedy and tragedy to fall into a convenient narrative pattern. That and the lack of superstar names probably explain the film's failure in six test markets, prompting Orion to sell it to cable before they could be persuaded to give it a New York opening. Thanks to the huge success of that engagement, you may at last get your chance to see it in a local theatre.

Sol Louis Siegel

a two-year pursuit. In it, Forbert flashed between a pained, quasi-articulate attempt at honesty and abrupt stonewalling.

"Are you still on schedule?"

Forbert faces sullenly forward on the naugahyde couch, a kid called once more into the principal's office and sick of it.

"On schedule . . . Yeah, I'm on schedule."

"Well, I was wondering what other milestones you see ahead for your career?"

"Milestones . . . Well, I plan to keep doing what I'm doing."

"You were on the road a long while with the first two albums. Now you've had a chance to stick in New York for a while. How has your life been going?"

"About the same as it's been going the last few years."

Minutes pass. The phrase "folk music" appears in one of my sentences. Forbert launches a gravelly monologue on the theme "What is folk music, really?" Then we find safe, pleasant ground in a mutual admiration for Mississippi novelist William Faulkner. Somehow, that subject takes an uncanny turn toward Forbert soliloquizing about how people need direction and motivation, how—if they haven't found it yet—they should continue to search. For the first time, eloquence of a sort enters the room. Out of the mud, the lotus flower blooms. I extend a handshake, happy to have what few notes I have, catch an L.A.-bound plane and spend the next three days and nights pondering how to frame this gaunt communication into a story.

Monday afternoon brings a call from a New York publicist. "Steve sat up in bed the night after he talked to you and realized there was more he had to say."

One and a half hours past midnight, the phone rings again. (ring) "This is Steve . . . I wondered if you realized that what I said last Friday was all nonsense."

"Didn't realize it. I'm sorry to hear it was nonsense."

"How do you know it was nonsense?"

"You just said so."

Ten or fifteen minutes more of this verbal frolic and I essay a politely inane closing riff. "Well, good luck on your Japan tour. I'm sure it'll be a good shot for you."

"A good shot for me . . . I mean, what am I after? It doesn't matter. I mean, that's why I'm calling. I don't want to be nominated for . . . youth leader or anything."

"I understand that. But you want to be heard, don't you?"

"Well, I wanna be heard, yeah. But what is being heard, really? What does it mean 'to be heard?' "

"If we could turn things around, what kinds of questions would you want to be asked?"

"I'm not trying to create any new questions. I'm trying to destroy older ones."

Finally, come Thursday afternoon, an important artifact arrives; an advance cassette copy of Little Stevie Orbit. Forbert's third album to feature a coyly self-referential title. "Can't tell what something's like/'Til you've been there yourself," says "Laughter Lou," a blast at critics that's sandwiched between two disarmingly open-hearted love songs to two different women. "Sailed around the world alone," says a song to an emotionally isolated rich girl. "Too bad it took ya nowhere."

Throughout the album, as on the two before, several basic styles merge—a sea-chanty-like instrumental called "Lucky" precedes "Rain," which kicks off with a vintage Nashville feel. Then "I'm an Automobile" features a hard rock thump and a lighthearted come-on called "Schoolgirl" arrives with a skipping, folksy tempo. True to the ways established on the first two LPs, Forbert's melodies are catchy and his lyrics hang around to provoke rethinking. The songs not so much demand attention as engage it, sidling up to a listener's imagination with payloads of humor, observation and, sometimes, frustration. Whatever other items may be on the singer's imaginary schedule, whatever psychological armor he thinks he needs to wear, it's still a privilege to hear the fresh blends Forbert has to offer. His unspoken ambition—to be really worthy of the flattering comparisons he's inspired—just might come true.

Kent state, a four-hour NBC TV-movie to air in January, ran into several problems. First, Ohio refused to have anything to do with the production, so the unit scouted more than 200 locations, ending up in Gadsden, Alabama, where three separate small colleges combined to look eerily like Kent State. Then the Alabama National Guard refused to cooperate (although the town of Gadsden presented no problems), and the Defense Department ordered that no National Guard equipment or uniforms could be used. Producers ended up buying $50,000 in trucks, a tank, uniforms, etc. John P. Filo, who took the famous Pulitzer Prize-winning photograph of the young woman kneeling over her dead friend, is in the movie—taking the picture. Kent State was written by Gerald Green (Holocaust).

Gilda radner, who plays a U.S. President's daughter in the soon-to-be-released The First Family, will next star in a Broadway play, Lunch Hour, written by Jean (Please Don't Eat the Daisies) Kerr, directed by Mike Nichols. Gilda's role: the Other Woman.

October 1 (remember that date) Bantam Books will publish not one, not two, but three books based on the characters in TV's Dallas: The Quotations of J. R. Ewing will have a black and white pic of the Evil One on every page, along with, sure enough, quotations. The Ewings of Dallas by Burt Hirschfeld is the first of a series of novels about these folks—original, not just TV rewrites. The Dallas Family Album has pictures, bios of the stars, and, what we've all been waiting for, the Ewing family history. What with the actors' strike keeping new episodes away from the small screen, Dallas junkies must now be forced to read about their fave family. Egad.

tech talk:

Synthesized quartz lock tuning explained.

Staying tuned. Simply put, it's what the tech talk above is all about. To be precise, our tech talk describes incredibly accurate tuning technology. Technology that's yours in the amazing new MCS Series* 3260 60-watt Synthesized quartz phase lock receiver.

That's quite a mouthful, so we'll take it one step at a time.

Synthesize means to bring together or combine. And that's just what MCS has done. They've combined quartz crystal precision with microelectronic circuitry to create a tuning system of incredible precision.

The quartz crystal vibrates at an incredibly accurate frequency. When you select a station, a device called a comparator compares the receiver's frequency with that of the quartz crystal, continuously correcting for deviation. This complete circuit is called a Phase Lock Loop and is managed by a miniature computer called a microprocessor.

To make sure there's no doubt about what station you're locked in on so securely, the 3260 provides you with a large, clear, digital readout of the station frequency.

But that's just the beginning. You also get fully electronic touch tuning, a memory function that lets you program up to six stations on AM or FM, LED wattage meters, LED signal strength meters and much, much, more.

The MCS Series* 3260 60-watt Synthesized quartz phase lock receiver. A mouthful that will provide you with an earful of wonderful listening.

The MCS Series* 3260 60-watt Synthesized quartz phase lock receiver only $449.95. Only at JCPenney.

Election results postponed

By KEN ROSS
Collegian Staff

The results of the Monday and Tuesday's Undergraduate Student Senate elections will not be released until next Wednesday night because of an incomplete election report and conflicts over election procedures.

Senator Ronald Keefe said that he intends to file a protest over election procedure this morning. Keefe is objecting to not being given "definitive" answers as to election rules prior to the balloting and also claimed that results of the election were being made known even though the report had not been officially released.

The protest will be brought before the SGA Coordinating Committee next Tuesday. If an appeal is made of the committee's decision then the protest would be decided by the student judiciary.

The election results were not released because Mueller did not have her report ready in time for last night's Senate meeting.

"I want the election thrown out," Keefe said. "I want to know what the groundrules are before the election, and I don't want the rules of the election to be made according to the whims of the chair."

Keefe was referring to the chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, Diane Mueller.

Keefe's objection to the "groundrules" of the election referred to the controversy over the "sticker" campaign through which Keefe and 29 others were running for commuter senate seats.

Keefe accused Mueller of leading people to believe that the stickers used were illegal, while not giving any definitive answer to him as their legality, and claimed that this hindered his election chances.

"I think it is unfair that I run under a cloud of possible illegality," Keefe said. "It's hard to convince people to vote for you when they're unsure that what you're doing is valid."

In response to Keefe's accusations, Mueller said she was not approached with the issue of the stickers until Monday morning when she was going to pick up the ballot boxes.

"Rich Maran, (Co-President of the SGA), came to me with a copy of a sticker on Monday morning," Mueller said, "and I immediately ruled them illegal. He then convinced me not to make a snap decision so I took it back. On Tuesday afternoon I had all the laws before me regarding the legality of the stickers and found them to be illegal. The ballots for commuter elections that had stickers on them were not counted in the voting."

Senator Joel Weissman, a member of the Progressive Student Alliance, who were opposed to the sticker candidates, said the stickers did not effect the outcome of the election.

"I don't believe that the question of the validity of the stickers made any difference in the outcome, Weissman said. "I think we won because we campaigned and they lost because they didn't."

UMass remains open Friday

Despite rumors to the contrary, the University of Massachusetts will not be closing this week due to continued water problems.

Anne Wood, a representative of the UMass News Bureau, said as of 6 p.m. yesterday rumors indicating the University would close were not true. No plans existed to close school as of that time.

Committee to study SCERA

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Staff

A proposal to reorganize the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) made by co-presidents Rich Moran and Rich LaVoice was passed last night by the Undergraduate Student Senate after over three hours of heated debate. The proposal will create a "task force" of three people who will report directly to the officers of the Student Government Association.

The proposal narrowly passed with 28 votes for the proposal, 23 votes against and 3 abstentions.

LaVoice said the proposal was more a "modification" than a reorganization, stating the task force members would act as information gatherers and liasons between SCERA and the senate. He said the task force members would each report to a particular SGA officer, the treasurer, the senate speaker, and the co-presidents.

The proposal differed from a SCERA sponsored reorganization mainly in the accountability of the task-force members. The SCERA proposal would have required task force members to report to the SCERA student coordinator who, in turn, would be responsible to the senate Coordinating Committee and the senate directly.

Moran said the task-force "will be responsible for issues which demand a crossover of understanding and knowledge." He said SCERA teams, which advocate and research particular student issues, sometimes have trouble communicating with each other and task-force personnel would act as information gatherers between teams, especially on those issues which demand a broader perspective.

LaVoice said the task-force will have no powers to allocate money or take direct action.

"Such issues would be brought before the senate," he said.

Treasurer Al Wallace said the three task force members would each be paid $25 per week.

Senator Michael Sussman, who advocated the SCERA proposal, said he could work with the presidents' proposal because it differed only slightly from SCERA's.

"We were able to get them (the presidents) to compromise on a number of issues. I only hope the officers use the task force wisely," he said.

Small business center to open office on campus

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

The Small Business Development Center, a program designed to provide technical assistance to Massachusetts small businesses, will open a regional office at the University of Massachusetts next month.

The center, one of 16 located throughout the U.S., was announced at a dedication ceremony held Tuesday in Springfield. The ceremony was attended by Gov. Edward J. King, U.S. Congressman Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., Dean Harold T. Allan, of the School of Business Administration at UMass and Henry Koffler, UMass Chancellor.

Brian Nicholas, Director of SBDC regional office at the University, said small businesses will find the center useful.

"The Center will provide professional services to those businesses unable to afford those same services through private firms," Nicholas said.

Gov. King, who spoke at the dedication ceremony, praised the idea of a Small Business Development Center, stating that, "the glare of public opinion focuses so overwhelmingly on large corporations that the importance of small businesses is often overlooked."

According to King, the Center will be a joint venture of the U.S. Small Business Administration and the State Department of Commerce with UMass.

The services to be provided include direct counseling for small business persons, continuing education programs, and applied research. The Center will also attempt to act as a single access point for small businesses seeking services from business support agencies already in existence.

The University will utilize faculty, professionals and qualified students to provide services. Clients will also have access to other University resources including library and computer facilities.

Opposition to the center has been raised by members of private consulting firms concerned about the possibility of their businesses being undercut by the free services offered by the center.

Paul Serotkin, a member of the Smaller Businesses Association of New England, a private, non-profit organization, said the possibility of this happening does exist, but centers in other areas of the country have always worked out favorably for both the private and public sectors of small business assistance firms.

"We have a Center at the University of Southern Maine in Portland and we've always received positive reports from that area," Serotkin said.

Commenting on Tuesday's dedication ceremony, Koffler said, "the University is particularly enthusiastic about the Center because it will serve as a vehicle for fulfilling the University's traditional public service commitment while playing an important role in support of economic growth throughout the state."

State college faculty vote for tentative strike

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — By a four-out-of-five margin, teachers and librarians at Massachusetts' 10 state colleges authorized yesterday a strike anytime after Nov. 1 to protest Gov. Edward King's refusal to approve their tentative contract.

Vincent McGrath, president of the Massachusetts State College Association, said the 1,010 of 1,260 teachers and librarians voting approved a walkout if a contract is not signed. They have worked without a contract since July.

Ford claims Carter's attacks on Reagan are backfiring

Former President Gerald R. Ford accused President Carter of "shameful" behavior that could reopen wounds from Watergate and Vietnam, while the president's spokesman conceded yesterday "there's some truth" in the belief that Carter's sharp rhetorical attacks on Ronald Reagan are backfiring.

While his press secretary conceded that Carter's campaign may be sputtering, the president staged a bill-signing ceremony in the sun-drenched Rose Garden at the White House.

Reagan seemed a light year away in Youngstown, Ohio, touring a rusting and nearly deserted steel mill and blaming the president's policies for throwing thousands of steelworkers out of work.

The former California governor, who has courted the bluecollar vote assiduously, also pocketed the support of the 2 million-member Teamsters, the nation's biggest union. It was the first union endorsement of his campaign.

Independent candidate John B. Anderson, meanwhile, accused Carter and Reagan both of ignoring the real issues. Stumping at Yale University in New Haven, Conn., Anderson also insisted that despite sagging polls of his own, "I just believe that this campaign can turn around."

French president denounces recent anti-semitic attacks

PARIS (AP) — President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and his premier took the offensive yesterday to denounce attacks against Jews and proclaim the unity of France in opposing racism and anti-Semitism.

Accused by his critics of keeping silent too long, Giscard d'Estaing in a five-minute-television address reassured France's 650,000 Jews that the nation will stand united to "face the threat that is throwing us back to the hideous germs of intolerance, terrorism and racism."

Premier Raymond Barre told a packed National Assembly "the entire French nation stands beside ... our Jewish compatriots in these tragic circumstances."

Student still missing after canoe accident

HUNTINGTON — Police continued their search of Lake Norwich yesterday for the body of University of Massachusetts student James Duffy, 18, of Winchester, Ma., and Grayson Dormitory, who apparently drowned in a canoeing accident last Sunday morning.

A spokesman for the Mass. State Police in Russell said boats from various state and federal agencies dragged the bottom of the square-mile lake for the second day in a row but failed to turn up a body. Police said the dragging operations would continue again today.

Teams of scuba divers searched the lake Sunday and Monday for Duffy's body, but had to abandon the underwater operations because of the muddy condition of the lake. A search by a state police helicopter and a private seaplane also proved fruitless.

According to police, Duffy was apparently canoeing with two friends on the lake at about 1 a.m. Sunday when the craft capsized, sending the three into the water. Two of the students apparently were able to swim ashore but were not sure what had happened to Duffy.

Vandals have left their mark at the University of Massachusetts again, the victim this time was the Dukes Room in the Student Union building.

William Harris, director of the Campus Center said last night that he was upset that somebody had taken the trouble to make a mess because they were trying to keep the room in good shape.

The mess was found Tuesday morning by maintenance personnel who found old Student Government budget material and trash strewn about the room including papers in the chandelier. Two chairs in the room were also apparently victims of the vandals.

The room is scheduled through the Recognized Student Organization Office and Harris said the room was available to any RSO group. He did not know who was using the room last.

James Muldoon, night manager of the Campus Center said the room was originally designed to be used as an executive dining room and that the Trustees used to eat lunch in the room before the Campus Center was built.

The room was slated to be refurbished in the next few years as part of a physical plant redecorating program.

USSR warns against intervention

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iranian jets raided the Iraqi capital of Baghdad yesterday, the United States offered help to other Persian Gulf nations and the Soviet Union told the West to stay out of the Iran-Iraq war.

The Soviet Union and Syria signed a treaty in Moscow that included military cooperation and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev made the Kremlin's most authoritative declaration on the war. He said the Soviet Union would not intervene in the conflict and warned the West: "Hands off these events."

He spoke at a dinner for visiting President Hafez Assad of Syria.

At least three Iranian jets apparently slipped through Iraqi air defenses to raid Baghdad and reporters saw flames leaping from buildings on the outskirts of the city. The sky was lit by anti-aircraft fire and surface-to-air missiles and flashes of bomb explosions were seen.

North Yemen was reported to have joined Jordan in support of Iraq in the war, which threatened to involve more nations the longer it lasts. The United States offered early warning information to gulf nations that feel threatened. The Soviet-Syrian treaty was seen as an effort by both countries to shore up their influence in the Middle East.

Israel said it "cannot remain passive" in the face of growing Jordanian involvement in the war and Saudi Arabia was said to be increasing security measures at oil installations in case the war spreads.

Crown Prince Sheik Saad al Abdallah al-Sabah, prime minister of Kuwait, called on Kuwait's warring neighbors to stop the war and prevent foreign intervention. British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington told the House of Lords that "the longer the situation continues the more dangerous the whole area will become."

In Tehran, militants holding the 52 American hostages, now in their 340th day of captivity, said the Americans were "all right" and the Iranian Parliament was still studying the hostage issue.

Tehran Radio announced that an interim gasoline rationing plan would start Thursday pending preparation of special ration coupons. The radio said private cars would be allowed 30 liters, 7.8 gallons, of gasoline a month. The oil production facilities of both countries have been damaged in the war.

The radio also said an Iranian jumbo jet arriving from Paris with 487 Iranian passengers was diverted to another airport because of an air raid alert at Tehran airport.

Students pay for University Store thefts

By JUDI JASUREK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students are paying for Campus Center Store thefts.

Last year shoplifters cost the University Store $38,000 said Chet Flahive who directs the security at the store. Because of these losses, less funds are allocated to the Campus Center, he said.

The University Store is a non-profit business and, Flahive said, the profit that the store makes is redirected into the Campus Center.

Most of the shoplifters that have been aprehended are either students from the University or students from the town of Amherst, Flahive said. He added that some are probably professional shoplifters but the majority are not.

He said that approximately 120 to 140 alleged thieves are apprehended each semester.

The store has nine security guards, said Cathy Thomas a security guard at the store. There are mirrors and signs that are also used to deter potential thieves.

Even though an extensive security system is used, thousands of dollars are lost every year, Flahive said. The amount of money the store loses to shoplifters increases each year but because of the inflation it is hard to estimate the real dollar increases.

"There are just too many people to watch," said Flahive, who added the problem is not a budgetary one. He said that too many people come into the store to be able to watch everyone.

The heaviest losses occur during the cold weather because larger coats are worn and more items can be confiscated, said Flahive. He added that the most common items stolen are small in size, but large in price.

When the store catches someone they call the police who take over from there. Flahive said he often has to testify against alleged offenders at Hampshire County District Court.

Flahive blames the collegian for a number of these shoplifting occurrences. Flahive said the paper doesn't have adequate court coverage, so students are kept from getting all the news. He said it is important that students be enlightened about current court information. This would hopefully deter some of the problem, he said.

Woman breaks school tradition

By CARLA LESH
Collegian Correspondent

A long standing tradition has been broken by the University of Massachusetts Marching Bank this fall when, for the first time in the history of the band, a woman has been appointed drum major.

Linda Paul, the new drum major, is a music education junior who has played the trumpet for 13 years.

"It's a first, and a first for a university this old is hard to achieve," Paul said of her appointment.

"It is the drum major's responsibility to lead the band on the field," Paul added. "It is a big task to make sure that the 200 member band is doing the right thing at the right time."

To be heard by the band as they are playing, the drum major must have a loud voice and the ability to command attention. Although she has a traditionally male role, Paul has not run into any problems.

"The fact that I'm a woman doesn't get in my way. You have to be able to command respect and get the job done," Paul said.

George Parks, director of the marching band, said "she has the respect of the band. She can relax with the band and yet get control of them when it is necessary and this is very difficult to do with your peers. It is a credit to her leadership that there has been no friction with the band."

Paul said she knows of few other female drum majors on the college level. However, more women are breaking into the field every year, according to Parks, who directs a drum major academy each summer at Hampshire College.

Deafness : the invisible handicap

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: The following article is the fourth in the five-part series on what it's like to be handicapped while attending the University of Massachusetts. Special thanks for this article should be extended to Hannah Yaffe, an interpreter employed by the Handicapped Student Affairs office, for without her assistance, this interview could not have taken place.)*

You might pass Diane Gilliland and Dave Frank as you walk through the campus center. They would seem to be as much a part of the campus throng as anyone else. Yet, they feel singled out and seperated because they suffer from an invisible handicap: deafness.

Life for a deaf person at UMass is not easy even with the support services offered, because there are several communication barriers existing between the school's eight deaf students and the rest of the population.

Though Diane and David have been deaf all their lives, they can communicate to people through lip reading and sign language. They also can be understood when they speak, although it does take a patient ear to retain and comprehend every word.

Both graduated from the Clarke School for the Deaf in Northampton, one of the first oral schools in the United States.

The school is called "oral" because they don't believe in sign language and forbid it so the students are required to read lips, David said.

After leaving the Clarke School, David, a senior majoring in sports management, entered the University of Denver, which had no support services there for deaf students. David found he spent countless hours on his own studying to get by in classes.

"It was impossible for me to understand every word the professor was saying, so I used to just sit in class and read the newspaper," said David.

Diane, a first year graduate student working on her masters in special education, recived her Bachelor Science in community services from UMass last year after transferring from Cape Cod Community College.

"Before I went to Cape Cod, I spent one year at Massasoit. They had no support services or note takers there and I had to rely on lip reading," she said.

"Lots of times the professors would forget I was there and would walk around the room while lecturing. I managed O.K. because I borrowed notes, but I felt as though I was only learning 15 percent of what the rest of the class was," said Diane.

"At Cape Cod I received support services for the first time," she added. "I realized how essential it is to have interpreters and note takers for a deaf person who's going to college.

Both Diane and David were brought up communicating through lip reading, but coming to the University of Massachusetts required them to use sign language.

"Without interpreter services, we have to work at least twice as hard as other students," said David. "We must read the materials carefully and borrow two or three other student's notes and put them together to get a complete view of what happened in a lecture.

"We can't take notes at the same time we're watching the interpreter," he added.

It's hard to make friends

When people realize that Diane and David are hearing impaired, they back off.

"We always have to make the first move to get to know anyone," David said.

"I'm sure a lot of students are afraid to communicate with us because they don't know how they should pronounce words or if they have to learn sign language," said Diane. "I just want to tell them not to be afraid. We can lip read. We can write. We can read. The only difference between us is that our ears don't work.

Students often go up to Diane and Dave and start conversation, but when they turn around to ask them to repeat what they just said because they did not see the person speak the first time, they get looked at like they're freaks.

"They don't know what to do. They are afraid and shocked," Diane said.

"We are only handicapped in the sense that we cannot hear," said David, "I want people to know that we are just like them and can do anything they can, as well as they can."

David lives in Greenough dormitroy, in Central, which has no modifications for the deaf. But he has installed a light indicator on the phone and a teletype machine on his own.

Diane Gilliland (left), a hearing impaired student from UMass, converses with Hannah Yaffe using sign language. (Staff photo by Nancy Anderson)

The teletype (TTY) is a device for the deaf that hooks up to a phone. The caller types what he wants to say into the machine and it appears on a screen in front of him and in front of the person reciving the call. Instead of conversing through an oral conversation, the people are allowed to communicate by reading the words.

Both Diane and David agree there should be teletype machines in every major building on campus.

"There are many occasions when professors want to discuss things with us about our classes. It would be so easy and convenient for us to make a phone call, but there is no way. Whitmore, which owns a machine, is not open in the evenings or the weekends. If important buildings, like the library, had them, then we could make call," said Diane.

Diane lives off campus in an apartment which has none of the necessary additions for the deaf, such as a flashing fire alarm, light signaling phone, or doorbell light.

"Sometimes I regret missing the rich experience of mingling and getting inot college life," said Diane, "But, I've been living on my own for quite some time now, and I can't change into the restricted enviroment of living in a dorm after being independent for so long."

On weekends, neither Diane nor David said they stay on campus to socialize because little entertainment is accessible to them.

"Just about everything here deals with music," commented David. "I would like to see more things for deaf people like mime or movies with subtitles, but until then, I socialize with my deaf friends outside of school."

Vending truck brings night time snacks to campus

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

For the first time in 15 years a vending truck will be allowed to serve food at the University of Massachusetts.

The truck, which is owned and operated by James DiNatale owner of Mike's Westview Cafe, will make nightly rounds of the campus, stopping at three locations for one hour each.

"We have a license from the town of Amherst to park alongside the road at three different areas," said DiNatale. "First, the truck will stop on North Hadley Road next to Southwest from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m. Then it will move to Butterfield Road from 9 to 10 and finish the night in front of the Sylvan dormitories between 10 and 11."

The truck will offer a variety of hot foods and will also have an assortment of snacks.

"We will be selling grinders, cakes and brownies," said DiNatale. "Everything is homemade."

DiNatale was granted a temporary license to operate the vending truck by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

"We had no objections to the idea, the police had no objections to the idea, so we granted the license on a trial basis for this semester," said Amherst Board of Selectmen Chairman William C. Atkins. "We thought it was an innovative idea that would be very beneficial to the students and if it works out we will continue it next year," Atkins said.

The truck, dubbed the "Blue Goose" by DiNatale, will begin service to the UMass area starting tonight. It will be in service every night for the remainder of the semester.

"There is a policy of no vending trucks on campus," said Dean of Students William F. Field. "So far I have no knowledge of this truck being on campus."

Assistant Director of Public Affairs Gerald Grady said "as far as I have been informed, the vending truck will be operated on town roads, not University property."

Rocky Horror fans perform

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

Lisa Freedman, a University of Massachusetts junior, is organizing local talent for a performance of the Rocky Horror Picture Show on Oct. 18 at the Hampshire Mall in Hadley.

The Rocky Horror Picture Show, a movie shown weekends at midnight, has attracted a group of dedicated viewers who attend the weekly showings in costumes and make-up similar to the characters in the movie.

Freedman, who has seen the movie thirty-eight times, said the response to her advertisement in the Collegian has been good, but she still doesn't have a complete cast of characters.

Since she saw the movie for the first time on August 18, 1979, Freedman claims to have become something of an authority on it, having collected numerous articles and books and the soundtrack to the movie.

"I hated the movie the first time I saw it," she said. "The second time I went, it was with about ten other people. We threw water and rice, and swore at Brad."

Brad is one of the less popular characters in the movie.

Freedman has seen the movie in several cities including New York and Boston. In New York, it was the 8th Street Playhouse where, Freedman said, some of the fans had seen the movie over three-hundred times. Her most frequented theater is the Exeter Street Theater in Boston, where she has seen it about 20 times.

ALL YOU CAN EAT!

Howard Johnsons
Rt. 9, Hadley

If you think you could pick your beer with your eyes closed, here's your chance.

Probably just one beer drinker in 3 can pass this test.

All three major premium beers are distinctly different in taste. After all, they're made by different brewers using different ingredients and different brewing processes. Still, it takes a pretty educated tongue to tell them apart.

You may not win, but you can't lose.

This test requires a blindfold. That's so your eyes won't influence your mouth. Because taste is all that counts—in this test, and in a beer. Here's how the test works. You pour Schlitz, Bud and Miller into identical glasses. Have a friend label them 1, 2 and 3 and switch them around. Now, taste. The one you pick may not be your beer, but it's the beer with the taste you want.
See? You can't lose.

What is that taste you're tasting?

Maybe beer tastes so good because you're really tasting each sip more than once. First, the lively, refreshing character of beer comes from the aroma and flavor of the hops. Next, as you swallow, you sense the richness—the body—that barley malt adds. Finally, the finish. Now the balance of tastes becomes clear. No one taste should intrude on your total beer enjoyment.

How do Schlitz, Budweiser and Miller compare on taste?

That's for you to decide. Simply rate each beer from 1 to 10 on the flavor characteristics below. When you're finished, try to guess the brands by name. Very, very few people can do this.

Does the taste of a beer ever change?

Yes. All beers have changed over the years. One example is Schlitz. Two years ago a master brewer named Frank Sellinger came to Schlitz. He came to be president. And to brew a Schlitz that was smoother than any other beer. Taste that beer for yourself. Because taste is what it's all about.

Senate scandal

After the electioneering ends and everyone has been given their option to vote, the placards come down and the ballot-counting begins.

Conjured up is an image of a few disinterested, somber individuals steadfastly working late into the night. The tense silence is broken only by the shuffling of ballots and chalk on the score board.

This is the image, the norm. This is what was expected at Dickinson Hall on Tuesday night when ballots for the 105 open Student Senate seats were tabulated.

But this sober image was shattered that night as members from two competing factions, the Progressive Student Alliance and another group using ballot stickers, continually and repeatedly disrupted the proceedings.

Diane Mueller, governmental affairs chairperson, who many thought should disqualify herself as ballot counter because of her candidacy and membership with the Progressive Student Alliance, termed the rowdy group of onlookers as "animals."

A crowd of about twenty-five candidates for the open commuter collective seats loitered in the back of the ballot-counting room. Hostilities flared again and again as rulings on a possible invalidation of the sticker campaign flip-flopped several times.

The scene was both party-like and somewhat riotous as at several intervals groups of the beer-drinking students rushed the ballot counters shouting.

At one point a UMass police officer, overhearing the ruckus next door came into the room to investigate. The onlookers demanded the ballots be impounded.

Words like "scam" and "disgrace" were bandied about and pleas for quiet and order constantly ignored.

This display of contempt for the political process was bi-partisan and is detestable. Though students so dearly need effective, level-headed leadership, Tuesday night's display clearly demonstrated they are not getting it in the continuing chaotic climate of the Student Government. The election should be invalidated.

IM TELLING YOU OCCIFER, WE WERE JUST COUNTING BALLOTS

When ERA meant era

One should not attempt the tribulations of a large university without the guidance of a "drinkin' buddie." One drinkin' buddie is a good companion to have—but the more, the better. It's cheaper than spending $50 an hour on psychoanalysis. And with whom else could you drink away hours of procrastination, the action at Fenway Park, and Howard Cosell? Which reminds me of a story...

Wilbur is my favorite drinkin' buddie of all. He's a terrific conversationalist, holds his liquor, and is over twenty, so he doesn't need a fake I.D. Wilbur's one fault, however, is that he's a Yankee fan. Now it's one thing to root for the Bronx Bombers in the privacy of your own room, and quite another to let everyone know. That is most certainly taking your life and putting it in someone else's jealous, vengeful hands.

Anyway, one evening Wilbur and I walked to Amherst for a few rounds. As we sat at the bar, half-sober patrons were cheering the Red Sox game on the TV, drowning out the inone commentary of the sportscaster. Despite the racket, we became absorbed with the two older gentlemen sitting to our right.

"I remember a time," the first man burped, "when ERA just stood for 'earned run average.' What's all this hoop-de-doo about woman's lib? Hell, girls oin't gonna play baseball, ERA or no ERA."

"That's what I like about Reagan," his companion added. "He knows where women belong—standin' off to the side, smilin' at their husbands, just like his wife, Rosalyn."

"Nancy, not Rosalyn. And she can sure hold that—burp—smile o long time."

"He's had more practice smilin' than her, though, 'cause of all those movies he starred in. Didn't he win on Oscar for playing the part of a dying baseball star who gets up in front of a whole stadium full of people and says, 'this coffee maker is the greatest contraption ever de-vised?'"

"Nah, that wos Gary Cooper playing some damn Yankee, and he said, 'I'd rather be sellin' coffee in Boston.'"

At the words "damn Yan-kee," Wilbur's entire face turned crimson. "Lou Gehrig did not say that!" he blurted out. "He was lot more talented than any of your Boston Bloopers, dying or not!"

"You wouldn't happen to be a Yan-kee fan, would you, son?" the first gentleman suggested as his friend loomed behind Wilbur.

"I think I'll watch television." I mumbled.

Wilbur continued undaunted. "When's the last time Boston won the World Series?" he challenged.

Our friend behind Wilbur answered with a right hook, but his aim was a bit tipsy.

"Swing and a miss," could be heard from the screen.

"Name the last time they won the league pennant."

Our friend with the bad aim tried again.

"Strike two!" yelled the sportscaster.

"Come to think of it, when's the last time Boston won its division?"

The first gentlemon sauntered over and pounded Wilbur into the ground.

"It's going...going...GONE! A grand slam for..." the sportscaster shrieked. The spectators roared, our two gentlemen suddenly lost interst in Wilbur and cheered along, which was fortunate because I was able to drag him out to the sidewalk.

"Wilbur! What did you do something crazy like that for? You could have gotten killed in there!"

"I had to do it," he moaned. "Someone's got to tell those people the truth."

Wilbur and I are still drinkin' buddies, but I think I'm going to hold off on the boozin' until after the World Series. Meanwhile, Wilbur still defends the home team at a moment's notice, shrinks still cost $50 an hour, Nancy Reagan is still smiling at her husband, and the Yanks are still winning. Some things never change.

Victim of Black Thursday

To the Editor:

I am one of those who were unfortunate enough to have his motorcycle towed during "Black Thursday," October 2. My bike was underneath Cance House in a spot favored by at least ten other bikers because of its convenience and the protection that it affords our vehicles.

A large group of motorcycles in a well-lit, populous place is considerably less prone to thievery than bikes out in the middle of a dirt lot, where two healthy people can pick up a motorcycle and put it in the back of a van and disappear forever.

I have been parking my motorcycle in the same spot for more than a month. There is no "No Parking" sign and not once has anyone given so much as a hint of caution that perhaps my bike was in danger of being towed. I have spoken to students who have lived in Washington (my dorm) for many semesters and not one has any recollection of any bikes having been towed in the past.

As is expected in these situations, I was quite outraged to find my property had been tampered with. However, if you consider the chap whose $60 lock was blow-torched apart, perhaps I am fortunate. After the towing charge and ticket his grand total is close to $100. As it happens, I can ill-afford the five dollar ticket plus $24.82 towing charges that I will have to pay to get my bike back (which had been damaged during towing).

I would have no objection to this action were it not that there was NO WARNING OF ANY KIND issued. If you can inform me as to any recourse that I may have, please do so.

Index = Yearbook

To the Editor:

How many people know what the INDEX is? Well, for those of you who don't, it is the student yearbook. Yes, INDEX = YEARBOOK—a simple equation. In the past, the INDEX has been plagued with a number of problems—a perrenial one being that it never manages to reach the students until a year later than scheduled. Problems which have contributed to this occurrence include lack of student awareness, student apathy, and mismanagement.

This year, however, under the capable direction of business major Rita Caprino, the 1981 INDEX plans to be ready for distribution in 1981. For this to occur, students must take an interest, and actively support, the INDEX. Writers, photographers, and editors are desperately needed, and everyone is welcome to help. No experience is required for any of the aforementioned positions, only a desire to learn and lend a helping hand. I ask all of you UMies out there, with just a little free time, to go down to the INDEX office, located in room 103 in the Campus Center, as soon as possible.

INDEX = YEARBOOK!!!!!

The horror of being dull

To the Editor:

This is my senior year at UMass and I've seen many changes since I began. The once inspiring graffiti covered walls in the library stairwells have been gone over with a pasty yellow paint. There are plans to paint the famous for infamous! Blue Wall brown. Now I read the Campus Center will be closed on Halloween weekend, signalling the end of an old tradition.

I'm finding it increasingly difficult to wear my "party school of the year" shirt in good conscience. UMass has been accused of being a lot of things, but being dull was never one of them. This is by far the worst UMass Horror.

John Dunphey
South Amherst

Today I became valid

What happens when everyone knows you exist—your teachers, fellow students, department heads, landlord, Amherst Towing Service, and even the Vets Office know you are taking up space and attending classes—but the University computer, and "impersonal binary man," whom we shall call IBM, says, "Nay, nay this man does not exist; Superceed and delete from Memory Cells."

Chuck Duquette

It all started on a beautiful Indian Summer morning when I was on my way to class. I had just broken my tooth on a bagel at the Campus Center Cafeteria, so I was sure I existed. Moreover, I had just given thirty bucks to Amherst Towing to get my car back, and my landlord was looking for the rent. In addition, I had watched Shogun all week and had two papers, a class presentation and three books to read by the end of the day. If I didn't exist, how could I be in so much trouble?

ALARMING REFUND

At precisely this moment an alarm rong in the Bursur's Office, indicating that all money paid by student 2561873 (me) should be refunded—without explanation—to said person's surviving relatives at last known address. Simultaneously, Mr. IBM also notified the Veterans of Alien Affairs Office to cut all further funds to 2561873 (me again) and the VAAO immediately put into effect a "Search and Destroy Mission."

At 11:57 a.m. on Tuesday, September 16, 1980 I officially ceased to exist. Anji-San had crossed through the Straits of Mogellon and been swept to the Japans. I had crossed Whitmore, and the University Computer punched me into the VOID...

In a flash I'd been demateriolized, turned into ectoplasm. I'd become a CyBorg. At first I thought of all the money I'd save on food, clothing and Health Insurance, but then reality struck home, and I realized I'd miss the BOB MARLEY concert.

BEGINNING-or-END?

This, of course, would be, and probably should be, the logical and merciful ending to this fractured fairy tale were it not for an alert terminal operator at the Vet's Office who astutely registered that all her observational data was telling her that CyBorg: 2561873 (Formerly Me) did indeed suck up coffee and donuts just like someone who does exist. To this chance happening I owe my existence.

Immediate corrective actions were called for, and the CyBorg (I'd recently become) was instructed to become Validated so that he can continue to get money from the Interstellar Veterans Administration. Without that $311 o month, whether I existed or not was a mute paint.

So began my long march back to existence and reality. Why come back? I often wondered at the time, but after all I did have a cat to feed. Anyway, after a two week course in Inter-Office Ping Pong, in which the CyBorg (still me) assumes the roll of ball. I was allowed an audience with the Grand Exalted acting Chief Assistant to the Impersonal Binary Master of Reality.

I assumed the Samuri-Sitting position, easy to get into when you have no knee joints, and explained my plight, that I had become a non-existent being like the squared circle, the perpetual motion machine, true democracy and a public spirited oil company. We had many adventures together, and I saved my Lord ToraNaga's Life once when a janitor mistakenly pulled his plug. In his wisdom he decided to restore the ship of my existence but the first try failed, and I ended up a stork raiser in Bulgaria. After I saved him a second time, he assembled all this computers and terminals and informed them that he had just made his faithful retainer, Anji-San II-HachiMoto and o Samuri, and that soon with Anji-San's help, he will become ShoGun over all the University and force the IBM to commit SepuKu by publicly disembowelling OSCARS' Memory Tapes.

To show his loyalty to his Lord, Anji-San II, the new Student Samurai (Formerly 2561873) defaces and shreds his student ID Card...

The New Commandments

In the beginning, Man made Man in o test tube, but a war broke out and the survivors hadn't been educated yet as to how to continue the species by the correct method. And so Man and Woman copulated to reproduce.

It took several thousand years before Man educated himself to the point where he could again be the Master of his Race. However, during all those years, the millions of various humon people had devised many different legends and superstitions. There were disagreements and even wars over which country of people had the correct view in their legends. There was, though, one consensus that wos most difficult for scientists to break from the people's cultures, and that was the legend of God and the Ten Commandments.

For hundreds of years, Man worked at educating the race on a massive scole. He broke all records ot industry, science, creation. Then it became cleor that the superstitions of God and the Ten Commandments were put into proper perspective, and that Man could again be the true Master of the Race.

To satisfy the need of the Average Person to hove Rules of Order, o concensus was drawn up among the Better People, who clearly know more obout such matters, so that the Average Person could have something to worship and rules to follow:

I. I am the Lord thy Supreme Court, thou sholt not place true God before me, or else you'll be occused of mixing Church and Stote and then you'll really be up the creek.

II. Thou shalt not make laws pertaining to anything moral, unless the morals are politically or socially expedient.

III. Thou shalt not be rich.

IV. Thou sholt not honor thy father and mother.

V. Thou shalt not be a virgin if thou art over fourteen.

VI. Thou shalt not punish lawlessness unless the transgressor is poor.

VII. Thou sholt not send thy child to a school where no minorities or handicapped go, even if none live within ten miles of the school.

VIII. Thou shalt not have opinions if thou art Catholic.

IX. Thou shalt be equal.

X. Thou shalt not be unwanted, for this is the most offensive of all capital crimes and is punishable by execution without appeal.

Now, as Man has established himself as Master of the Race, and has come to discover the ten most fundamental truths available to the species, there lies in the future o Golden Age of peace, happiness and truth for all mankind to enjoy.

Pesty petitioners pound pavement

While biting into another soggy tuna and cheese grinder in the campus center coffee shop I was interrupted by a fellow flapping a petition in his paw. He took a seat next to me, making a place for himself by shoving over my Collegian into the leftover pizza in the center of the table. I had my eyes on the front poge, watching the pepperoni seep through the paper, when what do you think comes swinging into my view but this guy's petition. I grunted what I hoped would sound like an offensive growl.

Seth Jacobson

"Would you sign this? I'm running for student senotor and what I need is your signature so that I con run, officially run, that is," he said matter-of-factly. Why don't these types ever come around during English class, I wondered. I flashed my wickedest snare.

"I'm only trying to do my job. Just your John Hond cock. How 'bout it?"

"Why don't you ask those kids by the vending machine? They look like they hove time to kill," I said.

"They're too young. Don't you get it, I need your signature before I con be placed on the ballot. It's just a formality."

"So I should just sign away my life. One, two, three, no questions asked? I don't even know what goods you're selling. For all I know you could be an agent of the Liddy patrol. What's your rap and then maybe we can negotiate." I drove a hard bargain.

"I'll tell you later. Right now all I want are some signatures. Fifty more to be exact and then I'm official. Come on buddy don't bust my chops!"

"Look, if you would just tell me what you think then we might be able to get somewhere."

"The debates will be held sometime in the future. Come on buddy? The Union does things this way to be sure that I'm a serious condidate. If I didn't have the signatures I could be someone's rubber duck. for oll they know."

"Aw, come on! A hondful of signotures doesn't prove you're serious or not o duck. All it proves is that you're a pest, a successful pest at that, but still a pest."

"Well, the Union needs pests. That's the way things get done in the world and the Union. If I can't even get a handful of signatures from people then how successful could I be at putting forward legislation." He was right, the creep, the pests did run the world. To let him realize my disgust I went to take o vicious bite out of my sandwich but before I could do so he'd stuck his petition in my face; I couldn't stop the momentum of my jaws and I bit off a hefty chunk of the page. The clump went down my esophogus—a nice change, I thought, from that dripping wet tuna. It was nevertheless aghast, but he spoke first.

"I'm going to repart this to the Union!" As he got up with the remains of his petition in his hand o wave of sympathy swept over me.

"Don't go! Okay, you're a pest. I admit you're a pest. But why me? Why is it always me that you bother?"

"Don't be so smug." There was a pen resting in my hand and he began to jiggle my hand into motion as he continued his exclamation." There are thousands of yous out there. We leave no stone unturned."

"Then you're a dedicated stone turner, too. I like that. You're true colors are beginning to show through." I finished giving him my unique blur, and then I pinned down his hand preventing his escape.

"Now that I've given to the Union my word that you're o genuine stone turner and a successful pest who's probably not a rubber duck could you just give me hint of where you stand on the issues."

"Let's bomb the hell out of the Ayatollah!" he exclaimed with fists raised. As he spake these magic words I felt a sudden nousea come over me. Then, like a waterfoll I upchucked my lunch, tuna, cheese, and very wet part of his petition. As I watched him wring out the pre-digested part of the petition I realized I'd learned my lesson. It's no good to mix tuna-fish with jingoism.

College art museums; small but excellent

By GARY EYNATIAN
Collegian Staff

This is the last of a three-part series on Five College art galleries.

The art collections of Amherst College and Mount Holyoke College are similar to the colleges themselves—small but excellent.

Amherst College Art Museum

Mead Art Museum, the museum at Amherst, began its collection in 1855 when an alumnus donated six ancient Assyrian relief panels to the college. And, of course, it's been growing ever since.

There are paintings, sculptures, drawings, prints, African masks, Greek ceramics, silver, gold, glass, ivory carvings, furniture, tapestries, textiles and rugs in the collection. Of course, many of these things are in storage as the exhibit areas are not that large.

The museum's strength seems to be in its American art with works by artists such as Copley, Peales, Homer, Ryder, Durand, Cole and Bellows among the holdings.

Also represented are some leading 18th century English masters like Reynolds, Lawrence, Hudson, Ramsey, and Gainsborough. Many of their works deal with serious subjects, but such was English art in the 18th century.

We must bear in mind that a main function of the collection is to aid in the teaching of art and art history. Works which exemplify a certain time period or style must often be chosen over more entertaining and often more expensive pieces. But luckily there are a few entertaining works at the Mead Art Museum.

Charity with Three Children by Peter Paul Rubens, the 17th century Flemish master of the Baroque style, is a beautiful painting which shows Ruben's gift for creating colorful images which are forcefully dramatic.

Another aesthetically pleasing painting is Morning on the Seine by the popular 19th century French Impressionist Claude Monet. This work shows Monet's talent for presenting views of nature in which the light conditions are most important in the composition.

The Museum is open weekdays 10-4:30 and weekends from 1-5 and it's free. Now, let's hop on the Five-College bus and head over to South Hadley.

Mount Holyoke College Art Museum

Located on the second floor of the Art Building at Mt. Holyoke, this museum is a gem. As with the Amherst collection there aren't a lot of extremely famous artists represented, but rather, there are works which are important to students of art.

The strengths of the museum are its Ancient Greek, Roman, and Egyptian works as well as some noteworthy American and Asian pieces.

Hetch-Hetchy Canyon by the great 19th century American landscape artist Albert Bierstadt (see accompanying picture) is a striking portrayal of a canyon located twenty miles north of Yosemite. The golden hues (it has to be seen in color to be fully appreciated) and sheer beauty of the work give it an almost hypnotic quality.

Also quite interesting in the collection are the Japanese woodblock prints on view. With their thin, skillful lines and delicate color, they are wondrous. Vincent Van Gogh, we've all heard of him, once wrote to his brother Theo—"I envy the Japanese the extreme clearness which everything has in their work. It is never tedious, and never seems to be done too hurriedly. Their work is as simple as breathing, and they do a figure in a few sure strokes with the same ease as buttoning your coat." It's quite true—go see.

The museum also hosts temporary exhibits, often of one artist's work. Beginning October 15 and continuing through November 25 will be "works on paper" by Milton Avery.

CARP faces review at UNH

DURHAM, N.H (AP) — A group affiliated with the Unification Church is trying to regain a foothold in New Hampshire, the state it left amid charges of brainwashing and horossment five years ago.

The University of New Hampshire will hold a hearing today to decide on final recognition of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles as a student organization.

Recognized or not, CARP's state director calls the group "the dynamic force in America." And he said, "We're here to stay. It's a long-term commitment."

But others are wary of the group's goals. George Swope, a professor of psychology and Baptist minister who counsels and writes on the church, called CARP "a tremendous Trojan horse in this country."

"CARP is the chief recruiting agency for the Unification Church," Swope said Tuesday. "It is a group that has a destructive influence on a lot of people."

Last spring, CARP's appearance at the University of Massachusetts sparked a similar controversy when the group began distributing information and attempting to recruit in Campus Center.

The controversy is a large one for sa small a group. CARP has seven members in the state and 800 nationwide, while the church itself has about 20 New Hampshire members and perhaps 5,000 in the country.

When it was a UNH student group in 1975, CARP was charged with luring students to dinners and weekend workshops, showering them with attention and convincing them to leave school and join the church.

"Can you imagine going to a dinner, hearing a lecture, and getting brainwashed? That's crazy," CARP member Bruce Laberee said Tuesday.

But a woman who said her child joined first CARP and then the church while a UNH student in the early 70s, said the group put both her and her child through "an unbelievable horror."

"They fall into a trap, a beautifully made trap," she said of CARP members. "By the time they realize it, it's too late. They've lost contact with the outside world, they've lost their analytical minds."

The woman said she kidnapped — "I call it rescuing" — and "deprogrammed" her daughter after three years.

Laberee said encouraging people to join the church is not CARP's primary gool. "People got inspired by our ideals, said 'this is what I want,' and it changed their lifestyle radically," he said.

He said CARP's members were sent to New Hampshire to enroll at UNH and establish the new center, as well as to get on education.

"We have a public relations problem with all that negative publicity that came down before," Laberee said. "We hope to dispel it through personal interaction with people."

ed with this movie, I find I'm more open around people. I was never into acting before I got involved with this," Freedman said.

All of the acting is done while the movie is being shown, so mistakes made by the performers are not always picked up by the audience, Freedman said.

"We try to have a good time while we're acting out the movie. No one gets too excited if someone misses a line or two," Freedman said.

Several of the major roles, such as Majenta, Riff-Raff, Dr. Scott, and Brad, have been filled by UMass students.

Freedman, who is majoring in communications disorders, said most people taking part in the show are amateur performers just out for a little fun.

Minutewomen now 8-2

By ANTONY KUDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team crushed the University of Rhode Island 8-1, in an away match played at Kingston R.I. Tuesday afternoon. This marked their eigth win and upped their record to a remarkable 8-2.

The UMass double teams swept all three matches played against the Rams. Number one doubles, Kathy Burke and Carolyn Torbell, took the longest to rap up their victory in a three setter 2-6, 6-4, 6-2. At number two, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian breezed by their opponents 6-2, 6-2. The final team of Lynn O'Sullivan and Tombi Mincer had even a more convincing win with scores of 6-1, 6-2.

In singles play the netwomen were able to take five of the six matches with only one match going to URI. That match was the number one singles in which Barbara Mills was defeated by Heather Malan 7-6, 6-3. Apparently, Mills' ankle (injured a week and a half ago at BC) gave her alot of trouble as her opponent made her run all over the court.

"She gave me a lot of short vollies," Mills said. "I just couldn't get to them."

Number two Elizabeth Sullivan whizzed by Judy Koffman 6-1, 6-1. Playing at number three was captain Joanne Vennochi who went three sets with Jacki Racite to take the match 2-6, 7-6, 6-4. Chris Carson at number four won easily 6-1, 6-3. Number five Paula Natale defeated her opponent 6-1, 7-5. And finishing up was Patricia Sullivan who went three sets 4-6, 7-6, 6-2 to take her match.

"Everybody played well," said Beal. "URI had some good players but they are a very young team, they need some more experience."

UMass will host the Massachusetts Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women(MAIAW) Tournament this Saturday at the Boyden courts. The next team match will be the following Tuesday against the University of Connecticut at Storrs.

While the UMass varsity bowed to the Chiefs, the JVs swept the Springfield JVs 15-1, 15-7. While Springfield showed nothing more than a good serve, the Minutewomen mowed over Springfield with good overall defense and offense, especially in serving and passing.

The JVs improve their record to 4-1 and will travel to Fitchburg State College Saturday for a tri-match with Mt. Watchusett Community College.

Physician says Ali's reaction is uncharacteristic of Thyrolar

LAS VEGAS—Muhammad Ali, who claims an overdose of a thyroid medicine left him "physically unfit" for last week's heavyweight title bout with Larry Holmes, did not show characteristic signs associated with the drug, the fight's ringside physician said yesterday.

Ali said Tuesday that medication he took for a thyroid condition weakened him to the point that "I couldn't pick up my legs" while jogging three days before the fight.

Ringside physician Dr. Donald Romeo said Ali's reaction to an overdose of Thyrolar was not characteristic.

"An overdose of Thyrolar tends to make a person overly nervous, overly anxious and overly excited," Romeo said.

"In two examinations I conducted, Ali showed none of those signs. He was exactly the opposite."

Romeo said Thryalar is commonly used as a weight-loss aid and could result in the user feeling weak. Ali, who underwent a weight loss from 254 to 217 1/2 in three months, disclosed Tuesday that he was taking twice the prescribed dosage—a three-grain tablet—of Thryolar.

Romeo said a daily dosage of six grains "seemed high."

Third ranked Terriers at UMass today

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

The 4-5 UMass men's soccer team, coming off back to back wins over Vermont and New Hampshire, host Boston University today at Boyden field at 3:00 p.m.

The Terriers, who are ranked third in New England, come in to the game with a record of 8-2. The club's only two losses came against the University of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, last year's national champion and the University of Connecticut, which is presently ranked third in the country.

The BU booters are led by senior co-captain Paul Fisher and Dave Hill. Fisher, a quick forward, leads the team in scoring with six goals and one assist. Hill anchors the defense at stopper back. Senior midfielder Jack Feeney is the second leading scorer with one goal and four assists.

"We're an experienced team all-around, except for one area—goal" BU assistant Sports Information Director Ed McGrath said.

BU's starting goalie is Steve Maxwell, a junor who had never started a game prior to this season. Maxwell has shut out wins over Vermont and UNH to his credit.

The Terriers are coming off a three-win week and look awfully impressive.

The Minutemen however, are starting to look rather well themselves. The UMass squad has won two in a row and the attitude of the team has improved immensely. The last second "miracle win" in Vermont combined with the shut out victory over UNH Tuesday has changed a 2-5 club with little desire into a near .500 team with a high morale.

The Terriers are hot. The Minutemen are hot. It should be an interesting matchup.

Unknown Athlete

Ken Lasker

There are many people to look at and wonder about as you wander around campus on an ordinary day in Amherst. Everyone is so unique in such a multitude of ways and yet we all fit together so nicely in the overall picture of what is UMass.

And glancing around dormitory hallways and Campus Center corridors all of us instinctively cluster groups of individuals together and, more or less, classify them into categories within the cluttered confines that are, of course, our minds. One "group," classified Section 714 in annul 6,987 of my mind, is the kid on the hall with the swaggering walk and soft voice. He walks around obscurely on campus, happy with the skills he possesses and content with the time he has for himself and for others. He is quite a sportsman yet you won't read about him in the Collegian (please allow for this one exception!). He is, of course, The Unknown Athlete.

You can find him all over campus, from the Baker Bowl to Southwest, from the Bowl at Orchard Hill to the intramural fields at Boyden. Perhaps an introduction isn't necessary as it seems that you already know him. He is more than just a weekend athlete, he is a weekend superstar. The kid who, in a nice friendly game of whatever (you've played it, I'm sure), shines above and beyond the levels of all others. What an arm! Great hands! Unreal accuracy! Good control! Why, you ask yourself, doesn't this kid go out for the school team?

It seems that in any field of endeavor there are those who excel exhibiting apparently unlimited potential, and never quite going over the "hump" to make something substantial out of the...e skills. Yet athletically speaking, these men and women are really highly coordinated, agile sportsmen. Their games are not covered by newspapers (reasonably enough) and they are not applauded for their efforts.

However let us not overlook the Unknown Athlete. Most of us possess athletic skills of some sort which aren't honored for various reasons. Whether for outright lack of enough skills, possible retreatment from competitiveness or having too little will or time, there is a confinement of these skills to our own backyard.

So let's have a round of applause for the weekend athlete in all of us. (Pause.) Don't get discouraged thinking about all those high school trophies and jackets. The Unknown Athlete comes in as many forms as there are people on this campus. They may have had a few too many beers, but boy can they throw that football. He may seem lazy but watch out when he laces on his skates. Man, can that overweight kid slam a softball, you think to yourself. Look at that sweet girl glide under that frisbee! How can that freaky-looking kid shoot hoops so well?

The Unknown Athlete. Hidden from the limelight, walking in the background of the picture of our school caught in an instant. He will always be there and the mass of us will always be him. Here's to you. Roll on.

Julian, Mackertich win fourth in UMass victory over Albany

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Staff

The UMass mens tennis team whipped Albany State yesterday 6-3, in what Coach Steve Williams termed "the best match of the season." Coming into the match, which was the final home date for the Minutemen, Albany carried a perfect 5-0 record. This made them the third sucessive unbeaten team to face UMass within a week's period, as Westfield State (6-0), and Boston University (7-0), preceded the Great Danes on the windy courts of Boyden.

What was most impressive about yesterday's victory was not only the fact that UMass dominated this strong team from New York, but that for once, all six singles seeds played up to their capabilities and played to win. UMass took five of the six singles matches to nail down the win without having to worry about what might happen in the doubles competition.

The Minutemen fielded the same lin-up they used in Monday's loss to Boston University, but today they were hot. The first player in was Nick Julian in the#5 singles. He walked over his foe 6-1, 6-0. Next came Neil Mackertich hitting #1, his win taking two sets over Barry Levine, 6-2, 7-5. Sergio Strepman followed in tune with his 4-6, 6-0, 6-3 trouncing of Fred Gaber in the #2 spot. So with three matches finished, it was 3-0 UMass.

Matt Modlish kept the ball rolling in the Minutemen's favor by dropping his opponent in the #4 singled 3-6, 6-1, 6-4. But Rob Karen of Albany State temporarily brought his team back into the match by defeating Mark Huetteman at #3, 2-6, 6-1, 6-4.

With the score standing at 4-1 in UMass's favor, Paul Jaffe had a chance to ice it in the #6 singles match. He and his Great Dane adversary, Dave Lerner, had split the first two sets, but P.J. poured it on in the third to take the match for him and his team.

Up 5-1, the match was over and Umass raised their fall record to 4-2, with both losses coming to powerhouses from the East, B.U. and Rhode Island. But the season is not over for them.

This Saturday the Minutemen will travel to Worcester to oppose Clark University. It will be a chance to avenge last year's loss to Clark, one in which they were up 4-2 after singles play, but lost all three doubles to go down 5-4. After that UMass may have a tentative rain make-up with Vermont that will take place at the Boyden Courts, but it hasn't been finalized yet.

The UMass women's soccer team defeated UConn yesterday in Storrs 2-1. Maddie Mangini and Nancy Feldman scored for the Minutewomen within five minutes of each other in the second half. The UConn tie-breaker was called back by the refs. For further details see Jeff Billard's complete story in tomorrow's Collegian. (File photo by John Bunting)

Springfield bests UMass varsity; JVs beat Chiefs

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team could not generate enough offense to overcome a very strong Springfield College squad. For the umpteenth time in the seven years of this rivalry, the Chiefs dealt UMass a loss, this time a 15-11, 15-0, 15-11 sweep of the Minutewomen at NOPE gym last night. The loss drops UMass to 11-10.

Though coming through at times with spiking from the outside, UMass found most of its efforts dug out by the Springfield back court. Defensively, the Minutewomen were inconsistent, digging some out, but leaving a space most of the time where the Chiefs could overcome the blockers and deposit the ball.

UMass almost had the first game, as it rallied from a 3-7 deficit to come within one (10-11). However, mistakes at the net grodually gave Springfield the chance to win.

Game two saw UMass go almost totally flat, as the Chiefs took advantage of poor passing to take a commanding 2-0 lead.

The Minutewomen roared back in the deciding game, leading 11-9 before mistakes and the Chief attack overcame UMass for the final loss of the evening.

"I don't know what happened," said Coach Elaine Marasco, "we really wanted to beat Springfield, but we didn't have anything going. Our defense could have been much better. I don't know, we'll have to figure out what went wrong at practice tomorrow."

UMass will travel to Southern Connecticut State College for its Invitational on Friday and Saturday. The Minutewomen will play the University of New Haven, Connecticut College and

Royals snatch AL opener, 7-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Yankee-killer Larry Gura survived consecutive record-setting home runs in the second inning and Frank White, Willie Aikens and Willie Wilson delivered two-run hits yesterday, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 7-2 victory over New York in the opening game of the best-of-five American League Championship Series.

Gura, an ex-Yankee who has won his last seven regular-season decisions from his old club but was only 1-2 against them in playoff action, settled down after surrendering a double in each of the first three innings, as well as home runs by Rick Cerone and Lou Piniella with one out in the second inning. It was the first time consecutive home runs had been hit in AL playoff history.

The veteran left-hander notched his first victory since Aug. 25 by checking the Yankees on five singles after the third inning.

The Royals pounded New York's Ron Guidry for four runs on five hits and four walks in the first three innings. White tied the score with a two-run double in the second, Aikens put the Royals on top 4-2 with a two-run single in the third and George Brett, the major league batting champion, slammed a solo home run off reliever Ron Davis in the seventh. Wilson doubled home two unearned runs in the eighth off Tom Underwood.

The series resumes here Thursday night with New York's Rudy May, 15-5, opposing Kansas City's Dennis Leonard, 20-11. A third game will be played in New York on Friday night with the fourth and fifth games, if necessary, Saturday and Sunday in Yankee Stadium.

$3.5 million suit filed against UMass

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—A University of Massachusetts senior, who claims she was administratively discharged from the school for conduct centering on past emotional problems Thursday filed a $3.5 million suit against University officials.

Hampshire Superior Court Judge Samuel Adams issued a temporary restraining order calling for the University to immediately reinstate and provide dormitory space for the 20 year old woman who was referred to in the suit as Janis Student, a fictitious name used to avoid public embarassment.

Defendants named in the suit include: UMass Dean of Students William F. Field; Dr. David P. Kraft, UMass director of Mental Health at the University Health Services; acting Registrar Mary Ellen Hanley; and the school's Board of Trustees.

The suit charges that as a direct result of actions by the defendants the plaintiff suffered "severe emotional distress, pain and suffering, mental anguish and embarassment of such severity in nature that no responsible person could or should be expected to endure."

It also charges that as a result of the defendants' acts, the woman was "intentionally, unlawfully, in violation of the regulations and policies of the school, administratively withdrawn from the University without her consent," therefore denying her her civil rights.

The case was continued until Oct. 21.

The suit states that on Sept. 29 Kraft ordered the woman's withdrawal from the University and eviction from her dormitory after she was taken to the Health Services by her roommate.

Kraft told the plaintiff that unnamed people in the dormitory were disturbed by her behavior and that such complaints prompted him to order her withdrawal and eviction, the suit states.

"She was ordered out of her dormitory room on the same day that she was told she was withdrawn from the University, where she was a second semester senior only two and one-half months away from graduation" the suit states.

At the time the woman had an "ongoing psychotherapy relationship" with Dr. Michael Madowat of McLean Hospital in Belmont, the suit states. The woman had voluntarily commited herself to McLean from May 22, 1980 to Aug. 15, 1980 to "resolve emotional problems" the suit states.

The suit states that the next day, when the student and her family went to Dwight dormitory to remove her belongings, the head of residence told her Kraft was sending a police escort to take the plaintiff to the University Health Services. She was allegedly told by Kraft that she must return to her parents Paxton home or he would commit her to a state mental institution so she left.

The suit states that on Oct. 2, Field told the woman she could temporarily resume attendance at her classes during discussions about her status, and that a proposed agreement would be drawn up by the next day.

But when she returned with a legal assistant, the suit states, Field "shouted at the plaintiff and her representative" claiming he would not see them and ordered them from his office.

On Oct. 4 Field told the woman she would have to live with her parents and commute to the University, a distance of about 50 miles.

The suit said that the woman was not in fact administratively withdrawn until October 9, retroactive to Sept. 26, without a notice or a hearing.

The plaintiff is represented by Attorneys Charles DiMare and Mark Eckstein of the UMass Legal Services Office. The defendants are represented by University Counsel Sidney Myers.

The plaintiff is seeking in compensatory damages; $750,000 from each of the four defendants, another $100,000 each from Kraft and Field, and another $5,000 from Field.

She is also seeking punitive damages from Field and Kraft in the amount of $50,000 each and $5,000 in punitive damages from Hanley.

Senate election results in; PSA wins big

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Despite a last minute ballot sticker campaign 25 of the available 34 commuter Undergraduate Senate Seats were won by members of the Progressive Student Alliance.

Thirty-one senate candidates attempted to have their names added to the ballots by use of a paper sticker which they handed out on the two election days.

Results were held up for two days because of a protest filed by the SGA Attorney General on Wednesday.

Under Chapter 10, Section 5, of the SGA by-laws, the results of an election must be released within two hours of the final tabulation. Diane Mueller, Chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, which officiated the elections, said the final results were available late Wednesday night.

The delay in releasing the results, she said, was caused by a protest filed by SGA Attorney General Dana Collier to the Coordinating Committee. However, Student Speaker Linda Geary and Collier later determined that the protest was not valid.

According to the by-laws, a protest needs to be signed by at least one half of the number of signatures needed on nomination papers to be valid. In this case Geary said, the protest needed 12 plus one extra signature to make it legal. Collier's protest did not have enough signatures.

> "I thought it (the protest) was legal so I held the results," Mueller said.

Mueller said she had not been informed Wednesday night that the election results were to be released and said she went home. When she arrived on campus yesterday afternoon she said she was told that the results were valid and had to be released.

"I thought it (the protest) was legal so I held the results," Mueller said.

Originally it had been thought that the results had to be held until the next Wednesday's SGA meeting because a protest filed against elections has to be submitted the Monday prior to the meeting. In this case, Geary said, the protest was lodged on the same day as the meeting, therefore discussion on the elections was automatically put off to next Wednesday.

Approximately 2100 students voted in the election, with a majority of the vote coming from the Greek and commuter segment of the undergraduate population.

Geary pointed out that not all of the invalid ballots were sticker ballots and that some had more than the maximum amount of candidates checked off, also making them invalid.

For a listing of results see page 8.

Blindness: a lonely handicap

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: The following article is the last in the five-part series on what it is like to be handicapped while attending the University of Massachusetts.

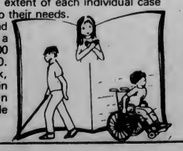
Susan Downer, totally blind since birth, is an English major at the University of Massachusetts working on her masters in fine arts.

Amy Hasbrouck, a sophomore majoring in journalistic studies, was given 10 percent normal vision after going through two operations to remove cataracts from her eyes when she was a young child.

Millions of people across the country suffer from some sort of sight disability. The extent of each individual case may vary greatly, and so do their needs.

Susan is totally blind, and Amy is legally blind. What a normal person sees at 200 feet, Amy can only see at 20.

Susan uses a cane to walk, relies on a tape recorder in classes, and has been reading and writing in Braille since she was 4 years old.



Amy walks without a cane, takes class notes herself, and says she feels Braille is too big and cumbersome to deal with.

Susan received a bachelor's degree from the University of California but has been working for the past two years at a high school as an aide for children with learning disabilities.

She is in the process of writing a historic novel about a Mexican Indian family, and she came to the University of Massachusetts because of the fine reputation it has for its writing programs, she said. She would like to get a strong background to help prepare herself for teaching college writing.

When Susan applied to UMass she didn't know about the support services offered for the handicapped until she and her husband Jay, a carpenter, arrived in Amherst this August and began to scout around for themselves.

Susan lives in Squire Village apartments and uses the campus bus system to get to school. Once at school she usually walks to her classes, but plans to use the van service the University offers when it gets cold, she said.

"When the weather gets chilly and it's windy or you have a hat on, you can't hear the clues you usually use to travel," said Susan.

When Susan goes to class she uses a special tape

Western Mass: Oil cost less

BOSTON — The lowest prices of home heating oil in Massachusetts are in the western part of the state where the average is $1.03 a gallon, according to the state energy office.

The average price of home heating oil in Massachusetts remained stable the past two weeks at $1.024. The highest prices are on Cape Cod, with an average of $1.046. The energy office reported yesterday that the price range among the 100 dealers surveyed, runs from 94.9 cents o gallon to $1.11.

"We will continue to monitor the spot market as it reacts to the Iran-Iraq conflict," Energy Secretary Joseph S. Fitzpatrick said. "So far, the market has remained relatively quiet, in large part because of the abundant supplies presently on hand."

City Hall issues dress code

BOSTON — A dress code banning dungarees and pant suits has been issued for employees in Boston City Hall, according to the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

A statement issued by the union yesterday complained that city officials were more concerned about attire than payless pay days facing workers because of o fiscal crunch.

The union said women employees "are none too happy" with the Administrative Services Department order and male workers "are equally nonplussed."

Iran and Iraq record the highest casualty rate to date

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — Iran claimed Iraq fired missiles into two Iranian cities yesterday, inflicting the highest casualty toll of any action in the war. Both sides were dispatching envoys in an effort to enlist support from other countries.

Iran, which claimed up to 180 killed and 300 wounded in Iraqi missile attacks, reported major gains in the central sector of the front and President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr told Tehran Radio "we are entering the final phase of the war." Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said victory was certain and Iran planned to replace the Iraqi regime with "an Islamic government" in Baghdad.

Iraq said its forces "continued to destroy enemy installations," but Baghdad did not confirm that it used Soviet-supplied ground-to-ground missiles for the first time in the conflict.

Baghdad Radio said Iraqi forces were "destroying vital military and economic installations" at Dezful and that the city in the central sector of the front "is at the mercy of our ground fire." Iran said Dezful was hit by missiles and also accused Iraq of bombing two hospitals in Ahwaz, 70 miles to the south.

In Washington, the State Department said the Soviet Union, and possibly other Warsaw Pact nations, was sending supplies to Iraq through the Jordanian port of Aqaba. Spokesman John Trattner said he did not know what types of supplies the Soviets were sending. Moscow has said it was remaining neutral in the war.

With the war in its 18th day, both sides stepped up diplomatic efforts. Iran said it planned to send a delegation to friendly countries to explain Iran's stand and that Iran also hoped to put its case before the U.N. Security Council.

President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, apparently seeking outside aid or new mediation efforts, sent envoys to six countries — Turkey, Greece, India, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Italy. Western diplomats in Ankara said they believed Hussein's envoy asked for Turkish mediation to end the conflict.

Boston School Committee member Elvira "Pixie" Palladino, left, reacts to reporters as she leaves a federal grand jury hearing yesterday in Boston, that is investigating an alleged attempt to exhort money from ARA services that operate Boston school buses. Homecoming activities get under way tonight

By MARCIA SCIABARRASI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Minutemen Marching Band, football coaches, football players, cheerleaders, and students will open the University's 1980 Homecoming weekend with a bonfire tonight at 7 p.m. at the Campus Pond.

On Saturday, October 11 at 11 a.m., the First Annual Minuteman Road Race will be held. The race is sponsored by the University Athletic Department in cooperation with the Department of Sports Studies and Louis Foods in Amherst. Registration is still being held for the seven mile race which begins at the north end of the Alumni Stadium loop.

Race numbers and information packets can be picked up on Saturday between 9:30 and 10:30 a.m. at the registration table located near the starting line.

The annual Homecoming Parade will begin near the Whitmore Administration Building. The parade traffic will turn left on to Massachusetts Avenue, up North Pleasant Street to downtown Amherst, then right on Amity Street, and right on University Drive. It will then proceed straight down to the stadium. The parade will be led by the UMass marching band.

State representative Silvio Conti (R) Springfield, will participate in the parade.

Other participants will include the "Oompa Band," soccer and football cheerleaders, seven floats, and clowns. The parade's logo is the Panhellenic Council and the Interfraternity council in support of Hampshire County United Way. The clowns marching in the parade will be pledges of the University's Greek community, and will collect money for the United Way said Leslie Chambers, director of Greek Affairs.

Floats have been designed by combined teams of Sororities and Fraternities using themes from T.V. commercials with puns aimed at the "Blue Hens" from Delaware University, said o Chi Omega member. There will be a team of four judges at the reviewing stand in front of the Amherst Post Office to judge the floats. Trophies will be awarded at the homecoming game's half-time. The categories include: "best overall," "most enthusiastic," and "most original."

At 1:30 p.m. the undefeated Minutemen will challenge Delawore University for leadership of Division 1-AA in the Northeast region.

Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in the first floor of the Compus Center, Alpha Phi Omega, a national fraternity, will hold Las Vegas night.

An admission charge of $2 will buy $2,000 in play money.

At 11 p.m. there will be on auction using the ploy money from the evening. Proceeds from the activity will go to charity, said Chambers.

Southwest Assembly discusses Halloween policy

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) formed an issue committee to deal with the University's Halloween policy in their meeting last night.

The committee will gather information on the Halloween policy, assess its effects on Wouthwest residents, and make recommendations to the University's administratin, Ruth Mazzola, SWA co-president, said. The assembly will also seek opinions from Southwest residents on the policy, Mazzolo said.

Although some assembly members expressed agreement with the University's policy that will close the Compus Center and Student Union buildings on Halloween weekend, all agreed the commitment was necessary.

In other business, John Orcutt, a Southwest resident, told the assembly he disapproved of the recent towing of motorcycles parked near Southwest dormitories by University police.

"What we want is just o place to park under the dorms," said Orcutt. He said the present motorcycle parking area in Southwest is unsafe.

Also passed was on allocation of $850 for the installation of computer terminals in the Hampden Student Center. Next week the assembly will vote on whether or not to charge a fee for use of the computer terminals, which will provide expanded computer operations. The SWA funds are being matched by the Hampden Board of Governors.

Canning own produce is cheaper

By GREG GILES
Collegian Correspondent

With today's high food prices more and more people are growing their own and need information on how to preserve garden produce.

The Hampshire Community Canning Center, located on Williams Street in Northampton, offers backyord farmers an opportunity to can their produce cheaply.

For about 15 cents per quart processing charge, 29 cents a jar (unless you bring your own), any amount of fruit or vegetables, and three hours of time, one can preserve anything from nectarines to tomatoes or a conglomeration of potatoe-onion-broccoli soup.

One need only make an appointment with the center to use its facilities. The center's staff will assist with the process. The center has compiled o list of local farms which sell bulk fruit and vegetables.

The Canning Center is an offshoot of Community Self-Reliance Inc., a non-profit organization devoted, since 1976, to creating a local food market. Under the present system, Massachusetts imports about 85 percent of its food, thereby creating the "middlemen" who keep prices high, a canning center representative said.

"It's a lot easier than canning at home where you can fit only three jars into a pot," said one customer who drove from Hartford, "basically just for the Canning Center."

Four pressure cookers, five atomospheric cookers (which boil bath water when used in homes, two twenty gallon kettles, a juicer-pulper and two rapid cooling tonks turn what would normally be a grueling day's work at home into a few short hours of learning a skill and having fun, not to mention saving money.

"Once you see how easy it is to do here compared to home, it's hard not to come back," says Danial Langer, one of five workers at the Center.

The one-room, self-help cannery runs on a grant from the federal government and local fund-roising events. Both cover only one third of the center's operating expenses. The center has a commitment to help people, particulary those of low and moderate incomes.

The Canning Center is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Thursday, and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday, Friday and Saturday.

recorder with four different speeds which let her record a lecture at a slow speed and later play it back at a faster one, thus cutting in half the time it takes to Braille the lecture notes from the tapes.

When she writes a paper, her first draft is in Braille, then she transfers it onto paper with an electric typewriter.

She also has students read to her from books and has since started a study group with them. When it comes to exams and finals, Susan is allowed to take an exam home to type it up, or have it administered verbally, she said.

"For a long time I didn't want to ask anyone for help in anything I did because I wanted to be equal, but I've fund that by asking a person for help one time, they make one more independent later on," Susan said.

"People should never be afraid to offer help or ask questions," said Amy, "It makes me feel good when I know people are kind enough to stop what they're doing to assist me."

Sight itself can be a problem

Although Amy may seem to be the lucky one in this case since she has some vision, her problems appear more difficult than Susan's because her predicament is not as well defined.

When Amy sees an object it has no definite boundaries or outline. To her, nothing ends distinctly because it has a haze surrounding the outer limits, she said.

If she trys to focus her eyes on something to get a better picture of it, the object won't stay still. It jumps, Amy said.

Pride near Death

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. [AP] — Country music star Charley Pride, spared from death in an airplane collision over Texas in August, would like to portray the late Nat King Cole in a movie.

"I could do it with a little practice," said Pride, who has little acting experience but whose mellow voice is comparable to that of the late Cole. "The possibility is there; it's on the burner," Pride said.

Meanwhile, he said he feels himself lucky to be alive and to be considered for such a role. He and his traveling band escaped death Aug. 6 when their aircraft and a small Cessna collided, killing two people in the smaller plane. Pride's plane, a Fairchild 27, landed 20 minutes later despite extensive tail and rudder damage.

"I'm glad I'm here," Pride said in a telephone interview from his home in Dallas, where he was taking a couple of days off from concert dates. "There could have been 19 casualties instead of two.

"We heard a 'whomp' while we were playing cards in the back. I said, 'What was that?' The captain come on and said we had a slight problem and to buckle up.

"We didn't get all the details until later so we were speculating what had happened. But we could tell the plane wasn't running normal as usual. The engines were fluctuating."

Thirty minutes after the plane landed, he found out two died in the other plane.

"My first thoughts on the ground were about the other people," recalled Pride, who picked cotton with his 10 brothers and sisters in Mississippi until he was 17. "I felt they probably came up on the shorter end."

Black man mutilated

BUFFALO, N.Y. [AP] — The mutiloted body of a black man whose heart had been cut out was found near the Niagara River on Thursday, police said.

He was the second black man slain in the same manner in two days and the sixth black man murdered in the area in less than a month.

Edward C. Cosgrove, Erie County district attorney, said the latest body was found near the Niagara River in Tonawanda.

The victim, thought to be in his 20s, had not been identified, Cosgrove said.

On Wednesday, the body of Parler W. Edwards, a 71-yearold cab driver, was found in Amherst.

Cosgrove said both victims had their hearts cut out.

The district attorney said it appeared the two latest slayings were not linked with the murders in late September of four black men by a gunman known only as the ".22-caliber killer." Witnesses to some of those shootings said the gunman was white.

During a meeting Tuesday to discuss the four gunshot slayings, black leaders appealed to police agencies to investigate what they claimed was an alleged conspiracy against blacks.

Commentary

In response to the October 8 sports article entitled "Nooijen, Popeo Win Big in Intramural Track Meet," I felt that it was necessary to write this commentary to clear things up.

Sugar and Spice, the women's intramural sports team, won the intramural track meet overall, and went virtually unnoticed in the Collegian article with a very small paragraph, which didn't make much sense anyway. It was humiliating and wrong to these athletes who ran these events and won because of self-discipline and anticipation. It wasn't for the campus points or the plaques that were received, but for their ability to compete and win.

I also feel that a great injustice has been made on all black athletes at UMass. There are never any articles on basketball players or football players and even the fact that UMass' women's basketball team has for the first time a black female. Is that the responsibilty for Black Affairs or Nummo News to cover?

I hope that in the future more people will pay attention, because the greatest athletes are black, and they don't go unrecognized.

Whoever wrote this unjustly article should apologize to Sugar and Spice for its unthoughtfulness and to start paying more attention to black athletes on campus. The Intramural Office also had something to do with the article and shouldn't favoritize their personnel for whom Nooijen works, but accept the athletes for their ability to perform.

These female athletes won the overall track meet on their ability to run and perform in other events, and this can't be taken away from them.

Should we just ignore the fact that the sports article was wrong, or is an apology acceptable?

Job Assistance Center

by Barbara Covington
Black Affairs Staff

"Placement, n. service, n. a. An employment assistance center for UMass students. b. to help direct to a desired position of employment. c. content: 1. A professional advising staff, knowledgeable of the employment market and able to assist in the preparation of resumes. 2. A computerized job referral system with frequent job interviews. 3. A place of helpful hints and hot coffee. 4. Located at Hampshire House, tel. 545-2224," states one of the many publicity posters for the University Placement Service at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Besides providing traditional services for university students, i.e., resume writing developing interview skills, conducting job searches, and recruiting persons for the job market, the Placement Service has taken on an additional endeavor. They have established a program aimed at Third World students consisting of a "series of workshops focusing on the job search process as it pertains to minority students," according to a Placement Service letter soon to be received by students.

With a full-time staff, consisting of Assistant Directors Dr. Alice Smith and Dr. Floyd Martin, and graduate student Paula Queenan, their function is to recruit minority students into these workshops and assist them in the job hunt process. This personalized approach is in keeping with the overall screening process of Placement with the unique feature of catering to Third World students. It is from the lack of use and absence of knowledge about Placement among the Third World community that this program has been initiated.

Yet these ignorances are not solely characteristics of minority students, for Placement is also without certain knowledge concerning the Third World population on campus.

"We have not been able to identify minority students in the past," said Dr. Arthur Hilson, Directar of Placement, "so I had the task of reorganizing and making us more visible."

Reorganization took place, primarily with the purchase of a new computerized referral system. This enables the recruiting company to acquire a list of available graduating seniors meeting qualifications for the positions being offered. (Rest assured, people. That ten dollar Placement Fee all students were required to pay is being put to good use. It's paying for the new computer system.)

The problems of visibility, as mentioned previously, is the purpose of the workshops. Also, in conjunction with the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) and the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), Placement has received the moral support necessary for implementing a new program. With these initial ties, it is Dr. Hilson's hope that "the program will reach all the Third World organization on campus."

"The key to getting what you want in this world is starting early," said Dr. Smith. "Seniors have a tendency to start searching the job market too late. Therefore, starting as a sophomore or junior will put a person in excellent shape by the time he or she is a senior."

Each workshop session is in two parts. First, the students attend an introductory seminar. In this workshop the importance of the "whole person," how to write an effective resume (what to include, what to exclude), and the recognition of transferable skills (skills one may have acquired at one job and how they may be assets to the job he or she is seeking) are stressed. It is here that the students are asked to prepare a "dummy" resume according to the guidelines expressed in the resume-writing packet each person receives.

The second part of the workshop is held a week after this introductory meeting as a follow-up. Here, the counselors meet with students on an individual basis to discuss their resumes and work to establish a refined product suitable for the working world. After the desired format is presented a handbook of resumes of Third World students will be compiled by Placement, free of charge, and will be available for recruiting companies upon request.

Workshops will be held in the Placement Resource Library, which is located on the first floor of Hampshire House. The schedule is as follows:

True friends are like tomorrow

To the Editor:

I think it's really great that Nancy Anderson and the Collegian are acknowledging the handicapped students on campus. It's important to the handicapped student to be recognized and considered a person like us all. The articles are not only interesting but also very imformative as to the needs and concerns of the physically handicapped.

In the beginning of the semester, I applied for a non-workstudy position through the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs. The position is "Personal Care Attendant." The office personnel were very warm and welcoming. I was very nervous attending my first interview for the job, but shortly overcame that when I got to know the student I work with.

Just like in any job interview, or when meeting someone for the first time, the atmosphere was a nervous one. My first few nights at work were uncomfortable but now it's different. I recognize that being physically handicapped doesn't detract from this person. We've become friends. My work isn't all work. We talk, we laugh, we enjoy each other's company.

Friendship is important to all of us. More of us should take the initiative in acquiring friends. A friend once told me, "True friends are few and far between. A true friend is like tomorrow: always there, always welcome."

Stop election bickering

To the Editor:

Upon reading the unsigned editorial entitled "Senate Scandal" (Collegian, 10/9) a feeling of utter dismay swept over me. I could not, and still cannot, fathom the shortsightedness of the Collegian editorial staff. It seems the Collegian has joined the ranks of those who have caused this past election to degenerate into a series of petty, political, power-plays.

Before mentioning the election itself, I should first like to comment on the callous abuse heaped upon a couple of people, one being Dianne Mueller. Due to her affiliation with the Progressive Student Alliance, she has been under constant attack—for doing her job. Any rulings, made by her, have been based upon existing election rules and are, as she herself has mentioned, also subject to appeal at any time. In addition, as if all of this weren't enough, the Collegian, in yesterday's editorial, accused Dianne of involving herself in the counting of the commuter ballots. What the Collegian failed to recognize was that Dianne was tabulating the votes for the Board of Governors race, and not the Senate race.

Another casualty of this election was Linda Geary. Despite her visible attempts to remain neutral, she has been repeatedly maligned by various SGA officials. This type of childishness is sickening, at the very least. Both of these women are owed a number of apologies.

As for the election itself, it seems to me that the people who are screaming for invalidation of the election (the Collegian included) have lost sight of what is really at stake. This Senate election has, in a mere matter of weeks, generated more student involvement in SGA than this campus has seen in years. Nearly 1000 students came out to get involved, to vote in the commuter race. What of all of these people?

Anyone who would see this election invalidated would see those students that stood up to be counted alienated. A new election, under such circumstances, would interest nobody. It would be a mockery, and an insult to those that voted in this election. It would be the death of student involvement at this university.

The above comments are particularly applicable to those who would seek this course, and at the same time seek or retain positions in our student government. The people that fall into this category should carefully consider just who it really is that they wish to represent—the student body, or themselves.

In closing, I would like to say that I am one of the commuters that ran for SGA Senate in support of the PSA platform. Because of this, I will invariably be accused, by some, of writing this letter with a heavy bias. It is precisely these people that I now wish to address. Isn't it about time we put a stop to this petty, destructive bickering? Let's just accept whatever results the election may yield and take great satisfaction in the involvement we've generated. Let's put down the knives, and start representing the people that count.

Jim Murphy

* * * Correction * * *

The policy editorial that ran in yesterday's Collegian (Senate Scandal) incorrectly implied that members of the Progressive Student Alliance equally contributed to the disorder that occured during the ballot counting in Dickinson Hall. Later reports indicate the disturbance was instigated primarily by the group using ballot stickers.

In addition, the editorial stated objections were made to Diane Mueller's involvement in counting the ballots, whereas the objections were actually directed to her having the authority to make rulings on ballot validity while being a Progressive Student Alliance candidate.

These points serve to clarify the circumstances of the election process on which the editorial staff based its judgement that the election should be invalidated.

Blind students making it alone but appreciate help

When Amy reads, she does it by recognizing the words as a whole, not the letters. She also has adapted to reading material out of context.

"If I see a word that I've never seen before in my life, I have a pretty good ability to guess what it means by the sentence it is used in," said Amy.

Amy doesn't like to use a cane, but when she has to go somewhere unfamiliar, she takes it with her to learn the terrain.

"I've become a creature of habit by walking the same paths," Amy said. "I've found that it's a good way to avoid problems and I know where I'm going just by memorizing the routes, not by sight.

"When I walk, I walk with downcast eyes so I can see the ground. I used to be very afraid of crowds, now I have no problems dealing with them. It's just unfamiliar places and stairs that blow me away," she said.

Amy chose to come to UMass because she was brought up in Amherst, and she was unsure of the problems she would face once she left for school.

When Amy filled out an application to attend UMass she did not indicate she was blind.

"I wanted to be accepted as me and not as a token," Amy said. "I am really pleased that I made it here on my own."

Like Susan, Amy received no special orientation when she came to school in the fall. However, she said she was lucky enough to have her guidance counselor from Amherst High School take her around and show her the campus.

coping with school

Amy is living on the "social concerns floor" in Central Residential area.

"Right now I am trying my best to make the students on my floor as aware of the needs of a handicapped person as possible," Amy said.

When Amy attends a class she sits in the front row and uses reading glasses and a monocular, a type of magnifier that looks like a small telescope, to see the blackboards, overheads, and movies.

Amy also tries very hard to make herself known to the professors by participating in class discussions so that if she ever has a problem they will remember her, she said.

Amy tries to get students from her classes to read the assignments aloud with her because it is too difficult for her to read them on her own.

"Reading is a highly motivational activity for me," she said. "I have to be about one inch from the copy and since leaning over hurts my back, I have to do a lot of it laying down. Unfortunately, so much of the reading is tedious that I fall asleep." One problem visually impaired students face at UMass is difficulty reading numbers and directions.

Amy said she has great difficulty finding different rooms on campus because their numbers are painted in a similar color to the door. The numbers blend instead of being distinct like black on white, she said.

She said the floor numbers on elevator buttons are also difficult because most of them on campus are black on silver and are difficult to read.

The destinations of PVTA buses are painted orange and white which is extremely hard for Amy to see, and stairs without metal borders around the top and bottom floor area make it difficult for her to know where they begin and end.

The lights in some of the major campus auditoriums are dim, forcing her to strain very hard to see and take notes, Amy said.

Mealtime can sometimes be upsetting for Amy.

Unless she happens to eat with someone or managed to pick up a Collegian that day to see what the menu is at the dining commons, she usually has to decide what to eat without knowing what the choices are.

The printing on the signs that say what each selection is, is either small or wirey. There is a dim light falling on the sign and one can't tell the context of the food, she said.

"There is an easy solution to this problem," Amy said. "If they would just put a menu at the bottom of the ramp then I could take my time to read it before going up and would be able to know what I was ordering."

For Amy, socializing is a real challenge.

"It would be very easy for me to drop out of sight, but I can't because I just get so damn lonely. I'd like to find people who appreciate me for what I am and that I feel comfortable around. Some people treat me very kindly, but they act like I'm 4 years old. Though they may be meaning well, I just don't like being treated like that."

Since coming to UMass, Amy has gotten involved in several activities such as the Handicapped Student Collective and writing for the Collegian.

"By doing these things, I've been a lot more willing to accept the fact that I'm blind. And because I've done that, people don't accept me as a person trying not to be blind, but they too are beginning to accept me as a blind person. And it's getting to be really fun just to be appreciated for me," Amy said.

Note: The final sequel to this series on handicapped deals with what is presently going on at the University in regards to making the campus totally accessible. This will appear in Tuesday's paper.

Silences familiar to all artists

Silences (Delta) $4.95
by Tillie Olsen

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Staff

There are silences artists welcome which allow a growth of understanding and a ripening of ideas. But there can also be worthless silences in an artist's life where nothing is generated but anxiety.

Tillie Olsen, O. Henry award-winning short story author, novelist and educator, has known worthless silences. She did not publish her first work until she was fifty years old.

In Silences, Olsen labels unproductive silences as "unnatural." She shows through her own experience and the journal entries and correspondences of various successful writers, how a society that deems art a luxury, places obstacles before the creative.

It is women, working-class artists and racial minorities Olsen convinces us, who suffer most from such obstacles. These groups have the least time and confidence to dedicate to art.

Olsen focuses primarily on women writers and the physical and psychological responsibilities, other than the demands of their craft, which have been traditionally placed on them.

Many of her conclusions, such as her belief women must break from conventional lives in order to create, are familiar to anyone who has studied the lives of female authors or feminist theory.

This does not make the book unsuccessful however, the vitality of Olsen's argument in favor of the arts and the dedication they require, freshens one's suspicions of the traditional female role, the constraints of class and the destructive powers of racism.

Silences is divided into five sections. The first two are transcripts of talks delivered nine years apart. One, on the silences in literature attributable to lack of education, time, confidence, skill and acceptance. The second deals with women writers in the twentieth century. Olsen counts only one to every eleven men publishing in our age. Most of these women are unmarried and are without children. Having children isn't wrong Olsen says, but taking complete charge of their care is.

The third section is the most interesting. It deals with the life of Rebecca Harding Davis, a nineteenth century woman who wrote the first American novel on industrial exploitation, Life in the Iron Mills. She also wrote the first book on the control of well-financed special interests on government and the first book defending the rights of the insane. Davis remained virtually unrecognized until the Feminist Press reprinted Life in the Iron Mills in 1972.

The last two sections are "deepenings and expansions" of the first two: "Silences II" and "Women Writers II." "Silences II" is comprised of a series of journal entries concerning creative lapses from such noteworthy artists as Herman Melville, Virginia Woolfe, William Blake and Thomas Hardy. Censorship, poverty, isolation, fear of failure and madness are recorded.

Mechanical pencil fans are all shook-up over the Pilot "Shaker" and NEO-X lead.

Just shake the "Shaker"– out comes a sliding protective sleeve then the lead! Want more lead? Shake it again! That's all it takes to advance the lead in this beautiful, $5.98 mechanical pencil. And it comes with the famous Pilot 2 year unconditional guarantee.

Then there's our extra strength NEO-X lead. We've proven it's the strongest lead in the world. Comes in four diameters and various degrees to fit all mechanical pencils. The "Shaker" mechanical Pencil and NEO-X lead Shake it or "click it". It'll come out great in the end.

"Women Writers II" is mostly repetitious. Olsen's writing is too filled with a sort of humanistic jargon which labels a part-time writer as a part-person and an effective teacher as a pathfinder. She also quotes numerous statistics in this section that point to the remarkable imbalance of male and female award and grant recipients.

Olsen's writing is unstructured at times and often disintegrates into stream of consciousness. Synonym follows synonym and the language slowly weaves a narrative.

In the preface to Silences, Olsen says she wrote the book to "re-dedicate and encourage" any artist who has put aside her or his craft due to discouragement or a move to a less rewarding yet more acceptable path.

It is doubtful Olsen's style will stir the slumbering artist in each of her readers or that it will re-energize anyone who has put her or his craft aside. But the artists Olsen quotes and her own experience prove silence is often a part of an artist's experience and is conquerable.

"Computer Simulation? It was my take off to a great future."

Becoming a Link Engineer has made a big difference in my career. I wanted a challenge. And the chance to design something exciting. Link gives me that chance and more.

Modern simulation technology was born at our company more than fifty years ago and ever since then, we've been the industry's leader in the design and manufacturing of aviation and aerospace training devices. Our trainers can realistically fly you from New York to L.A. and Houston to the moon without ever leaving their hangar.

We're looking for graduates with degrees in Engineering (EE, ME, IE) Computer Science, Physics and Business. See us on campus or contact A.C. Esworthy — Link Division of Singer, Binghamton, New York (607) 772-3561.

Zoo Disc at Williams

Zoo Disc will travel this weekend to Williamstown for the Purple Valley Classic.

The annual fall tournament, held at Williams College, has been modified this year, so as to include only the highest ranked ultimate teams in New England. Joining Zoo Disc in the northwest corner of the state will be neighbor and arch-rival Hampshire College, the defending Western New England Champs.

"We've beaten Hampshire decisively three out of four times this season, and we snuck by Bastan Aeradisc last weekend to even our season record with them, at 1-1. We haven't seen the Pranksters (Middlebury) yet this year, but all I know is that we've come into our own, and we're the teom to beat this time around," player/coach Peter Holschuh said.

Middlebury College will be there, last spring's runner-up to Hampshire. (Zoo Disc placed third, behind Hampshire and Middlebury.) Also attending will be Boston Aerodisc, the number one team in New England, and the number two ranked team in the Eastern US.

Booters outplay UConn in 2nd

By JEFF BILLARD
Collegian Staff

Maddie Mangini and Nancy Feldman scored within five minutes of each other in the second half to lift the UMass women's soccer team to a 2-1 victory at UConn Wednesday. The Minutewomen are now 3-2.

A scoreless first half made it three straight halves in which both teams have failed to score against the other. They played to a 0-0 tie in a tournament earlier this secsan at UConn.

But, UMass came out pressuring in the secand half and was rewarded at 4:29 when Mangini connected on a direct kick from 20 yards out. The kick was the result of a UConn pushing infraction on a breakaway by Nancy Feldman.

"The only way for them (UConn) to stop Nancy, was to push her. She would have scored," coach Kalekeni Banda said.

However, Feldman would not be denied again. Following a collision with the UConn goalie, she scored the game winner while lying on the ground.

Following Feldman's great effort Banda said, "She had a few chances to scare today, she is playing very well."

UConn came back at 20:19 when Felice Duffy scored aff a rebaund from an indirect kick.

The win over UConn will give the team a much needed lift going into this Saturday's game with Cortland State. Cortland was co-champian of the EAIAW (Eastern Association af Intercallegiate Athletics for Women) last seasan with Harvard.

"This game shauld be decided by one goal either way," Banda said. "Hapefully ours."

Terriers sour UM bid for third straight, 1-0

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Casey Tonery's first half goal lifted Boston University to a 1-0 victory over an inspired UMass men's soccer team Thursday at Boyden Field.

The win lifted the third-ranked Terriers to a 9-2 record and snapped the Minutemen's winning streak at two.

The Minutemen, who were outshot 8-7, fought an even battle with BU and had their share of the scoring opportunities.

The best UMass scoring chance in the first half came when Marc Elliot blasted a shot from close range which Terrier goalie Steve Maxwell deflected wide of the post.

The Minutemen, 4-6, peppered Maxwell late in the game, as they collected four quick corner kick opportunities. Tony G. Dias banged a quick header which Maxwell steered wide; Tony M. Dias crossed a hard, low drive that Maxwell handled and Tony G. blasted one just over the crossbar. In addition, Kevin Flynn had a last second desperation shot blocked.

"We played a good club," UMass Coach Russ Kidd said. "We certainly had our chances to score, but . . ."

Assistant Coach Bernie Mullin expressed similar thoughts.

"We played really, really well. We just didn't get the breaks," he said.

Olsher again had a strong game in goal for the Minutemen as he made five saves. He had no chance on Tonery's blast. Maxwell earned his third shut out win of the season for BU.

The game was a closely battled contest, with much of the action occuring at midfield. Backs Dave Harrington, Dave Shilo, Scott Cooper and Chris New turned in strong performances for the Minutemen, as did midfielders Doug White and Kevin Flynn.

The UMass squad now has a few days off to regain some of that magic that reigned over the club this past week at Vermont and at home against UNH. The Minutemen travel to Providence next Wednesday to go against the Friars.

JV's edge by BU, 3-2

By SUE BRIDGMAN
Collegian Staff

The J.V. booters ran their record to 3-0 with a 3-2 win over previously undefeated Boston University in their home opener yesterday at Boyden.

UMass, taking advantage of the win, scored two goals in the first period.

Herbie Sidman took a pass from Mike Mahoney and put the ball by the BU goalie, early in the game to put UMass up 1-0.

UMass, although somewhat slow at times, had good control for most of the period. The Minutemen had numerous shots (eight corner kicks) and some good scoring opportunities, but some BU breaks and pretty good goaltending kept the score down.

UMass added another goal when Eric Zuckerman scored on a penalty kick with 20 minutes left to play.

UMass quickly added another goal in the second period at the 43 minute mark. Zuckerman took a corner kick, which Steve Berlin picked up nicely and snuck by the BU goalie.

BU got back into the game near the 10 minute mark when Tom Finan scored for the Terriers.

BU added another one with six minutes left in the game when Brian Ganly tallied one for the Terriers.

Coach Joel Mascolo felt this was a good win for the Minutemen and despite the late comeback by BU, felt his team kept its composure pretty well.

Weekend Homecoming Activities

UMass will kick off its Homecoming Weekend with a bonfire at 7:00 p.m. by the Campus Pond.

On Saturday morning beginning at 11 a.m., Homecoming traditions continue with the first running of the Minutemen Road Race, which will wind through downtown Amherst and end at the playing fields outside Alumni Stadium. The Homecoming Parade will follow the race.

Homecoming Weekend will end Monday night with a gymnastics meet between the UMass men's team and a touring squad from West Germany. It will begin at 7:00 p.m. at Boyden gym.

Minutewomen blast Yale

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

Starting off slowly in the first half of their game agaisnts Yale Wednesday, it took Patti Bossio and Sue Caples to spark the attack and lead the stickers to yet another shut-out game, winning over the Bulldogs, 3-0.

UMass had a hard time picking up the ball in the first half and the women found Yale outpositioning them on the field. Yale consistently beat UMass to the ball with the stickers hanging back and not following their leads on the field.

What the women needed was a goal and that's exactly what Judy Strong gave them for the boost, with 15:50 left in the first half.

The goal was scored off the first corner shot for the stickers. Tish Stevens took it out of bounds and drove it to the top of the circle where Chris Caughlin was waiting to stop the ball for Strong. When Strong's stick connected with the ball she drove it mercilessly past the goalie for the first tally of the game.

After that it was all UMass. "Something happened to us and I don't know what it was, but it was great," said coach Pam Hixon.

Hixon was also very much pleased with the movement of the front line. She felt they moved very well, flowing up and down the field. She also felt that the defense played a consistently good game, marking their opponents well and bringing on good attacks.

With a feeling of confidence in the air, UMass entered the second half strongly with many attempts on the Yale goal and coming up with 4 corner shots in the first 7 minutes of play.

On one of their many attacks on their ooponents goal, the UMass women worked the ball down past the Yale defense passing to Strong who connected to bring the score to 2-0, UMass, with 13:20 left in the second half. This piece of stickwork of Strong's was brilliant; with a flourish of her stick, she snuck the ball past the goalie in the corner of the net.

Strong went on to finish up the game with a hattrick, getting the third goal of the game with a mere 2:55 posted on the scoreboard.

UM hosts Hens for Homecoming

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The third ranked Minutemen will be facing their toughest competition of the season so far as they host 3-1 Delaware tomorrow for Homecoming Weekend. The Delaware football squad was moved up to division I-AA this year after going 13-1 last year and being ranked National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) champs and East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) team of the year all in division II.

Alumni Stadium could be the setting for a battle of defenses as both teams have particularly strong defensive squads.

"I'd be surprised if it was a high scoring game," UMass head coach Bob Pickett said. "We have an excellent defense and so do they."

The tenth-ranked Delaware Blue Hens have two sophomores, Bill Maley and George Schmitt, in the secondary with three interceptions each. Big defensive tackle Ed Braceland (6'0", 225 pounds), is a strong man on the line. Linebackers K.C. Keeler and Steve Panick are both three-year starters.

They'll be going up against a UMass offensive squad that has racked up 89 points to its opponents' 20. Quarterback Tim Fontaine has completed 21 of 32 passes for 298 yards and four touchdowns.

The UMass defense has held three teams to 20 total points and has chalked up two safeties.

They will be looking to shut down Delaware's best running quarterback in 10 years, Rick Scully. Scully ran 73 yards against Temple, the most yardage for a Delaware quarterback again, in 10 years. Scully's passing game leaves little to be desired also. He has thrown for 344 yards and seven TD's.

Delaware's Hugh Doherty has 299 yards rushing, a 4.2 yard average and he ran 122 yards in last Saturday's 27-20 loss to Lehigh.

The Blue Hens defeated West Chester and Temple by identical scores of 28-7 and Morgan State 40-7 before losing to Lehigh.

UMasss has never defeated the Delaware football squad; the last meeting was in 1969 when both teams were division II.

COLLEGE NOTEBOOK:

Let's get one thing straight: do not write off Boston University on the basis of their 53-6 shellacking at the hands of Temple. Remember, Temple was ranked 10th last year and brought back a majority of their starters this year. On four of Temple's first six scores last week, BU turned over the ball inside their own 30 yard line. As BU coach Rick Taylor put it: "We stunk the place out." All in all, BU is still a legitimate threat . . . speaking of BU, while they've played just one Southern Conference team in their 73 seasons of intercollegiate football, they face two this year—Davidson, tomorrow, and VMI in a few weeks . . . The UMass coaching staff is especially pleased with the play of tri-captain Fred Read. The senior center has blown out nose guards for three successive weeks . . . UMass tailback Garry Pearson is averaging 111.3 yards per game rushing to go along with five touchdowns . . .

Up in beautiful downtown Orono, the University of Maine will try to win their homecoming game for the first time in six years when they take on Lafeyette. Sophomore tailback Lorenzo Bouier has 605 yards in four games averaging 151 yards, still among the nation's best. UMass travels to Maine next week to play the Black Bears . . .

UConn continues to impress. They got by a tough Colgate squad last week, 24-21. QB Ken Sweitzer was named Yankee Conference All-Star of the week for his play in that game . . . Delaware battled to a 17-17 tie with Colgate a couple of weeks ago . . . Scott Brunner, who was the Delaware quarterback last year, is now back-up for the New York Giants . . . Dorchester's Herb Newland will be doing the place-kicking for the Minutemen tomorrow . . .

The bookies have UMass by seven on the card this week.

UMass library repair to be completed in '82

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Correspondent

The summer of 1982 is the target date set for completion of all work to be done on the University of Massachusetts 22-floor, problem-plagued library, according to a written statement from Chancellor Henry Koffler. At that time, the library will again resume full service to the University.

In a report submitted to the University by Simpson, Gumertz, and Heger, an engineering consulting firm from Cambridge, the firm outlined what had to be done on the tower library.

Problems with the brick veneer on the structure, which forced University officials to close the library last year, will be repaired by the fall of 1981. The awarding of contracts for this repair work will be made to an engineering firm by this winter, said Koffler.

Internal alterations for the library, which include the installation of a sixth elevator, the "reprogramming" of all existing elevators, and the regrouping of all "high-volume" activities on the main floor and lower levels of the library, will be completed by the spring of 1982 Koffler said.

Although the University was appropriated $2.5 million this past summer for the work by the State Legislature, some uncertainties still remain about the actual costs for the repairs to the masonry veneer on the library, Koffler said.

Koffler, who appointed a special Library Task Force last year to look into the problems of the tower, said although, presently, there is no danger of "imminent" collapse of the library, "the supports for the masonry veneer provide a lower margin of safety than is normal and corrective work is required to increase that margin to acceptable levels." The "reinforced" concrete plaza surrounding the outside of the tower, however, would sustain the impact, in the event any panels

Election protest is filed with SGA

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

A candidate for one of the hotly contested 34 commuter seats in last week's Undergraduate Student Senate elections has filed a formal protest against the election to Senate Speaker Linda Geary.

James Floyd, a junior majoring in Journalism, filed the protest on Friday because of a typographical error on the senate ballot. Floyd, who stated on his nomination paper that he wanted his name to appear as Jim "Bo" Floyd on the ballot, discovered on the first day of the elections that his name was listed as Jim "Bo" Clark.

Geary said that Diane Muellar, Chair of Governmental Affairs, who typed the election ballot, apparently typed the name of Todd Clark, who's name appeared above Floyd's.

When Floyd went to the Senate office on Friday to submit his protest, he said he was approached by Geary who asked that he withdraw his protest. Floyd said that Geary offered him the option, if he withdrew the protest, of a co-senate seat.

Geary, who had been aware of the misprint, had discussed the possibility of having Floyd share a seat with other members who had won seats.

"I made it clear to him (Floyd) that he would have to realize that there was a lot involved with a new election, and that new elections would put the seating of new senators into November," Geary said.

Geary said that she and others felt very bad for Floyd because he had a legitimate gripe with the elections.

Popular appeal of soap operas: multi-dimensional

By KATIE VON FLUE
Collegian Correspondent

Will the "hit man" finally get to Laura and Luke?
Will Rick and Leslie get back together?
Who or whot is "the left-honded boy?"
These are some of the questions pondered by the 45 million Americans who tune-in to television soop operas.
Of the 45 million, 15 percent are male and female college students, statistics indicate.
At the University of Massachusetts we have our share. They represent a large constituency and may be seen gracing television lounges from Southwest to the basement of the Compus Center.
One local expert on the subject of the Soap Opera in America is Dr. Morlene Fine of the Communication Studies department.
Fine spent two years researching soap operas and recently described the serials as "Americon morality ploys." Students, however, don't see their viewing of the shows as anything more than an escape from their studies.
"After a hectic, insecure day of classes and work, I return to my dorm and watch General Hospital," explained one freshman Communications Studies major. "It is the one thing in my life that never really changes."
Fine explained the phenomenon differently.
"Characters are always good or evil, their motives are always explicit and their behoviors easily judged," she said. "The real world possesses o confusing array of values and asks us to choose. Soap operas ask no questions and pose no answers. They exist in a world in which neither are necessary."
A student who said he (she?) watches on average of 10 hours of soop operos weekly confirms Fines' speculation:
"When I watch the program, I momentarily forget about my own problems and all the decisions I have to make."
While some serials have remained conservative others are updating their story lines to include relevant social issues such os rape, abortion, psychotherapy, breast cancer, and child obuse.
Many viewers continue to watch because they say these enormous issues make their own problems seem small and unimportant. For others these issues ore very close to home.
One student expresed her own inobility to cope with o rape. "I felt os if I was the only person in the world dealing with this problem until I saw a similar case an General Hospital," she said.
It is an example of students who will identify with o soap character, discovering that others share their problems.
Underneath these massive and dramatic issues, students continue to cram for exams, have lover's quarrels, and socialize with their friends.
"I have found this type of everyday existence enables to use the soaps as meons of interpersanal advice," said Fine. may provide the faundation for the kind of trust and caring necessary to talk about the self."
This conversational quality seems to play an important factar in viewer appeal. "Its a great conversation piece," says a One Life to Live fan. "I can go to a party and have something to discuss with ten strongers."
From a psychologicol view, having o common bond As one student recalls, "I feel more confident dealing with my own problems ofter watching similor situations on the soaps. A lot of times my friends will discuss why Jenny is sa sympothetic to Brod or why Tina left home."
"It is far easier and safer to discuss the problems in o soop opero marriage thon it is to talk about our own relationships with others," Fine soys. "But talk about these characters towards making friends is important. Screams of "I don't believe it, you watch Ryon's Hope too!" are discaveries of an instant friend.
Soap operas are entertaining. Many students feel they are funny and soliricol. "After a hard day, I switch on the soaps to relax. Sometimes, the actians are so dramatic, my friends and I just sit back and laugh," recalls a port-time fan.
A large majarity of students say they don't know why they watch soaps. "I always thought they were boring until I sat through an entire episode with my girlfriend. That was three years aga. I've been watching ever since," recalls one student.
It seems mast people ore easily preaccupied with the soap opero pilots ond charoters. Criticism of soop operos is often directed towords this habit of consistent viewing. Controversies exist over whether continuolly viewing is detrimental or addicting.
Accprding to Dan Anderson, leading television reseorcher and psychology professor at UMass, constant viewing can be considered beneficiol in an educational monner. On the other hond, it is often seen as the symptoms of o disturbonce in a person's life.

Iranian defense blunts Iraqi attack on Abadan in fourth week of war

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associoted Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Ironion helicopter gunships and stubborn ground resistance oppeared yesterday to have blunted an Iraqi infontry, artillery and tank drive toword Abodan, Iran's major oil port.

Ironion President Abolhossan Boni-Sadr soid Iraqi invaders across the strotegic Karun Riv er east of Abadan had been "routed" and he threotened a counter-invasion of Iraq to overthrow President Saddom Hussein's regime in Boghdod.

Iron's president olso said his country had "absolutely no intention" to interfere with peoceful shipping in the disputed Shatt ol-Arab woterway used by Iraq and Iron for exporting most of their oil. He said Iran wos prepared to pro vide safe possage to foreign ships flying the United Nations flog.

The wor between the Persian Gulf oil nations entered its fourth week with reports of drastic fuel shortages.

A rift between conservative and leftist Arab nations over the Iraq-Iran conflict also touched off speculation that an Arob summit conference scheduled Nov. 25-26 in Ammam, Jordan would be postponed.

A communique from the Iraqi commond broodcast by Boghdod Rodio claimed 38 Ironian soldiers were killed, two helicopter gunships shot down ond nine tanks destroyed in 12 hours of the battle for Abadon. It listed three Iraqi soldiers killed and 14 wounded.

Anderson , Carter bite the big apple while Reagan mows the home turf

BY DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Politicol Writer

President Corter and John B. Anderson vied in New York City yesterday to demonstrate their commitment to Isroel and then both presidentiol condidates marched in the Columbus Doy porade up Fifth Avenue.

Republican Ronold Reogan, campoigning in his Californio home bose, said federol regulations cause widespreod dis criminotion against women.

A new Associoted Press-NBC News poll showed Reogan holding his leod over Carter as more ond more Americans decide how they plan to vote Nov. 4. But the survey olso showed widespreod voter dissotisfoction with both Reogon ond Corter.

Bosed on telephone interviews Oct. 8-10 with 1,548 likely voters, the survey showed 43 percent favored Reagan, 35 percent fovored Carter ond 10 percent favored Anderson. Two weeks eorlier, o similor poll had Reogon leading Carter by nine percentoge points, with Anderson the fovorite of 13 percent of voters. In the new sur vey, 68 percent of respondents said they hod mode up their minds, compared to 61 percent two weeks ogo.

Confronted with hecklers chonting "ERA now," Reogon told on audience at Claremont College in Claremont, Colif., "I don't believe that simple-sounding amendment is the onswer to securing equal rights."

Reogon also said "I have been told thot in those regulations at the federal level, there are literally hundreds of instances of discrimination against women. I would eliminote those os quickly as I could."

In the story headlined, "$3.5 million suit filed against University," which appeared on page one of last Friday's Collegian (Sept. 10), the amount being sought in the suit is $1.2 million, not $3.5 million. In the same story, the woman involved was accompanied by her roommate to the University Health Services at the woman's request. She was not taken to the health services by her roommate.

Jim Collins seeks re-election calls for higher ed funding

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Staff

State Representotive Jomes Collins, D-Amh, will be seeking his fifth term in o few weeks ogoinst Republicon chollenger Deanno Flynn of Granby.

"My goal for the next term is to continue to leod the fight for a strong future for Higher Education," Collins said. He soid thot he opposed Proposition 2 1/2, because of the "enormous drain" it would ploce on public revenues.

"This district would be the most seriously offected of any other in the Commonwealth," said Collins, "since we receive the largest shore of Higher Education funding." Collins, o 1968 UMass groduote, added that $100 million from the state comes into the Amherst economy every year. With this form of tax reform the future of UMass and the district would suffer, he said.

Collins has invited his opponent to debate but he said she "couldn't seriously consider" debate until the League of Women Voters and she had agreed on the rules and arrongements. Collins soid she olso cited o full campaign schedule which prevents debate right naw.

Collins soid thot we should help the poor, work on a progressive tox system, and that health and higher educotion programs "shouldn't be destroyed." He choracterized the Republicon approach as one based on "fear and mistrust."

The major legislotive issue Collins wants to tight against is the new reorganization of the Massachusetts Higher Education system.

State Representative James G. Collins. (Staff photo by Nancy Nutile)

Collins soid he fovors legalized abortion and would work hord to bolster civil liberties; he opposes capitol punishment.

"This yeor I'm working on legislation to clearly define sexual horassment in the work place. Privacy rights and liberties ore things I want to preserve in our computerized oge," Collins said.

On the issue of energy, Collins soid he wanted to promote conservation and alternative sources of energy.

"I think that people considering forms of energy should find out if solor or wind could be cast effective; if so, they should use it."

On the local level, Collins wants to work on developing o statewide water policy.

"Locally, we must insure that we have emergency water tie-in capability with local towns. A second goal is to create an expanded conservation effort here at UMass. Third, we need a statewide water monogement policy," he said.

"Since Dukakis (former Massochusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis) left the water policy work has been left in limbo," Collins soid. "Becouse there is no water policy, shortoges like the one ot UMoss this yeor ore more likely, diversian proposols get more credence, and people ovoid the issue."

Group meets to plan effort to appoint rep to regents

By GAYLE YOUNG
Special to the Collegian

Students from stote colleges and universities will concentrote their efforts to get a student representotive on the Board of Regents, it was decided over the weekend at a conference in Springfield of the Commonwealth Association of United Students for Educotion (CAUSE).

"We decided re-organizotion (of state higher educotion) is where oll our energy should be channeled," said UMoss-Amherst Senior Ronald Keefe, who was elected president of CAUSE by acclamation Saturday.

Keefe said representotives from 17 of the 28 stote institutions of higher education ottended the three-day conference which was held ot the Springfield Technicol Community College.

The representotives ogreed to hove one or two students from every school present ot o Board of Regents meeting in Boston today where Regents ore expected to vote on whether they will recommend to Governor King thot a student be included as a voting member on the board.

Keefe said if the board decides ogoinst o student Regent he will introduce a bill in the state house that will make student representotion mandatory.

"It would seem obvious thot students should be included in an educotionol process such as the Regents but the reality of Massochusetts politics dictotes that if the governar and politicol leoders do not favor something, for whatever reasan, it will be difficult to get through," he soid.

CAUSE is o three-year-old student lobbying group formerly called The Massachusetts Stote Student Assaciation. The group has lobbied in the post for tuition cuts ond financial aid increoses.

Keefe soid the group is re-writing its constitution ond tasking for a $25 donotion from oll porticipating state schools to help coordinote lobbying effarts.

"In a woy it (student representation) is a test to see if we con rally together for on important issue, one thot is crucial to address ot this time," said Keefe.

Handicap accessibility is off schedule, progress hindered by $, UMass size

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the sixth and final article in a series concerning handicapped students at the University of Massachusetts.

In 1977 Congress passed section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 which states: any institution receiving federal aid must be made accessible to handicapped people.

Universities were given six months to develop a transition plan specifying the necessary renovations that would have to be made and were then given three years to institute their plans.

According to these specifications, the University of Massachusetts should have been made totally accessible in June 1980, but it was not.

Paul Appleby, coordinator of Handicapped Student Affairs, said that even though this campus began barrier reduction projects several years before such work was mandated, the amount of work required for a campus this large could not possibly be completed by the 1980 deadline.

UMass' transition plan estimates renovations will cost $12.5 million. This includes $2.5 million for residence halls and family housing, $1.5 million for academic buildings, and $8 million for common modifications such as sidewalks, exterior ramping, and curb cuts.

However, Appleby said this number does not only include mandated adjustments, but several recommendations that the University would like to see completed also.

Appleby estimates the final cost for all mandated renovations to be about $5 million, and he said it is doubtful we will see any other modifications beyond that amount in the foreseeable future.

Appleby also said because federal legislators passed the bill but didn't provide any federal funding, UMass is relying strictly on state and University funds to make the campus acessible.

UMass continues to apply to the state for grants each year to do further barrier reductions. They have been successful in getting between $100,000 to $200,000 a year, he said.

Unfortunately, this money can only be used to modify state-owned academic and administrative buildings. Any other buildings on campus have to provide their own finances to do modifications.

The University has completed several accessibility projects during the past several years and almost all the major academic buildings are accessible at least to a minimal degree. Otherwise the locations of classes have been changed to accomodate disabled students.

UMass has completed approximately two-thirds of their transition plan, and further barrier reductions will depend on what additional funding they can get from the state.

Jeff Beck's haunting guitar crams the Cage with lauding fans

Jeff Beck and The Michael Stanley Band
Curry Hicks Cage
Oct. 9

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Beck's been there and back, and he was here Thursday night. Brandishing a fierce white Stratocaster, Beck and his band appeared on stage at 11:15, after a tense two-hour delay due to power problems. The group proceeded to present an instrumental showcase that will probably increase guitar sales throughout the valley.

The crowd of 4,000 (who with a few exception, you and me, were about as obnoxious as UMass could produce) lauded the highspirited guitarist to the tune of two encores. The second of which gave us a rare vocal performance by "El Becko" on "I'm Going Down." With the exception of this tune, however, the show comprised basically an overview of his last three albums—Blow By Blow, Wired, and There and Back.

The two-hour wait was worth it when Jeff Beck took the stage. (Staff photo by Nancy Nutile)

In an era when guitar solos seem redundant, it is refreshing to hear an old master ploy with such taste and enthusiasm. Beck rarely resorts to lightning-fast picking for the sake of speed alone (though he can if he wants to, as on "Scotterbrain"); instead, his solos are in some respects very traditional, staying close to the melody. A tune such as "El Becko," for instance, is structured around a bouncy melody played with a slide, and changed little from chorus to chorus. Beck's vigor and control make it a great tune though, and as the second tune of the evening, the show was off to a rollicking start.

Jeff switched to a modified Telecaster for the ballad "'Couse We've Ended As Lovers," and this number gave bass played Mo Foster room for a solo. With the two other band members: Tony Hymas on keyboords, and Simon Phillips on drums, this group comprises the same one that plays on Beck's latest album—with the exception of course, of Jan (yawn) Hammer.

The Opening Act was the Michael Stanley Band, who were led by a sort of skinny Bob Seger, and played well rehearsed but forgettable pop-rock tunes. Nonetheless, they didn't deserve the impoliteness suffered upon them by the many college children in the audience. Encouraged by the general seating policy of the show, people did such immature things as try to move whole rows of seats forword into the section reserved for wheelchairs, and stond on their seats for the entire Beck set, blocking many people's view of the low Cage stage. I'm sure there are some folks who like general seating shows, but I for one, don't like to play musicol chairs with 4,000 other people when I go to see o concert.

Letters

UMass is for educating as well as partying

To the Editor:

At this time, when the University of Massachusetts is suffering from lack of public respect and self-esteem, it was extremely discouraging to read John Dunphey's letter to the editor, "The Horror of Being Dull."

Mr. Dunphey's disrespect for the University and the educational system as a whole is quite evident. Mr. Dunphey is saddened by the painting of the library stair wells with a pasty yellow paint because he found the graffiti inspiring. Mr. Dunphey, since when are racial slurs, lewd sketches, and foul language inspiring? Why do you lament the closing of the Campus Center on Halloween? National News coverage of the vandalism and personal injury in last year's fiasco did little to improve the University's waning reputation. This is a high price to pay for a little "fun."

Mr. Dunphey has stated, "I'm finding it increasingly difficult to wear my 'party school of the year' shirt in good conscience." Some of us are here for an education. Those who are not belong elsewhere.

Hooker Chemical Corp. pollutes UMass grads

To the Editor:

This letter protests the presence of Hooker Chemical Company [owned by Occidental Petroleum Corporation on our campus. Hooker will be at UMass October 15 and 16 to recruit graduates to work for them.

Hooker Chemical is responsible for the tragedy and "chamber of horrors" [according to federal investigators] of Love Canal and three other toxic waste dumps in Niagara Falls, NY. Hooker dumped 82 toxic chemicals — including 10 known carcinogens — into the water, air, and soil of the area for forty years. Since then 710 families have been evacuated from the area and the Justice department has sued Hooker for $124 million dollars, because of "an imminent and substantial endangerment to health and the environment." But money can never pay for the damages to the innocent victims of Hookers negligence.

Toxic chemicals have migrated into the Niagara Falls municipal water treatment plant and the basements of 1,200 houses and schools built near the site. In December, 1978, the NY state health department asked for small children and pregnant women to be evacuated from the 25 square block area of Love Canal. Chemicals buried beneath the community had been found percolating up into yards and homes of residents. The Love Canal Homeowners Association "pregnancy outcome" survey for the year ending December, 1979, uncovered that only 2 out of 12 births to women who lived at Love Canal throughout pregnancy were normal. The rest resulted in miscarriages, stillbirths or deformities.

But Hooker was not surprised by the high incidence of cancer, birth defects, and respiratory and neurological problems at Love Canal. According to Hooker Co. documents, Hooker realized that its dumps could endanger public health long before the problems started. For the last 20 years, documents show, Hooker had uncovered many problems at Love Canal and did nothing. Hooker made no attempt to inform area residents or publicize the problem.

We appeal to University students to refuse to work for Hooker Chemical and to protest its presence on our campus.

He just doesn't get it

Bob Conte

"Sit down, son. You want a beer? Have a beer. You're old enough to drink with your old man now."

"I don't know, dad. I'm only 22."

"HONEY, GET US A COUPLE OF COLD ONES, WILL YOU? Hell of a woman, your mother. It's been a long time since we've talked, son. Everything going alright?"

"I guess so."

"Senior year's pretty rough."

"Same old crap really. I'm just tired of everybody telling me how sorry they feel for me, B.A.'s not being worth the paper they're printed on and all that."

"Sad but true, son. I bet you regret not sticking with engineering."

"No way! That was the worst semester of my life. It just didn't work out, dad. My calculator was always slipping off my belt."

I'm sure you would have gotten the hang of it after a while."

"I doubt it. I never paid attention in class. I just stared at the wall and tried to make up engineering jokes. What do you get when you cross an acentric factor with a volumetric property?"

"I don't know."

"I don't know either. That's the point. There's never any punch lines in engineering."

"No, just jobs that start you at twenty grand. But then you can probably make a fortune selling terrific jokes like that."

"Come on, you know how much I hated it. At least I'm happy now."

"Great. You can dance in the unemployment line. HONEY, WHERE'S THOSE BEERS? She's getting old, your mother.

"Communications majors get jobs! Have some confidence, dad."

"Well, exactly what type of work are you looking for?"

"I'm not really thinking in specific terms yet. I know I'd like a casual, unstructured workplace where I'd have freedom to create and share ideas while working toward a goal."

"In other words, you have no intention whatsoever of getting a job."

"Gimme a break, will you dad?"

"You're right. You're young, you'll make mistakes. In fact, I find your naivete rather humorous."

"I'm glad."

"You know, my offer still stands son. Your brother is doing very well since he's come to work for me. Did you know he was named salesman of the month for September?"

"No!"

"No kidding. He sold 48 complete bathroom sets in one month. A new company record. He got a silarium-plated watch and everything."

"Wow, there's not much farther to go in life after you've sold 48 toilets in one month."

"None of your cheek, boy! That's 48 commissions on top of a good salary and if you had a brain in your head you'd think it over very carefully! HONEY, WHERE THE HELL ARE THOSE BEERS? Goddamn deaf space shot, your mother."

"I'm not really thirsty anyway, dad. But thanks for the job offer. Oh, did I tell you I might be spending next summer in Saskatchewan? I got a couple of friends..."

A fear of flying

David Cole

I have never felt comfortable in a flying machine — those awful, shimmering jets that roar up and out into the clear blue, roaring as if in defiance of the earth which held tentatively on, sad and hopeless, in the last few moments of farewell.

Perhaps it is because — as the rush of speed begins, the body tightened, blown backward through clouds of fear and excitement — a chill in me arises from the metallic ashes of the past.

Or maybe the discomfort stems from something more personal. A fear based, more than likely, on a distrust of people in general; a perverse knowledge that even the best engineering slips suddenly and without warning.

This distrust factor, so it shall be called prods me from three sides: business, political, and common sense.

On the commercial side of things, I don't think there will be many sympathisers. However, I believe truly that McDonnell Douglas, producer of many of these great jets, manages to slide around tight safety regulations—it has to be this, or their engineering is suspect, either which should curtail use of their products. McDonnell Douglas, with their jets in the more notable crashes of the last decade, has recently tried to recount for their losses by, as National Public Radio reported, a publicity barrage including television commercials with survivors of DC 10 flights. Certainly it is a sad way to forget those unclaimed cries in the sky over Chicago, Paris and other unlucky places.

Political distrust also adds to my fear of flying. Terrorism has begun to flourish again, especially in Europe, and the airline industry is still a ripened fruit for the fateful hands of extremist groups looking for quick solutions to the problem of creating widespread social fear. This summer, over Italian waters, an Itavia Airline DC 9 went down with 89 passengers. It might have been the first such attack. Speculation as to whether it was a bomb or not in the luggage ended abruptly, and now is forgotten.

Common sense tells me, the moment I step into a plane, that perhaps, for my own sake - and all the other somber souls boarding the midnight express - I should make a scene, jump up and down, scream "We are going to our..."; yet, I never do.

And I stay as irrationally calm, when, a few moments later, a crewmember holds our spooked attention by dangling (in a fashion reminiscent of the gallows) an oxygen mask from one hand, and in the other, waves a diagram of escape routes.

But always in my experience (and I don't quite know why) the plane gets up and is safely breaking through the clouds. All around is blue, and a smooth cool light bounces in the cabin. It is up high, this jet, as high as people ever will be, up in the essence of light and cold.

And it is up here that I realize I have my feet planted firmly in the ground. I don't know why, but from this height there's a certain divinity in dirt and other things.

Lecture examines Jewish-Black relations

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

Nat Hentaff, faculty member at the New School for Social Research in New York, spoke to about 15 students and faculty members on Thursday, Oct. 9th in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Hentaff spoke on a number of issues including the Black-Jewish relationship and Israel's relationship with countries such as South Africa, Bolivia, and the U.S. He also commented on possible solutions to the problems facing Israel and its neighboring states.

The session, sponsored by Hillel, a Jewish student organization, was part of a week long series of activities dealing with anti-semitism and inter-group relationships on campus.

Hentaff, who also writes for the Village Voice, a weekly newspaper published in New York, spoke on a number of issues faced by Jews across the country and throughout the world.

Blacks and Jews share many similar problems in regards to universal recognition and respect, Hentaff said.

"I don't think there has ever been a deep, true Black-Jew alliance. During the 60's there was legitimate, authentic interest to achieve some goals, but it was inevitable that the alliance was to fray. The nature of self-interest were disparate," Hentoff said.

"I'm not optimistic it'll get any stronger in the near future," he added.

Commenting on the recent outbreak of anti-semitism in France, Hentaff said, "anti-semitism is as fundamental and voracious a drive as any that's existed."

Hentaff felt the need for secure Israeli borders was of primory importance, but did not support the use of nuclear weapons for that defense.

"Moshe Dayan supports the use of small, tactical nuclear weapons for the defense of Israel's borders. If Israel were to use nuclear weapons, it's obvious where it would lead," he said.

Hentaff spoke briefly on the role various Jewish groups played in the resignation of Andrew Young from his post as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations in 1979. During Young's term as Ambassador to the United Nations, he also served as head of the Security Council. While in this capacity, Young met with a represenatative of the Palestine Liberation Organization, an organization considered by several countries to be a terrorists group.

Young failed to natify the U.S. State Department of this meeting, and the ensuing protest by those within the government and from various Jewish organizations forced him to resign his position as U.S. Ambassador to the U.N.

Hentaff felt such restrictions should not have been placed on Young, and termed the actions of those groups who forced his resignation as "outrageous."

Hentaff felt Young's resignation was "an important symbolic defeat for blacks."

Collins said. He opposes the proposed diversion to the Connecticut River or the already taxed Quabbin Reservoir, Collins said.

"Politics is getting a bad name," said Collins, "and I consider it an honorable profession. The small amount of those who abuse the system should be punished," he said.

Collins wants to work on the issue of public financing in campaigns. "To get to the core of the issue, it just costs too much to run for office today. It costs approximately $1 million to run for Governor. I recommend a tax check-off, a matching fund system or something similar to minimize corruption, as well as opening up the system to those without money," he said.

Collins said he considers himself a "full-time" legislator. "Every original campaign promise I made has been kept."

Floyd said that he first attempted to approach Muellar on Monday, the first day of the elections, but was unable to find her. He said that he left a message for her to get in touch with him but she did not. Floyd added that he found Muellar late on Tuesday and said he was told not to take any action because she was going to invalidate the stickers on the commuter ballots, and that he might have a chance to win a seat with just a few votes.

Geary said that one possible alternative did exist if the error was caught earlier in the election proceedings. She said that the ballots could have been pulled from circulation, retyped with the correct name and returned to the polls within about three hours.

FILM Ordinary People: emotion-wrenching

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Emotions....I experienced joy, anger, frustration, and sadness. I laughed. I cried. Most of all, I was awed by the sheer emotive power of Ordinary People.

Ordinary People stands unique among the crassly commercialistic garbage offered by today's Hollywood. It concerns real people: you and I and our family and our friends. It deals with relotionships and their communicative breakdowns which we've all experienced. Ordinary People is true to life; that is it's power, it's triumph.

The storyline remains faithful to Judith Guest's best-selling novel of the same title. Mareover, it is heightened by its adaptatian ta the big screen.

It is a carefully executed film. Director Robert Redford (I) has taken extreme care with each scene, each frame. Redford's art schoal background (he studied art before undertaking his successful acting career) is apparent throughout. Each scene is a canvas upon which Redford has painted a visually and emotionally-stunning

As mentianed above, this is the stary at a relationship; that of a WASPish, upper-middle class family and its communicative callapse following the death af one of its members, a son. Left behind to cope with this tragedy is the father, Calvin (Danald Sutherland), the mother, Beth (Mary Tyler Maore), and remaining son, Conrad (Timothy Hutton).

Hutton is fantastic as Conrad. He is the focus of all our attention. Conrad is all nervous energy and full of hurt, yet possesses that glimmer of hope, the hope that life must go on. His performance is so realistic it is riveting. If you have last a loved one you can identify so much with his portrayal; his feelings of isolation, guilt, and loss. He dramatizes perfectly the pain inside which becomes so manifest in your everyday activities as you try to go on living a "narmal" life. It is not an easy thing to do as Hutton proves.

Donald Sutherland is moving as the father trying to keep his disintegrating family together. He yearns for everything to be hunky-dary. To achieve this he must put to rest his "perfect family" fallacy. He learns that the truth hurts. Again, not an easy thing to do.

Mary Tyler Moore is the biggest surprise of all. Who would have thaught that a waman with such a sweet "ivory snow" image could turn out a performance with such coldness and lack of emotians? Yet she does. She portrays a true bitch; unloving and materialistic. Her rigid facial expressions convey more meaning than any words ever could.

Ordinary People is a triumph on many levels. Experience it.

Ordinary People is now showing at the Hampshire 4 Cinemas

Terror Train hops Hollywood bandwagon

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Correspondent

One need nat have to see the newest in shlock-horror to know what this film is about. Terror Train is strictly farmula cracked fram the Halloween/Friday the 13th mald. Directar Roger Spottiswoode understands that to make a successful low budget film nowadays all you have to do is put a group af young actors in an enclosed place (in this case a train), add a vengeful psychotic with a variety of knives, hire Jamie Lee Curtis and you've got it.

Unfortunately, after John Carpenter's original Hallaween, these films have gotten progressively warse. Terror train helps prove this statement.

In a pre-credits sequence we see a group of college freshmen from the fraternity Sigma Phi. They play a gruesame practical joke on Kenny, the group outcast, which sends him to a mental institution. The story takes up again three years later when Kenny escapes ta join his brothers on their graduation trip. Predictably, all hell breaks loose.

A positive aspect at the film is in some of the characterizations. Ben Johnsan, as the conductor, is such a nice guy you almost hate to see him subjected to such horror. Jamie Lee Curtis [Halloween, The Fog, Prom Night], on the other hand, we're used to seeing squirm. Hart Bochner appears to be continuing the pampous BMOC he played in Breaking Away. Magician David Capperfield makes his screen debut (not an impressive one) as a magician.

In a film like this, the gare is essential and Terror Train just doesn't make it. Whot special effects wizard Tom Savini did for Dawn af the Dead and Friday the 13th, Ty Drake cannot attempt to duplicate. When an absurd looking paper mache head falls onta screen it is mare amusing than scary.

Lighting designer Jonathan Grant worked overtime and created some especially effective lighting effects. In some scenes they create the mood while in others are particularly discancerting.

Director Spottiswoode, originally a fine editor (he cut such films as The Getaway and Hard Times], has made, although not a film to be proud of, a movie that will make 20th Century Fox same easy money.

"I think not having Huetteman and Harrelson there was a major reason we didn't win. If they were there, I'm sure we could have done a lot better," said Williams.

Because of the inclement weather Saturday, the match was held on three indoor courts in not-too-good condition, and took an unbelievable seven hours to complete. Neil Mackertich, hitting number 1 for the fourth straight match, grabbed his fifth singles victory of the season, in a three set win. At number 2, Sergio Strepman fell in straight sets, but behind him, Matt Modlish, pushed into the number 3 spot for the first time this season, took the other lone singles point for UMass in a two set victory. In seeds 4-6, Nick Julian, Paul Jaffe, and Gregg Sanders all lost in three set matches.

Feldman fryolates Cortland State

By JEFFREY BILLARD
Collegian Staff

CORTLAND, N.Y. – Forward Nancy Feldman scored all four UMass goals, as she led the women's soccer team to a 4-0 victory over Cortland State Saturday.

UMass (4-2) came out pressuring in the first half on good passing by sophomore Nina Holmstrom and freshman Stacey Flionis and had an early scoring opportunity turned away when freshman Jane Lojek's shot from the right side was stopped by Cortland goalie Karen Murray.

Then at 4:59, Feldman, a sophomore from Needham, scored her first when she kicked in a rebound off a shot by sophomore Debbie Pickett.

UMass failed to connect on two more scoring opportunities when junior Maddie Mangini's powerful direct kick sailed just over the crossbar and a shot from the right by Holmstrom was saved by Murray.

Feldman then put the Minutewomen up 2-0, when she beat Murray to the left side for her second unassisted goal of the day at 25:27.

UMass goalie Kelly Tuller, who turned away seven shots enroute to her first shutout this season, was not severly tested until late in the half when she deflected a Cortland shot that was headed for the top right corner of the net.

Cortland came out more aggressively in the second half and penetrated the UMass zone with good passing, but was unable to capitalize when Edie Eires' breakaway shot hit the right side of the net.

Feldman then countered with two goals in 40 seconds. The first coming off a rebounded corner kick by Flionis at 24:04 and the second off her own rebound while standing alone in front of the net at 24:43.

Feldman now has five goals in the last two games including the game winner in both.

"Nancy (Feldman) anticipates the ball well and she hustles after it," Coach Kalekeni Banda said.

Cortland continued to pass well and almost broke the shutout when Genie Obber caught Tuller out of the net, but sophomore Kathy Houriban stepped in to deflect the shot wide.

UMass outshot Cortland 22 to 12 on the afternoon but did not totally dominate the game.

"The score doesn't do justice to their (Cortland) team strength," Banda said. "They passed well, but couldn't finish them with good shots."

The Minutewomen played well at both ends of the field with an accurate passing attack on offense and steady, aggressive play on defense. The defense was led by freshman Mary Sztetela and sophomores Jackie Gaw and Kathy Hourihan, who cleared the ball consistently and kept the Cortland offense from getting clean shots on Tuller.

Sophomore Maryann Lombardi and freshmen Lojek and Mary Crowley played well in place of the injured Natalie Prosser (knee), who saw limited action, Elaine Contant (hamstring) and Polly Kaplan.

"The substitutes did the job for us today," Banda said.

The team will travel to South Hadley tmorrow for a 4 p.m. game with Mt. Holyoke College.

UM 4th in Easterns

By MARK P. BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY – The Minutewomen finished in fourth place at the E.A.I.A.W. golf tournament over at The Orchards this past weekend. E.A.I.A.W. translates into Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women and this tournament was the main event of the fall season for the Minutewomen.

The rainy weather didn't stop the Penn State squad from continuing their dominance of The Easterns. The Nittany Lions won the tourney for the fifth straight time. Penn State which had a two day total of 649 was followed by Amherst College with a 733 and Cortland State with a 750. UMass had a score of 755 for the tournament.

After the first round on Friday the Minutewomen found themselves a whopping sixty-two strokes behind the front running Lions.

Led by junior Karen LaVerdiere, UMass played much better in the second round on Saturday. LaVerdiere improved her score ten strokes from a 91 to an 81.

"My short game was much better today (Saturday)," said LaVerdiere. "I didn't do well at all yesterday, but today I sunk some key putts including a sixty footer on the second hole."

UMass had a 366 score for the second round. The only team with a better score on Saturday was the 322 Penn State had.

"We played much better today, I was a little disappointed yesterday," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "The weather conditions and the importance of the tournament may have played a part yesterday."

Other UMass scores were Marlene Susienka with a 175, Robin Hayes with a 193, Barbara Spilewski with a 215, and Judy Simonds with a 218.

"We have the potential, but we didn't come through when it counted," said Spilewski.

Penn State which won the tournament going away, was led by senior Lyn Marriott, who had scores of 82 and 76 to finish in first. Her teammate Sandy Jaskol finished second with a score of 160. Another golfer from Penn State finished fourth, Jane Abood with a 165. Sue Semler from Rutgers University finished third with a score of 164.

"We're just getting going," said Penn State coach Annette Thompson. "This is a big tournament for us, and I'm real happy because the whole team has been working very hard."

The Minutewomen have two more matches remaining in the season, both at Hickory Ridge Country Club. On October 17 they will host Springfield College and Amherst College. On the twenty-fourth they will finish their season against Mount Holyoke and Amherst College.

Nine seconds can be fatal, even in football

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

What just nine seconds can do to an undefeated season and a homecoming game! Nine seconds and a quarterback who threw his ninth touchdown pass this season at Alumni Stadium Saturday, a fatal pass for UMass who is no longer undefeated and will probably fall in the Division I-AA poll.

Delaware junior quarterback Rick Scully is the culprit, connecting with Ed Wood in the final nine seconds of the football game to give the Blue Hens of Delaware their fourth win of the season, a 21-17 heartbreaker over the Minutemen.

That score came just six minutes after UMass took the lead after being behind since midway through the third quarter. After a time-consuming 15 plays that stretched 80 yards and included three superb passes from UM quarterback Tim Fontaine to Garry Pearson and Mike Barbiasz, Pearson ran the ball one yard for the score. It looked as if UMass would be celebrating a homecoming victory.

In the final six minutes, the UMass defense turned the ball over to Fontaine and company twice (Dan Petrie sacked Scully for a 13 yard loss that resulted in a Delaware punt and Max Jones recovered an Ed Wood fumble) but both times they failed to get a much needed first down.

Then in seven plays covering 48 yards, Scully directed the Blue Hens to their third TD on the afternoon.

"They (Delaware) showed great poise and a great ability to come back," UMass head coach Bob Pickett said. "We had a great challenge and now the challenge is to handle the loss mentally and come back.

"I thought our defense played well enough so that we should have won the ball game," Pickett said.

And they did. Scully was sacked three times, twice by Petrie and once by defensive end Frank DiTommaso and intercepted twice by Peter DiTommaso and Bob Manning. Once again John Allen was all over the field. He was in on 11 tackles, two unassisted and he caused a fumble and sacked the running back twice.

UMass did allow though, the first touchdown pass this season when Scully tossed a 17 yarder to Gino Olivieri in the second quarter for Delaware's first tally.

Delaware's defensive line was, in turn, outstanding also. They seemed to penetrate the UM offensive line consistently and dropped Fontaine for five sacks. They blocked two Ray Larnard punts and one was recovered in the endzone by six-foot 255 pound Ed Braceland for six points.

Fontaine out-passed Scully going 10 for 18 and 174 yards. Scully completed 10 of 25 for 128 yards.

"This is still an excellent football team," Pickett said of UMass. "We still have alot of football ahead and all we can do is the best we can."

UM runners place second behind UConn Huskies

The UMass men's cross country team took three of the top six places but lost with 40 points to UConn's 32 points in Saturday's tri-meet at the University of Connecticut.

Dartmouth was third with 49 points on the 5.2 mile course.

The winner of the meet was Dartmouth's Art Switchenko who set a new course record at 26:08.

For UMass, Chris Omeltchenko took third (26:23), Paul Beaulieu took fourth (26:27), and Mike Doiron was sixth (26:43).

Coach Ken O'Brien said that the team "ran very strong near the front but there was too big a gap between the front and rear runners."

UMass runners Kyle Martin and Frank Prial also ran well placing eleventh and sixteenth, respectively.

The team's next meet will be the IC4A tourney on October 20. Most of the east's top teams will be competing.

Clark up ends tennis team, 6-3

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Staff

While most of the UMass sports patrons left on campus this weekend were soaking in the woe of the Minutemen's heartbreaking loss to the Blue Hens of Delaware, the mens tennis team ran into a roadblock of their own on Saturday in the form of Clark University of Worcester.

The netmen travelled east with a 4-2 record in their hip pocket, and coming off their strongest play of the year in Wednesday's 6-3 defeat of unbeaten Albany State, they were looking to win. Unfortunately they also travelled short handed as number 3 singles, senior Mark Hdetteman, and number 3 doubles, freshman Mike Harrelson, were noticeably absent. That made it necessary for Coach Steve Williams to do some line-up shuffling and have the number 4, 5, and 6 singles play-up to fill the void at number 3. This set-up, according to Williams, had a lot to do with UMass ending on the short end of a 6-3 score.

Spikers take consolation round at So. Conn tourney

Coming into the midpoint of the season, the women's volleyball team continues to rollercoaster between being unbeatable and being mediocre.

In last weekend's Southern Connecticut State College Tournament, UMass failed to make it into the elimination round, but turned itself around to take first in the consolation bracket.

Friday night saw the Minutewomen drop to the University of New Haven 15-6, 10-15, 11-15, then defeat Connecticut College 15-5, 16-14. Against Cortland State University, a team that lost to UMass twice in the UMass Tournament, the Minutewomen could not get enough to overtake its opponent, losing 13-15, 10-15. UMass left the competition with a 1-2 record and a long way to go to get back to playing the kind of volleyball that has beaten some of the best teams in the East such as Rhode Island and Southern Conn.

In the consolation bracket Saturday morning, the Minutewomen began its way back by beating Queens College 11-15, 15-6, 15-8.

"Queens was playing out of their minds," said Coach Elaine Marasco, "we were very tired, almost dead, and the Queens coach was screaming, her players nearly beat us. But we never lost control. When push came to shove, we came through."

In the semifinals against the University of Connecticut, the Minutewomen outlasted the Huskies 15-9, 11-15, 15-10, to go into the finals against Central Connecticut State College.

Central gave UMass problems during the UMass Invitational, as the Blue Devils took two matches from UMass. However, UMass managed to overpower Central, 15-8, 11-15, 15-9, and take the consolation bracket.

KOCH'S WAR ON HARLEM

On Saturday September 20, 1980 30 people were injured when police charged demonstrators who were supporting a sit-in, to save Sydenhom Hospital from closing down, as a resultof budget cuts planned by the mayor of New York City, Ed Koch.

Currently, the closing of Sydenham Hospital is the spearhead of a budgetary attack on the minority population of New York City. This attack includes the slashing of the budgets for the Welfare program, Fire Stations, and hospitals, within the inner-city. These cuts show no respect to a people who are unemployed, people whose buildings are being tourched just so that the "man" can collect on the insurance, and for people who have the highest illness, and death rates in the country, and one doctor for every 1000 people (in parts of South Bronx it is 1:10,000) whereas the national average is 1:400.

Harlem Congressman Charles Rangel has called Mayor Ed Koch New York City's own Bull Connor as a result of Koch's political actions, and because of his reference todemonstrators as "block mobs", "punks and thugs and provocators", while at the same time praising the police for using "restraint".

AFRO AMERICANS IN THE 21st CENTURY

Many of our people understand why we need to think about our situation in global terms, but there are still too many of us who wonder if we have the energy and the time, if not the capacity, to concern ourselves about Africa, the Caribbean, the Middle East, or other parts of the world. "Don't we have problems enough right HERE!" We fail to understand that our problems here are an integral part of the problems which the underdeveloped world faces.

Afro-Americans are seriously affected by the perceptions Americans and other Westerners have of the people of the Motherland. The late Kenyan leader, Tom Mboya, said it well: "My black brothers and I are twins--what you think of the one must affect what you think of the other. You cannot proclaim the beauty of the one and despise the ugliness of the other.

Plainly, it is in our own self interest as a people--the interest of our welfare and our security--that Americans in general correctly perceive and understand Africa. Africa is not a jungle of mysterious wizardry, some Land of Oz.

The destiny of Afro-Americans and of Africans is linked. The power structure of America knows that, and as a result, Black people cannot rely on the same media as whites for our information about Africa. These folks lie!

My task is to indicate the role of political analysis in planning for the new coalitions, and implementing that plan at the local community level. This analysis includes two process, description, and prescription. As a people, we tend to have a little problem with "theory". I do not mean the problem we are so often charged with, of having some kind of "pre-logical" or "pre-scientific" mind that can't think abstractly enough for that; rather, I mean the general absence of time and energy, after dealing with the pressing problems of daily survival, to reflect on our situation; the absence of relevant data beyond our own direct experience; and the absence of social institutions and situations that allow specialists to develop theory that has Black people specifically and especially in mind.

The Elements of the Crisis:

1. The general realignment of power in the world at large is real and is fully underway. The West already isless able to impose its wishes on the "Third World." The major symbol of this shift is the long, angry gas line.T This reflects the ability of the oil-exporting countries to receive a price that actually accords with the value to us of their product, for the first time in history.

2. Black Americans are caught in an ambigouous situation, however. We have a conflict of interest. The order that wrenched us from the Motherland and put and kept uslow is now threatened. If the Western ship insists on keeping all of its present cargo, it will sink! But we are on it, and seemingly as deck hands who are more worried about the arrangement of the chairs than anything else. Maybe the more appropriate analogy is an Indian scout working for General Custer: he warns "Unnhh! Kimosabe! All the Indians in the world (get that "all") are waiting up on that hill to ride right down on us."

3. The third element of the crisis is the fact that we, Afro-Americans, truly are the product of this age in this country. We are encouraged, and inclined, to be hedonistic and frivolous. We are coming to participate in the general culture, but we do so as cultural captives and not as cultural creators. We are being pulled down to the level of their tastes, and their talents. We are into their hangouts and their hangups. The Soul Train is derailed. Disco goes better with "coke," whether drunk or sniffed. To hell with the cultural revolution--make the gang of four drink Pepsi.

4. The final important element of our crisis is the fact that much of our leadership derives its sustenance and its rationale from the system at large or from others in that system. Their ostensible function is to mediate and to placate. They channel the system's services to the masses. They symbolize the inclusion of the masses in the system. But this is symbolic inclusion only-as the basic statistics of exclusion remain the same as before the rebellions of the 1960s-unemployment is just as high, income disparities are even greater than they were.. There is now lower educational accomplishment for the greater numbers that are in schools (even more segregated schools); there are more health hazards and the well-being deficits are just as large. So now our dependent leadership is also a bit discredited. What can be done now? We have already had the Sixties.!

The Elements of Prescription:

How will our community come to understand that it has an interest in the growing power of the Third World? Can they believe that their real salvation will come through the working of really important changes in this social order, changes that will make things for us a lot worse before they can get much better? Maybe our people will prefer a "last dance."

What theory can we best apply to interpret the descriptive elements of our situation in order to remedy them? As he often did, W.E.B. DuBois gave us part of the answer: "Until the lions have their own historians, the tales will continue to glorify the hunters."

The late Robert McLuhan provided another part of the answer: "The medium is the message." If television is the only medium, then fantasy and diversion, and frivolity, will be the only messages.

U.S. COVERT ARMS SALES TO SOUTH AFRICA

Because of the racist apartheid regime, the U.N. imposed on arms embargo on South Africa in 1965. Recently, Western sources have confirmed the United State's non-compliance measures against the embargo. The result has been millions of dollars worth of black market transoctions between private companies and South African officials, meaning that America has given direct support for the oparthied government's hostile vendettos against its own volatile Black population and neighboring Marxist states.

This country's contempt for the embarga was made evident in its earlier irresolute measures. Washington, in an ombivalent gesture, condoned sales of "non-combat civilion systems" such as radar sets, computers and similior technology. The Nixon administration, by giving approval to such transactions, has allowed Pretoria to acquire necessary communicotions and surveillance equipment for its own uses. Furthermore, there is additonal evidence of embargoviolations by U.S. arms manufacturing firms---this confirms the benign negligence in Washington of monitors of expart control operations. Unquestionobly, the delivery of millions of dollors worth of arms such as shotguns, hawitzers and 155mm artillery shells could not pass unnaticed before the wary eyes of the State Department, unless they looked the other way.

While the threat of civil wor looms in South Africa, while four million whites refuse to acquiesce with the demands of twenty million indigenous Black people for social and political rights,the Western powers helplessly wait andwatche o revolutionory drama unfold...or do they• New evidence from the opponents of oparthеid(South Africa's legal racial segregation system) suggests that the West has not been as fair and compliant towards the United Nations policy that the U.S. itself helped pass, as it might seem.

Currently 17.8 of white South Africa's national budget is appropriated for defense spending, reportedly. Actually, this percentage is inaccurate because the paramilitory police budget's figures are nat counted with defense spending(PM's wark as soldiers on the border and in Namibia), and because of many other defense items which are surreptitiously hidden in the general budget. There are 86,000 men on active duty within the armed forces, and the South African Defense Force (SADF) is maintained by 80 of this manpower. And as defense paranoia develops, so does the combat mentality. S. African Prime Minister Botha insists that the country is virtually self-reliant, currently producing most of its own conventional military gear and possessing its own nuclear weapons capability.

A SPECTRUM OF DANCE

The Dance Theatre of Harlem is an example-witness to the testimony of real ability in Afrikan-Amerikan dancers, whom some soy "can not dance ballet", this dance theatre group does it, does it well and with o diversity that could only come about through the addition of other dimension of dance. The Dance theotre of Harlem was founded by Arthur Mitchell in the basement of the Church of the Master in Monhattan, New York. They hove since risen from the basement of the church to the high plateau of an internationally reknown dance theatre group. Their performance of October 7, 1980 at 8:00 p.m. ot the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center inaugurated it's 1980-1981 Dance Series Season. The Tuesday night performance which I attend consisted of five quality dance pieces and all present truly received their money's worth and thon some.

The evening began with a dance piece entitled "Allegro Brillante", there were ten dancers five men, five women. Picture it if you will: softly colored costumes, couples dancing together as if in "Shangrila". Ah, but there is one couple in particular which seems somewhat speciol, yes, even for Shangrila. The music was very light and flowing and dance was very classical in it's ballet style. In two words, it was "light and lovely".

The second dance piece was entitled "Le Corsaire", there were two dancers- a man and a woman. Imagine with me if you will a courtship scene of high emotions. Two lovers at play exuberant from the energy, the feeling that could only be created by a love as warm as the breathe of spring. The scene begins with the couples dancing together, then the scene transfers to the young man alone dancing a high emotional tone, happy and feeling satisfied about his good fortune. Next the scene chonges to the young women alone dancing to her own high, yet sensually sensitive, emotionol tone... contented and thinking of her lover as he appears. They dance together playfully, tenderly... as they embrace and overwhelm each other in a springtime love.

This third dance piece stands out as being far different from the others it was entitled "Manifestions", there three dancers- two men, one woman. Mystery and highly dynamic energy prevade this philosophical and thought provoking dance. It was a droma. The scene is the Garden of Eden and the staging wos most unique. The dance movements in the piece were the most subtle, subtile, and thought provoking of oll the dance pieces--in my opinion. On did not need to know the story from the book of Genesis in odvonce to absorb the full impoct and implications of the story. My special compliments to Mel Tomlinson--the Serpent, Stephanie Baxter--Eve and Lowell Smith--Adam, for their execution of this dance, also Arthur Mitchell the choreographer and Primous Fountain III who played the musical accompaniment. This was my favorite piece.

Now for a little humor and a little more education-fitting don't you think, considering the fact that this is a University. The fourth dance piece entitled "mirage", there were nine dancers--four men, five women. The piece wos rightfully subtilled "The Games People Play". The costumes of this piece were the most colorful (fitting... yes*) and the staging wos the most elaborate of all the pieces. The costume ranged in style from elegant evening to "Disco Down" and the scene, fittingly enough, was a party in a large luxury apartment in New York City. The party was given by the couple who lived in the partment and their guest list included: a young man and an older woman as one couple, two crazy, funky party couples and of course one late arrival. The late arrival was o beautiful young womon who was responsible for really getting the game playing into full swing by going after someone elses man. The tempo ranged from very high party down beat, to o low key "she's trying to take my man melancholy." One would truly hove to think hard to come up with a game that they missed-which could take place at a house party. It was o tribute to the All-Amerikan sport known as "Night Life."

Last, but not least, was the finale dance. This piece was entitled "Troy Game", there ten primary dancers and some extras all of which were men. They were all dressed like West Afrikon wrestlers, much of the music sounded Afrikon and most of the dancing was what we common refer to as Afrikan Dance. The dance began taking the form of a class at a Martial Arts School, as the men danced to catas. As the dance built up in energy, the dancers began combining Afrikan dance and Gymnastics--I thought it was explosive to watch and the audience really loved it. The dance finished with a display that looked like a body building contest. The ladies loved it and I think is safe to say the ladies did not feel neglected the brothers. It was exciting. In this dance as well as in all the dance which preceeded it the use of ballet movements were totally dominant or notably pronounced.

I wish to extend the deepest uppreciation to the entire body of The Dance Theatre of Harlem from myself, Nummo News and the entire community for an excellent, exciting and extremely entertaining performance. Thank-you and "Dance On".

DU BOIS CORNER

DU BOIS AND THE EDUCATION OF BLACK PEOPLE

Dr. Meyer Weinberg of The Horace Mann Bond Center for Equal Education at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, and Dr. Hollis Lynch from The Institute of Afrıcon Studies at Columbia University, discussed DuBois' advocacy of the education of Black people. Dr. Weinberg emphasized the fact that Dr. DuBois was a prime educator of America's Black people. DuBois viewed Black community life as an integral cultural component which is distinct from ond ethnically equal to that of all other American communities. He rejected any concepts of Black intellectual or cultural inferiority.

Intellectuals have stated that DuBois 'shuffled between segregation and integration in the thirties.' However, DuBois' philosophies concerning education preferred termination of segregated schooling, but he was willing to deal with its continuation in the absence of any possibility for change. He also advocated the control by Blacks of their own educational institutions.

Among DuBois' ideas concerning Black higher education wos the perspective that education for Black people should begin with the study of the Black condition in America. The underlying theme of the curriculum should concern itself with the problems and prospects of Black America. Dr. DuBois believed that only ofter those aspects have been thoroughly analyzed should Black people advance into studies of world culture and society. He advised parents to teach their children Black history, culture, and pride at home, in order to strengthen their integrity as individuals and as Black people. Without a knowledge of their past and a positive identity, DuBois felt that Black children would not be taught justly within the integrated school system. Weinberg appropriately stated that, 'In the end, we celebrate him not by repeating his name, but by responding to his challenge.'

Dr. Hollis Lynch addressed the intentions of Dr. DuBois by asking many profound questions. He questioned the influence that DuBois had on Blacks generally as 'a formol educator and as a popular educator.'

DuBois attended Fisk University and spent his summers teaching in the rural schools of southern Tennessee. His confrontations with racism at Harvard University restricted him from 'doing normal type' activities. This led him to offer lectures to the community.

'What was DuBois like as a teacher?' Lynch asked this question of the audience and the panel. Lynch also questioned DuBois' ability to reach the masses of Black people in America and wondered if his influence was on the masses or those of 'The Talented Tenth.' Lynch said that DuBois' impact as an effective speaker sharply diminished after 1948. DuBois' identification with radicals and the existence of McCarthyism made him a subject of oppression and censorship (1951-8) Lynch also commented on DuBois' ability to internationalize his perspective on world affairs. Dr. Lynch concluded that DuBois' moin concern was to give Black people in America a sense of historical and cultural achievements.

Herbert Aptheker, who was in the oudience, offered o commentary on the obove observations and questions. He began by stating that 'DuBois wos reserved but not inhibited.' As o teacher, DuBois was tough and punctual. He involved himself with his students ond reverently followed their coreers. DuBois approached learning with a passion and he wonted to be loved and respected by all. 'He was a voice for many poor Blacks,' Aptheker added.

While he was a professor, DuBois wanted to teach sociology, but his requests were denied. Instead he had to teach Greek and Latin. DuBois hated hypocracy and corruption. He wos a masterful debator and a very effective speaker. He offered his conceptions of what Block education should be. DuBois olso argued for education in business related professions, liberol arts, teaching, and preaching. He firmly believed that Blacks should prepare themslves in oreas in which they would have the opportunity to educate the masses. In conclusion, Dr. Aptheker commented, 'He offected many whites even though they would not mention it.'

21st CENTURY is an edited version of the original article published FIRST WORLD.

If it is true that in the land of the blind the one-eyed-man is king, in the land of the TV -watchers it will be the readers--or, more accutately, the source of what they read, the writers--who will reign. Where are our own writers!? Who is reading them!?

To be most useful to us, the writers must also be thinkers. It is safe to say that we have little use for the thinking that is done on our feet, on our backs, with our hands, or with our butts!

Planning our future will take some contemplation, with the facts, and without the frenzy. We must support institutions and people who can devote themselves to such a task.

We are not so helpless or hapless as many would have us seem, however, We do now have well functioning sources of information on what really is happening around the world. And we have our own experienced scholars, businessmen, government people, elected officials who know the Third World, and who know how this system has worked at home and abroad. We must now use these people and these sources of information and insight. We must make their thinking and their analyses accountable to our community, and accessible to our communities, at the very local level.

The organizations that we formed in the Sixties still live, however peaked they may appear to be. We must give them a new life.

The issue is to make the resources, the information, and the perspective of these organizations effective at the local level.

There is no excuse for us to continue to rely on the six o'clock TV news for all our knowledge of what is happening in the world. Nor is it really even adequate to rely on the New York Times or the Washington Post. Those folk lie also.

Those who work at the local levels must read, read, read; those of our greatest minds, who are no longer with us--DuBois and Douglass, Cabral and Fanon, Martin and Malcolm, and those of our finest minds who are still with us--Julius Nyerere, Samin Amin, George L. Beckford, Lerone Bennett, Ayi Kwei Armah, and scores and scores of others.

This is so obvious it sounds trite. But the truth is that our leadership at the local level do not read. Our leadership at the city, state and national levels do not read. They watch TV, go to the movies, look as the headlines, or the centerfolds, of the magazines and newspapers they can find at the drug stores. Yet, we are up against people who make the business of being informed the fundamental base of their personal resources. And they then write it or rewrite it as it suits them.

More often than not, we take their definitions of what is or what is not.

Asian American History: The Myths and the Reality

Adapted from Bridge magazine.

Editor's note: Americans typically view Asians from the distortions and stereotypes that have been applied to them via myths and media manipulation. Through textbooks, the reader, especially young children, often get o distorted picture of the culture, contributions and sufferings of Asions in America. The following article will highlight typicol textbook distortions that ore fed into ours and our children's minds from an early age on.

Chinese Americans

Distortion

Textbooks give as the main reason for Chinese immigration that they came to the U.S. to seek their fortunes.

Reality

The Chinese came here driven by dire economic pressures. During the 1800's, life in China was disrupted by Western colonizastion, notural disasters and famine. In the U.S., industrialists were expanding westward and wanted a larger labor force. Hence, U.S. business interests launched an aggressive recruitment campaign to attract Chinese workers.

Distortion

The achievements of Chinese-Americans, if noted at all, are interpreted as minor contributions. Textbook example: "For a time, Chinese workers were in great demand. They helped build the transcontinental railroads." (America: Its People and Values, page 551, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1975)

Reality

The Western section of the transcontinentol railroad was almost totally o Chinese achievement. At first considered "too small" for heavy railroad work, the Chinese were hired by the Central Pacific in small numbers on an experimental basis. Eventually, over 12,000 performed nearly all ot the dangerous construction work. They worked from sun-up to sundown, six days o week, through the worst recorded blizzards, for $26 per month. Many hundreds died in construction accidents. By contrast, the railroad owners, in oddition to free land, received $16,000 to $48,00 from the U.S. Treasury for each mile constructed.

Distortion

The Chinese were unpopular because they were "willing" to work for low wages.

Reality

The Chinese, like all other people, took the best work and wages available. After completion of the railroad, some worked on land reclamation and, by 1884, constituted over 50 per cent of California's farm labor force. They were the mainstay of the early woolen and cigar-making industries and were active in canning and garment making. When a depression in the 1870's decreased labor needs, anti-Chinese hostility by white workers was encouraged by the media, government, unions and business. As a result, the Chinese were driven out of the labor market and forced into such service industries as the laundry and restaurant-fields considered "un-manly" by whites.

Distortion

Textbooks depict oppression against the Chinese as "unfortuonate" instances of discrimination and violence caused by some bigoted whites.

Reality

Some exomples of little known, yet extensive violence, are the lynching of 22 Chinese, including women and children, in Los Angeles in 1871; the destruction of all Chinese homes and businesses in Denver in 1880; and the massacre or 28 Chinese in Rock Springs, Wyoming, in 1885. Acts of physical violence against the Chinese occured in Seattle, Tacoma, and other U.S. cities, where the Chinese quarters were often burned.

Distortion

Textbooks omit or play down discriminatory laws against the Chinese.

Reality

Textbooks rarely provide information about the numerous anti-Chinese acts and laws which preceded and followed the 1882 Exclusion Act. For example, in 1854, Chinese were denied the right to testify in court against whites. This decision was upheld in 1870 and, of course, resulted in violence against the Chinese-in whites robbing, killing and oassaulting Chinese with impunity.

Examples of restrictive immigration legislation are: "An Act to Prevent the Further Immigration of Chinese or Mongolians to this State" (California), 1858; Scott Act, 1888-Chinese were forbidden to return to the U.S.; Geary Act, 1892- extended immigration restrictions for another decade, denied Chinese people the right to bail in habeos corpus proceedings and required all Chinese laborers to carry certificates of residence; Act of April 29, 1904-extended exclusion indefinitely.

Examples of occupational restrictive legislation: Foreign Miners tax of 1853-aimed at driving the Chinese from mining; San Francisco Anti-Ironing Ordinance of 1880-prohibited Chinese from ironing at night; and the California Fish ond Games Act of 1893-prohibited Chinese use of fishing nets.

Examples of punitive legislation: San Fransico Queue Ordinance, 1875-required the shaving of queues of Chinese in jail; San Fransico Cubic Air Law, 1873-arrested Chinese for living in a crowded room; and 14 out ot 30 states specifically cited the Chinese in their miscegnation laws.

Distortion

Until very recently, the U.S. Chinese communities have been passive and uncomplaining.

Reality

Chinese Americans have a rich history of actively resisting racist oppression. Examples of such resistance are: the 1867 strike by 7,000 Chinese laborers against the Central Pacific Railroad; the 1933 organization of the Chinese Hand Laundry Alliance to fight discrimination in New York; the 1936 union fight in Alaska won by a combination of Asian American, Chicano and white cannery workers; and the successful 14-week garment strike in 1938 by Chinese American women.

Japanese Americans

Distortion

Textbooks neglect to explain that American business encouraged the immigration of Japanese laborers.

Reality

An ocute labor shortage existed on the West Coast during the late 1800's. Following the legal exclusion of Chinese, Japanese were recruited for occupations in which the Chinese were once employed. They became active in lumbering and mining. Later, many became tenant farmers, and their achievements in turning wostelands into farmlands were well-known in the West.

Distortion

Textbooks minimize the extent of the official racism which Japanese immigrants experienceed. Example: "Japonese immigronts ran into many of the same difficulties that the Chinese had foced earlier. Often, other Americans did not treat them fairly." (America: Its People and Values, page 560)

Reality

Numerous laws have oppressed Japanese Americans. For example, in 1914, Takao Ozawa applied for U.S. citizenship. Born in Japan, he had lived in the U.S. for over 20 years. In 1922, the Supreme Court ruled that he (and other foreign-born Japanese) was ineligible for citizenship based on the Naturalization Act of 1790. In the same year, Congress passed the Cable Act which stated: "...any woman who marries an alien ineligible for citizenship shall cease to be an American citizen." This meant that if a U.S.-born Japanese (or a white woman) married a man born in Japan she lost her citizenship. The right of o Japonese-born person to U.S. citizenship was not granted until 1953.

A series of Alien Land Laws were passed in Western states stipulating that persons in Western states had no right to own or lease agricultural land. The constitutionality of these laws was tested many times, but it was not until 1948 (Oyama vs. U.S.) that the Alien Land Laws were struck down. A California law, in 1943 barred "aliens ineligible for citizenship" from getting commercial fishing licences. The Supreme Court struck this low down in 1947.

Distortion

The internment of 110,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry in concentration camps during World War II is, when mentioned, treated as an unfortunate chapter in our otherwise democratic history.

Reality

The long-practiced racism against Japanese Americans, not mere wartime "hysteria", must be seen as the cause of the internment. Texts should place it in this context, as well as discuss the economic concerns of whites, who benefitted by the elimination of Japanese business competition. The racist implications of the fact that that German and Italian Americans faced no such treatment should be discussed. Texts should use the term "concentration camps" and should note that it was not until 1971 that Title II of the Internal Security Act, which justified the legal detention of indiviuals in such camps, was repealed.

Distortion

Textbooks imply that Japanese Americans have forgiven and forgotten their wartime internment. Example: "The Japanese Americans seem not to have lost faith in the U.S. Most appear to have forgiven the government for violating their rights during World War II. Some of them even say that the whole affair was a 'helpful catastrophe'. It permitted young men to prove their loyalty by going to war." (Man in Americo, page 572, Silver Burdett, 1974)

Reality

Many Japanese Americons designate time by stating "before camp years" or "after comp years". In Japanese American newspapers around December there are sections devoted to accounts of experiences in the camps and debates on whether the Japanese should or should not, have willingly entered them. Most Japonese Americans joined the war effort not to "prove their loyalty" to the U.S., but because they wanted to overthrow facism.

Distortion

Japanese Americans today have "made it" and are a "successful model minority". Textbook example: "In California,

An open letter to the Asian American Students at UMass

Last Thursday evening, the Asian American Students Association met at its usual weekly meeting on Thursday at 6:30 P.M. in the Campus Center. Nine people showed, three of whom left early before any issues could be discussed. These six people are not the ones who need to hear this message. I want to reach the thirty or so other people who have come to previous meetings and the rest of the Asian community here at UMass, which approximately numbers over three hundred.

The six members who have been present these past weeks have a great responsibility being the only active participaants. I feel strongly about the energy that has been put out by these members and wish to thank them for their support. But what or who are they planning events for ? AASA is not only fo these six active members.

The Asian American Students Association is for everyone. It is a studen organization for Asians and Asian Americans. The association can be whatever you want it to be. If you were present at any of our prior meetings and haven't returned for one reason or another, let us know why and we can odapt, change and do things that interest you. AASA has and always will, adapt to the will of its participants. If you haven't heard of the Asian American Students Association before, stop by our office in room 415 of the Student Union (Monday through Friday from 10 A.M. to 3 P.M.) and find oput what we're about. We welcome everyone !

Being a member of the Asian American Students Association is an opportunity to share thoughts and ideas as Asians and Asian Americans. For many, it is a continuance of being in an all-Asian environment. For many others, it is a new and exciting experience to be in a room full af other Asians for the first time. We are all different yet we all share something in common. Why should you want to meet other Asians ? Because it is the only opportunity to meet slely with Asian people. Friends, who con really understand the experiences you're having at UMass and in this country as a minority.

Do I hear people saying that it's mid-terms ? Exams ? Papers ? Work ? "Don't feel like it ?" I understand--I too have exams and work and at times "don't feel like it". But with attitudes like this--AASA will not survive. If we all put in just a small amount of time and energy each week, we can still have fun, do our work and have o sense of pride in keeping AASA going.

As Asians, as a minority on this campus and in this country, we have an obligotion, not just to ourselves, to be o visible, viable and active student organization. I cannot stress the importance of the survivol of AASA enough. As individual Asians, we are limited to our abilities to shape events here at UMass. But united, os an association, we have much more power.

Remember, we as Asians and Asian Americans will deremine the existence of this very important and powerful student organization.

DROP CHARGES AGAINST CURTIS LEE ROBINSON

An all-white jury in Decatur, Alabama (the site where the Scottsboro Boys were held four decades ago) began hearing testimany September 30 in the trial of Curtis Lee Rabinsan, a black man accused of shaoting a Ku Klux Klonsman last year. The incident accurred when an armed mob af 50 to 75 Klansmen attacked a peaceful graup of black marchers in downtawn Decatur in May 1979 as they were protesting the frame-up conviction of black youth Tammy Lee Hines

Curtis Lee Rabinson, a 50-year-old black maintenance supervisor at Decatur City Holl is being tried for assault with intent to murder KKK "Exalted Cyclops" David Kelso who was wounded in the chest. His attorney told the jury that a Klonsman with a stick struck the first blaw and a police lieutemant testified he heard several Klansmen shout "kill the nigger" just befare the gunshots were fired. A KKK military commando squad, ominously training for "race war" in the Alabama hills, says it will retaliate in blood if Rabinsan is nat convicted (New York Times, 28 September).

POLICE BRUTALITY VICTIM SENTENCED

A Black police brutality victim who was subsequently convicted for weapons possession was given a sentence of forty months to five years in prison Sept. 15.

Larry G. Guy was convicted by an all-white jury in Battle Creek, Michigan last August for carrying a concealed weapon. The conviction stemmed from a Battle Creek incident on June 17, 1979, in which Guy was beaten unconscious by 10-15 white cops. The incident was just one of a string of police brutality cases in Battle Creek in recent years (Guardian, sept. 3).

After the sentencing, Guy's attorney, Carl Edwards, said he was planning a national campaign to publicize cases of police terror against Blacks.

ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

MANAGUA, Nicaragua -- Daniel Ortega, a member of the Nicaraguan Government, said democratic elections will be held in 1985, as the country has recovered from the devastation heaped on it by the ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza Debayle.

He said, "For the Sandinista Front (the organization that led the war ofliberation), democracy isn't just in politics. It's not reduced to just elections. It means public participation in politics, economics, social and cultural affairs. While the people are taking part in this range of activities, there will be more democracy."

Mr. Ortega said, "Democracy begins with economic order. When workers and farm laborers are improving their lives, the real democracy begins."

SABOTEURS EXECUTED

LUANDA, Angola -- Twenty-five saboteurs belonging to Jonas Savimbi's South African backed National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) have been executed by the Angolan Government.

The People's Revolutionary Tribunal found them guilty of "belonging to a recently dismantled network of bombers" who caused "a high number"of civilian deaths.

UNITA has vowed to explode 10 bombs for every execution. Its members belonged to one of six groups broken up in late 1979. They hit mainly civilian and peasant market places.

Many Africans believe UNITA is acting for South Africa and Western multinational corporations.

PROTESTS HALT EXECUTION

Pressured by a growing international and domestic outcry, South Africa has commuted the death sentence of a young African National Congress (ANC) guerilla. James Mncedisi Mange, 25, has instead upon appeal been sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Mange was convicted of treason last year, but no specific charges were leveled against him and he was not accused of firing a single shot. Since the trial he has spent 10 months on death row in Pretoria Central Prison. His 11 codefendants, sentenced with him last November, are serving a total of 184 years. They showed their solidarity with Mange by shouting, "Rather kill us all" when the death sentence was pronounced.

The trial was marked by refusal of the accused to cooperate with the racist judicial procedure. They sang freedom songs in the courtroom and smuggled placards into the dock protesting apartheid injustice.

The Pretoria government has been assailed with international protests at the death sentence. The campaign was organized by the ANC abroad as part of its broader campaign for freedom for political prisoners and for captured guerrillas to be treated as prisoners of war. This is a status they are now accorded under the Geneva Convention but which Pretoria refuses to respect.

Inside South Africa, Mange's family--particularly his wife and 4-year-old son--were at the center of a mushrooming protest movement. This reached a high point in August when the South African Council of Churches (SACC)called for nationwide church vigils as the Bloemfontein Appeals Court met to consider Mange's appeal against the death sentence.

The SACC stated, "We wish to uphold Mange in our prayers and hope that church ministers throughout the country will open their doors to the people for this purpose. There is a need for black people in particular to pause and uphold Mange in prayers."

Also this week, South Africans Ciskei bantustan has been the scene of violent school demonstrations against racist "bantu" education. A headmaster was reportedly stoned to death by angry school children and Ciskei government minister Chief Lennox Sebe blamed the violence on Pretoria's closing down of schools in neighboring Port Elizabeth and Uitenhage, an act which he said had inflamed the local situtation.

Last week schoolchildren also took to the streets of the white mining town of Kimberly and plundered wealthy homes. In Southern Cape Province, meanwhile, thousands of black students continued

HAITIANS FLEE TO U.S.

MIAMI, Florida -- Haitians fleeing the regime of Haitian President for Life Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier are still coming to the United States, averaging several hundred a week.

This fact is unknown to many Americans since the news media does not focus on them as it did the Cubans.'

The heavy Coast Guard presence around South Florida has not deterred the Haitians. In fact, the cutter Durable recently picked up 355 Haitians who were rescued from three leaky boats and brought them to Miami. Some were as much as 100 miles out to sea.

The Durable first came across a rickety 50-foot sailboat jammed with 239 Haitians near the Cay Sal Banks, about 130 miles south of Miami and about 45 miles north of the central Cuban coast.

They were taken off because a storm was approaching, their boat was unseaworthy and grossly overloaded," a Coast Guard officer said.

While transporting the first group of Haitians towards Miami, the Durable sighted two more Haitian refugee craft north of Cay Sal, the Coast Guard said. The spokesman said 33 Haitians were taken off a 20-foot boat and 83 off a 30-footer.

COMMENTARY

by Curtis Haynes

I was rapping with a brother the other day, and we got off into a conversation about the sixties. Although bath of us were children at the time we were able to remember a few things. Steve come up with the phrase, "when the revalution carnes, who's side will you be on•" Well, that sent my mind off into the past. I wandered, why were they saying that then• I mean this was a common phrase, not something said by some "off the wall radical". Then I thought back to other things which happened in the sixties. For exomple, I remember seeing the older brothers salute each other with a clenched fist, while saying "more power to you, brother". I remember fists, painted on the walls, along with slogans such as "Black Power", "Block is Beautiful", and I remember those Red, Black and Green flags. They were everywhere.

Then all of a sudden it was gone. All the open flaunting of pride and power. It disappeared. For ten years I never really questioned the disappearence, not until now.

The sixties were a time when blacks thought that their problems were receiving attention by the American Society. Blacks were acting as if the times had changed for the better, as if they had finally broken free from their chains. They were right in one respect, for America was watching a new wave of "Black Nationalism" spread across the nation. But America was scared and they waged an undeclared war against Black Americans. They silenced the voices which were preaching complete change of the current racist system, while at the same time they sold Black Americans the more acceptable voices of intergrationists, and assimilationists. These "Black leaders" were saying that the sixties were times of the greatest social advancement. However, the sixties were a time that saw an increase in Black Capitalism, and a large growth of the Black bourgeosie, which led to an increased division among the Black population. For the masses of the Black people things are getting progresively worse, compared to the majority white population, with higher unemployment rates, inflation rates, lower government fundings, deteriorating neighborhoods, etc, etc, etc.

Naw I know why I no longer see a Black Power Fist. The masses of Black people know that the sixties was just a illusion ofchange, and in reality black people still do nat have the power. Nar will they have the power as long as they remain an appressed African-American natian, within the borders of the U.S.A.

Blacks Slain in Buffalo

Paranaia has struck the East Side after six Black men were slain in the Buffala area. Authorities report attacks an whites being made in the predominantly black neighborhoods. A task farce of black officers is being formed by palicemen Clifton Jones and Danny Owens in order to track down the killer ar killer s of six black men in the past three weeks.

Ballistic tests showed the first four victims were shot in the left side of their heads with the same .22 caliber weapon as in Buffalo, Niagara Falls and suburban cheektowogo during a 36 hour period September 22--24. Police state that witnesses described the killer as a yo9ung white man.

Two taxi drivers, the most recent victims, were found slain this week, "one bludgeoned to death and the other with his throat slashed.,' It is repoerted that the hearts of both victims were cut out after they had died.

District Attarney Edward Cosgrovr has said that there was no evidence toi connect the last two murders with the first faur. However, he said that it was probable that the first four slayings "tauched off" the last two.

State troopers are still investigating the case, while city Black leaders say a mood af anger is spreading descendents of Japanese immigrants have become very succesful farmers. A number af Japanse Americans are now outstanding photagraphers, architects, and professors in American universities".(America: Its People and Values,page 561)

ASIAN AMERICAN HISTORY

Reality

Japanese Americans are often described as "successful" and, like the Chinese Americans, as a "model minarity". Such descriptians abscure the realities of continued oppression against Japanese Americans, and they serve the racist purpose af pitting one minarity group against anather. The existence of Asian American ghettos belies the claim of success. Japanese Americans are sametimes called "Technical Coolies" because those who have advanced con anly go so far, being excluded from the better and higher-paying jabs. In Nihonmanchi, the Japanese equivalent af Chinatown, elderly Issei (first-immigrant-generation) and Nisei (second generotian-barn in the U.S.) are often denied necessary sacial services. Among the Sansei (third generation-children of the Nisei), drugs hove been an acute problem. All of these problems are obscured by the rhetaric of success.

COSMONAUT

He and his comrades participated in cauntless activities in the heart of Sierro Maestra; building schools, camps and housing projects. They did this without abondoning their awn studies.

On December 1960 his group received an invitation to receive o course on aviation technician. The training begon with a course on general education at the Rebel Armies School in Jaimanitas, Havana.

Months later he joined the Aviotion School as he decided to become a pilot. On April 1961, several days after the invition of Playa Giron consisting of U.S. trained and armed mercenaries, the group of students af the Aviation School left for the Soviet Union to be trained as pilots in a one year crash program that would enoble them to reinforce the nascent Revolutionary Air Farce.

A yeor later he returned to Cubo, assigned to the Playa Giron Brigade of the Guard; transferred to the central region of Cuba and afterwards selected as one in a group of Cuban candidates to become cosmanauts. The process of selecting these candidates included several intensive medical tests, trainings, flying experience, and same knowledge of the Russian language.

Of the first nine selected, four left to the Soviet Unian on January 1978, where they spent the last days of this month in multiple tests and more medical examinations.

Of these nine men two were chosen: Colonel Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez and Captain Jose Armando Lopez Falcon.

The importance of this joined Soviet-Cuban space research is not only of scientific value, but also an example of how international relationships are directed as to benefit the interests and necessities of various countries.

Vladimir Liakhov cosmanaut and hero of the Soviet Union said that he was convinced that in the future, cosmanauts from several countries including non-socialists will take part in Saviet space projects.

On a message from Fidel Castro to the cosmonauts he points; "the results of your work in space will greatly contribute to the progress of science and technology, it will help in carrying out the tasks of the national economy of the U.S.S.R., Cuba and the other sister socialists nations."

Arnaldo Tamaya- "very determined, with great capacity for work, kind and with a good sense of humor", as described by Russian crew Commandor Yuri Romanenko is not only the first Cuban, but also the first Latin American cosmonaut on a project of this caliber.

"Only socialism and socialist internationalism make it possible for a young black man from Guantanamo, of such humble origin to be the first in our country and the first in Latin America to go into space." Raul Castro.

PUERTO RICO: NO TO THE REFUGEE INVASION

By : Hector Biaggi and Carmen Toleda
Patria Libre Committee

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO— With the news that the Carter Administration is going to move thausands of Cuban and Haitian refugees from Florida to Fort Allen in Puerto Rico, the Puerta Rican people have united in a common front to stap this unilateral, abusive, and imperialis decision. Not only the people have united in this comman effort, but also gavernmental agencies have taken an active stance against this unbelievable situation.

The "Comité del Pueblo Unido", an argonization integrated by 42 organizations and a membership of 100,000 persons, has announced that there is a possibility of a general strike in protest of this action. Thousands of Puerto Ricans marched through the Federal Courts in condemnation of the President's order.

"The Puerta Rican people da not want a cancentration camp in Juana Díaz", expressed the leader of the mass movement, Angel Luis Camacho, President of the Puerta Rican Bar Assaciation. He pointed out that no matter what Federal Court decision is issued, the Puerta Rican people will stap the "most arrogant, repressive, and unilateral action since the North American invadion of 1898."

"This one sided and oppresive decision affects all Puerto Ricans of all political parties, whose life horizons will be n limited with the presence in Puerto Rico a new, instantaneous, massive, and nu welcome Cuban immigration. From here it follows that party politics is going to be totally excluded," Camacho said.

"We repudiate the incapacity showed up to naw by the Government of Puerto Rico in frant af the problem created by President Carter. We are repugnated by his cynism, by which he wants to resolve his electoral problems dumping the Cuban refugees in Puerta Rico. Our main preoccupation is that the Government of Puerto Rico, whatever reasons they might have, have tried first to conceal and later to justify the mavement of the Cuban refugees. We are proposed to do what our gavernment has failed to do: Defend our people."

"Our first petition to President Carter is to revoque his decision and to stop immediately the movement of refugees to Puerto Rico. We demand Gavernar Romero Barcelo to hear the people's voice and to immediately arrange a General Assembly for the expression of the people's will against the abusive decree of President Carter."

The leader also said that President Carter has rolled aver our people as well as over the Cuban refugees. These went to the United States in search of a better life based on the opportunity of employment, and education that exists there. To bring them to Puerta Rico signifies then that these opportunities will be denied to them in the same way that vast sectors of our population are now deprived.

In addition, the colonial government has taken action on this issue. On the first of October, the Environmental Quality Board ordered that the construction of facilities at Fort Allen be immediately suspended, in an attempt to stop the relocation of the human cargo. Initially this proposition was not accepted by the Navy, who said that "the Commonwealth Government has no jurisdiction over military grounds." It was last Thursday, however, that the Federal Courts issued a "temporary" restraining order to block Carter's decision.

The decision to move the Cuban and Haitian refugees was based mainly an palitical considerations. As the election comes closer, political pressures from Arkansas and Florida have influenced Carter's decision to move the refugees to a territary that cannat affect his re—election effarts.

In our country there is a high unemployment rate, more than official statistics say. The educational resources are inferiar to the true necessities of the people, teachers and students. Alsa the Health services, transportatian, palice, and the penitentiary as well as the rehabilitatian institutians are deficient. Puerto Rico is a colony and we have neither voice nor vote in the internatianal arena. One of our committee's main tasks is to inform the Five—College Area community of issues concerning Puerto Rico's colonial status; to expand and promate the struggle for Puerta Rican independence.

1980's: Turning point for Puerto Rico

BY ARGEO QUINONES

On November 4 of this year once more the people of Puerto Rico will participate in the electoral process. But this year this process which traditionally only determined the administration of the country for the forthcoming 4 years, assumes a new and critical dimension; for today, like never before, elections are intimately connected with the question of the Island's political status. The New Progressive Party (PNP), the one in power, has made it clear that if it wins the elections, it will call for a referendum where the people of Puerto Rico will have to determine whetherto become a state or an independent country.

The determination of the present government to give the final push to the annexation process of the country is manifested in its intention of having the Commonwealth formula excluded from the possibilities of status choices which the people of Puerto Rico will confront if the referendum takes place.

For the Popular Democratic Party (PPD)(pro-commonwealth party) this election will, certainly, be decisive for its future existence as a real political force in the country. If it wins the elections it can be interpreted not just as a repudiation of the statehood drive but as an example of the ambivalance which exists among the electorate concerning the Island politics. A victory for this party in this election can be seen, at most, as a short term loan, of political trust and one with very high interest. The total control which this party had over the island's politics has been progressively eroded by the growth of the prostatehood focus during the last twenty-eight years. Precisely the twenty-eight years of existence of the Commonwealth formula. From 1940 to 1968 it could be said the (PPD) had a virtual monopoly over the state machinery, Nevertheless, during this same period the process whereby the prostatehood forces were to grow to the level of today, took place feeding precisely from the very conditions in which the United States--Puerto Rico relations were defined in the Organic Act 600, the one creating the Commonwealth.

In 1968 for the first time the PPD lost the elections due to a split in the party between former governor Robert Sanchez Vilella and Party founder and head Luis Munoz Marin. The PNP won by a very narrow margin nevertheless, indicating its growing strength in the country s political scene. In 1972 PPD regained control of the government but not for too long. The realities of the 73-74 recession, coupled with the growing fiscal indebtedness of the country led the PPD to adopt a wide series of unpopular economic measures. This together with the harsh repression unleashed over the University of Puerto Rico 1976 student and worker's strike brought down once more the PPD government.

So after twelve years of zig-zagging politics the people of Puerto Rico will visit once more the urns. But this time with the added experience of having gone through the administrations of the two main parties, and with the prospects of a not-too-distant solution to the status question.

As for the Puerto Ricanleft the importance of this election cannot be underestimated. A victory for the PNP will imply a further escalation of the repressive measures, which this party has already put into effect. Covering the execution of two pro-independence and socialists fighters on July 25, 1978 at Cerro Maranilla, the assasination in a Florida prison of Angel Rodriquez Cristobal, 2nd General Secretary of the Puerto Rican Socialist League, on November II, 1979 and the recent assasination of two persons listed as suspects by the FBI in the underground operative leading to the death of two U.S. marines in direct response to Rodriquez Cristobal's death, the message is clear for the left.

The present government will try to consolidate its power and part of this strategy is to destroy the leftist opposition, the only viable long-term opposition to statehood. Furthermore, the necessity of the present government of consolidating its political control over the island, arises not only from the internal dynamics of the Puerto Rican society but also from the logic of events and the balance o power in the greater Caribbean region. In the next part I will proceed to briefly expose what I think are the most important elements in the political panorama of the region and argue about the connection that exists between the different and apparently isolated events which have taken place recently in the region. Lastly in the continuation of this article I will discuss the possible solutions which exist for the Puerto Rican question of and how this solution relates to the present state of the puertorrican society and economy.

PUERTO RICO § THE CARIBBEAN

Despite the U.S. attempts to make of the puertorican question an "internal" question the very nature of the case evades such illusory conception. What happens in Puerto Rico affects the rest of the Caribbean and vice versa. To understand the organic connection which exists between the many members of the Archipielago enough is to look at the brutal manner in which the U.S. intervened in Santo Domingo in 1965 when to break the chains of oppression. For the U.S. at that moment the possibility of having two progressive governments--Cuba and Santo Domingo--in the Caribbean was inadmissable.* But of course, things change and the U.S. and the Caribbean of today are not the same of the 60s.

The U.S. has entered the 80s internally debilitated and loosing its traditional grip on the international situation. While in the Caribbean the apparent stability has been shattered by the triumph of the Nicaraguan and Granadian revolution, Civil War in El Salvador and the potentials for complete radical change in Jamaica.

However to claim that U.S. power today is weak compared to the 60s is not to say that it does not exist. We can expect that at any rate, the U.S. will try to stop change and where this is not possible it will try to direct it as is the case with the manipulation of aid funds for Nicaragua and the conditions which the IMF imposes on its client countries. Furthermore, because it is loosing control we can expect drastic attempts from the U.S. to maintain - and if possible to regain - control over certain countries. In this context the assasination of Walter Rodney in Guyana, the life attempt against prime Minister Maurice Bishop and his cabinet in Granada and the aborted coup de tat in Jamaica, all events a occurring between the 13th and 22nd of June of this year, are clear examples of the obstacles which progressive change is finding and will continue to find in the region.

We must add also that these patterns of instability in the Caribbean are found too in Santo Domingo where rioting erupted early in June of this year because of worsening living conditions, just shortly after a high ranking U.S. military official visited the island with the purpose of "tightening up" the armed forces of that country. Recently a group of Haitian exiles denounced an agreement between Duvallier's government and that of Santo Domingo according to which the latter would provide military assistance in case that insurrection erupts in Haiti.

So it is in this chain of events that the upcoming elections in Puerto Rico must be seen. Regardless of what party wins, the New Progressive or Popular Democratic, the strategy in Puerto Rico is to consolidate U.S. control over the island--politically and economically.

FOOTNOTES

1. Commonwealth-synonymous of the special formula which ties U.S. and Puerto Rico i.e. the "free and associated state" or in few words a colony. Since 1917 the people of Puerto Rico are U.S. citizens.

2. By Greater Caribbean I want to include not only the whole Archipielago in the Caribbean Sea but Central America as well.

3. IMF-International Monetary Fund. International Agency who lends money to developing country. Notorious for perpetuating dependency of Third World countries on developed ones like U.S., Germany, etc., and for its active involvement in the political events of its client countries.

Public Hearing on WFCR Issue

October 16

Within the next two weeks, the UMass Trustees, Chancellor Koffler, and Public Affairs Director Daniel Melley will be making a final decision with regards to the renewal or non—renewal of Robert Goldforb's contract as General Manager of WFCR. The hispanic community and its supporters have been waging o long and hard struggle to reinstate and maintain Spanish—languoge programming on public radio WFCR. These efforts have been coordinated by various community and student organization representatives grouped within the coalition.

It is the position of the Coalition that by his rash, deceptive, and racist actions affecting Spanish—language programming,Robert Goldfarb has done nothing to further communications between the community and the station. He has not respected the work of advisory boards farmed to serve as liasons between the public and the station; furthermore, he has lied to the public and manipulated public information to serve his own interests.

We strongly encourage everyone to support this 10— month long and continuing struggle to maintain public involvement in public radio by writing a brief letter to Daniel Melley (Dir. of Public Affairs, Whitmore Adm. Building, U.Mass) demonding the non—renewal of Robert Goldfarb's .contract. It is vital that the decision—makers be reminded of the community's presence and awareness of the facts.

It is extremely urgent that everyone shows his suppost for Hispanic rights and community access to media at the Public Hearing on this situotion. This important event is being held in Amherst at the Bangs Community Center (behind the Yellow Sun Food Coop, to the right) on Oct. 16th at 7 p.m. We cannat emphasize enaugh the urgency and importance of a strong community presence at this event, especially since there will be a large press coverage.

Public Radio for the People!

CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

On April 3, 1980, after a 53-hour peaceful sit-in of the Chancellor's office, and with Chancellor Koffler as a witness, an agreement was reached between representatives of the Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio and the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council. In this document the WMBC affirmed a committment to Hispanic programming on public radio WFCR and offered:

--to restore Que Tal, Amigos to 4 nights a week from 7 to 8 pm.
--to entrust an advisory board to consider the future of Hispanic programming
--to take into account the concerns of the Coalition.
--to pledge adequate funding and professional staffing for high quality Hispanic programming
--to fill 3 positions on the WMBC with minorities by June I.
--WMBC to live up to its supervisory role with regards to the general manager

*June 17 Goldfarb unilaterally eliminates Que Tal, Amigos and creates a different program to be aired Sundays at 7 pm and Mondays at I pm.

*This program, "La Hora Hispana", a taped program, prepared by Goldfarb's staff, airs for the first time, on July 2. Protestors picketed outside WFCR at Hampshire House.

*July II, Coalition representatives meet with Goldfarb and demand an immediate commencement of a search for a full-time producer of Hispanic programming. Goldfarb agrees in principle, however Goldfarb does not act on this until September 17th, he states also that 2 hours of programming is "sufficient".

*September 10, Area newspapers announce that Goldfarb's contract "might not be renewed". The decision to not renew his contract was recommended by the WMBC in June but not made public until this date. The recommendation was made as a result of his decision to eliminate Que Tal, Amigos without consultation with public representative, the Hispanic Advisory Board, or the WMBC.

*Western Mass. Broadcasting Council meeting held in Springfield, 5:30 pm. Coalition members are not allowed to speak because they are not "pre-registered". WMBC has yet filled only one minority position; still no Hispanic representation. It is announced that the next WMBC meeting will take place in Brattleboro, VT. at 5:30 pm October 22. Up to this time, WMBC meeting have been held in the 5-College area.

*WFCR was mandated by law in 1978 to form a Community Advisory Board. The Board meets for the first time September 9. There is no Hispanic representation on the Board.

*Oct. 16 a public hearing is scheduled by the Community Advisory Board to hear public opinion regarding Spanish-language programming at WFCR.

Currently, WFCR's format exists totally without any locally produced Third World programming. The programs on the air, that purport to serve minority listeners--particularly in the area of Hispanic programming--are aired at erratic times and without regard for the diversity of listeners among the Hispanic population. Moreover, the choice of programs that are aired is not determined by Hispanics, but instead by those same elements that have been incapable of recognizing the Hispanic community's needs all along--the all-white decision-makers of WFCR.

Todos a la Vista Publica jueves 16

Dentra de das semanas se decidira si sera renavado el contrato de Robert Goldfarb, el gerente de la emisara publica de radio WFCR-FM. Esta decision sera hecha par el Canciller de lo Universidad y su director de asuntos publicos.

La camunidad hispano y las que la apayan han estada luchando desde el ano pasada para la restauracion y permanencia de programacion hispana en WFCR. Estos esfuerzos han sido coardinados por el Coalition far Public Invalvement in Public Radia, el cual agrupo a representantes de varias organizaciones estudiantiles y de la camunidad.

Es la pasicion de la Coalicion que Robert Goldfarb, con sus acciones manipuladoras, falaces, precipitadas y racistas, na ha hecha nada para mejarar la comunicacion entre la camunidad y WFCR. Goldfarb no ha respetado el rol de las juntas consultivas que se formaran para servir de enlace entre el publica y la emisora. Ademas ho enganado y manipulado la infarmacion publica para servir sus prapios intereses.

Esta lucha ya lleva diez meses y necesita su apayo y participacion. Se necesita que gente escriba breves cartas a Daniel Melly (Public Affairs Director, Whitmore Bldg., UMass, Amherst 01003), exigiendo que no le renueven el contrato a Goldfarb. Es vital que los que hacen las decisianes vean que la camunidad esta al tanto de lo que pasa.

Habra una audiencia public sobre la cuestion de WFCR el 16 de octubre (jueves). Sera en el Bangs Community Center, que queda detras del Yellow Sun Faod Coap. Es extremedamente urgente que tengamos una presencia grande y combativa en esa audiencia.

Habra mucha prensa ese dia y tenemos que demostrar que a los hispanos nos imparta tener aceso a los medios de comunicacion. Estos mamentas son muy criticos para el futuro de pragramacion hispana en WFCR y nos tenemas que mover.

CRONOLOGIA
DEL PROBLEMA CON WFCR

3 de abril, 1980: Después de 53 horas termina la ocupación pacífica de la oficina del Canciller Koeffler de UMass. La Coalición para la Participación en la Radio Pública llega a un acuerdo, del que es testigo el mismo Koeffler, con la Junta de Radiodifusiónde1 Oeste de Mass. (Western Mass. Broadcasting Council). En el documento resultante WMCB reafirma su dedicación a mantener programación hispana en WFCR (Five Colleges Radio), la estación de radio pública de Amherst, y además ofrece:

- -Volver a poner Que Tal Amigas• 4 noches a la semana de 7 a 8 de la noche.
-Encargar a la junta consejera para programacion hispana que haga un estudia sobre el futuro de dicha programacion.
-Tener en cuenta las abjetivas de la Coalicion.
-Garantizar fandos suficientes y personal profesional para producir un programa hispano de alta calidad.
-nombrar tres personas minoritarias al WMBC antes del 1 de junio.
-ejercer con autoridad su tarea (de WMBC) de supervisar al gerente de WFCR.

17 de junio: Goldfarb elimina Que Tal Amigos? y lo sustituye por algo llamada La Hora Hispana.

6 de julio: Comienza La Hora Hispana. Es un programa horrible que ni siquiera tiene un locutor, que se va a emitir los domingos a las 7 y los lunes a la 1. La comunidad se manifiesta frente a las emisora WFCR para protestar.

II de julio: Los representantes de la Coalición se reúnen con Goldfarb y exigen que se busque inmediatamente un productor de programas hispanos. Goldfarb está de acuerdo pero hasta el I7 de septiembre no actúa. En la misma reunión mantiene que dos horas de programas hispanos es bastante.

9 de septiembre: La Junta Consultiva de la Comunidad se reúne por primera vez. La ley exigía su formación en 1978. Por dos años se ha ignorado la ley. No hay representatntes de la comunidad hispana en esta Junta.

10 de septiembre se anuncia en la prensa local que es posible que no se le renueve el contrato a Goldfarb. La recomendación emaa de WMBC y se decidió en junio porque Goldfarb había eliminado Que Tal Amigos? sin consultar previamente ni al Público ni a la junta consultiva hispana, ni al propio WMBC.

15 de septiembre: el WMBC se reúne en Springfield a las 5:30. Se niega el micrófono a los miembros de la Coalición porque no se han inscrito previamente. Sólo hay una persona minoritaria en WMBC, ningún hispano. Se anuncia la próxima reunión: Brattleboro, Vermont, el 22 de octubre a las 5:30. Hasta ahora todas las reuniones han sido en el área.

16 de octubre: la Junta Consultiva de la Comunidad tendrá una vista publica a las 7 en el Bangs Community Center. Quieren oír la opinion del publico sobre la programacion hispana.

Actualmente WFCR no tiene ningún programa tercermundista producido localmente. Los programas que se emiten, especialmente los hispanos, aparecen en horas insospechables, son de baja calidad y no tienen en cuenta ni los gustos ni la diversidad de nuestra comunidad. Los programas no estan producidos por hispanos sino por los mismos elementos que han ignorado las necesidades de la comunidad, insultado su inteligencia y despreciado su cultura, los elementos racistas que controlan la radio.

Anuncio

Este miércales 15 de octubre a las 6:45 habrá una audiencia pública para decidir si el servicio de transportación pública será extendida a las camunidades de Hampton Gardens y Florence Heights. Esta reunión será definitiva.

VOLCANO:

AN AFRICAN PHENOMENON

Ask not to be surprised if volcanoes and Africans disrupt in harmony;
cast no superior glance,
no least grimace of disdain:
WHEN WATER GOES PAST BOIL
THE POT WILL BREAK.

A wise man told me twice a world on fire is a world on ice a world on fire is a world on ice and I have screwed my eyes down tunnels red beautiful and rose velvet perfect, climbed a ladder of vision for mountain peak previews of the scream/screenplay

I will have grown cold, grown cold as love in aspic and mammy liberty will be pure rust, plate tectonics an ancient art when motion and moment merge and volcano and African sit on the verge of a reality called satisfaction.

Ask not to be surprised the morning the Africans and the volcanoes belch ash in your eye, the volcanoes/the Africans belch ash in your eye;

you couldn't have thought,
but you did, but you did not think, but you should have, but you should have thought not to think justice could be a virgin forever.

Regents vote against student representative

By NANCY ANDERSON
Collegian Staff
and Associated Press

BOSTON — Despite a passionate plea by former Gov. Foster Furcolo and heavy lobbying by student groups, the state Board of Regents voted yesterday against having a student among its ranks.

The recently created board, which takes over control of the states 31 campuses March 1, voted 8-5 to recommend that student positions be created only for lesser boards in the new system. Those panels will have only advisory powers.

"It's clearly been stated that the Regents feel that students should not have a voice in their lives."
—SGA Co-President, Richard Moran

"The fears we've had have been put into effect," said Richard Moran, co-president of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA), "It's clearly been stated that the Regents feel that students should not have a voice in their lives."

"I think it's ludicrous to hold the belief that students don't have valuable insight and expertise that could add to the decision making of the Regents," he said.

William Field, UMass Dean of Students, agreed.

"It's extremely important for Regents to have present someone who is a student that will help them to understand the issues of students," he said. "It's regrettable that the board does not realize that they could benefit from having a student."

A vote on the student representation issue had been deferred at the board's meeting last month. Student leaders who met over the weekend vowed to try to get the Legislature to award them a regent seat if the Regents themselves balk at the idea.

Yesterday's action means the regents will ask Gov. Edward J. King for a bill that would relegate students to a lower rung of power—the boards representing various segments of the system, such as the University of Massachusetts.

"Yesterday's decision is not final, but only a recommendation to the governor," said Richard LaVoice, UMass representative to the Board of Trustees. "We want a full voting member on the Board, and that will be determined through legislation."

The plan was presented by David J. Beaubien of Sudbury, who argued that a student regent would face a conflict of interest and would not be able to fairly represent 165,000 students in Massachusetts.

"The main reason why Beaubien's argument isn't any good is that students have dealt with these issues before and have been successful," said LaVoice. "For example, in the past, community colleges have 15 schools that have board of Trustees and one student represents them. It would only be on a larger scale now."

But Furcolo argued that students should be represented because they are the prime consumers in the education system.

"Students have proven their case. They've established that they can handle responsibility, that they're not without experience."

"Over the years I've found student representation to be effective and I've had very good experiences with them," said UMass chancellor Henry Koffler. "I've always been in favor of student representation on both the Board of Regents and the Board of Trustees, and I still feel that way."

"I think it's the single most important issue confronting us," said Furcolo. "It's important that they have trust in us. It's a golden opportunity to extend a hand to the students and say, 'We accept you.'

"It's regrettable that the board does not realize that they could benefit from having a student."
—Dean of Students, William Field

Beaubien countered that accepting a student regent would open the door for other special interest groups to demand seats on the 15-member board.

"We're definitely not going to quit now," said Kenneth Moore, head of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's Public Policy Team at UMass, "As soon as legislation is drafted we will be very involved with State Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) making every effort to make sure representation happens."

"I think it's inevitable that some sort of representation will be made in the future," said Dean Field.

GSS endorses proposition 7

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate voted last night to endorse voting yes on a referendum proposing a moratorium with Russia, to end production and testing of nuclear weapons.

The referendum, Proposition 7, which will appear on the Nov. 4 ballot would urge state senators to request a resolution in the U.S. Senate to ask the President to propose the moratorium.

By showing support of the referendum, the Graduate Student Senate hopes to make some statement to the public on limiting the arms race, said GSS president Jack Delmond.

The Senate also voted unanimously to make a recommendation to the Graduate School for better use of program fees.

The program fee is a sum of $50 paid by graduate students who are enrolled at the University but are not taking courses. The fee holds on to the student's admission slot during leave of absence.

Literary magazine elects new staff

By JULIE GEANAKAKIS
Collegian Correspondent

Spectrum, the Five College art/literary magazine adopted new methods of production yesterday with the election of a new managerial staff and the submission of a new constitution that will be formally approved by the Student Senate this week.

Spectrum was having difficulties being recognized as a student organization because the previous constitution submitted to the Senate after 1970 was never approved. Stephen Thomas, newly-elected photography editor for the 13 year old magazine said the document was lost, and therefore never reached the Senate. "Spectrum's new constitution is more cohesive and coherent than the previous documents which were vague and lacked coherence", said Melodie Wertelet, Spectrum's new managing editor.

Other new officers are Seth Jacobson, Prose Editor; Christopher Castiglia, Poetry Editor; Josephine Race, Art Editor; and Susan Gladwin, Typset/Layout Editor.

Werelet said, "These elections were more exciting than the Presidential elections, and we will run Spectrum better than the U.S. Government." The closest contest was between the Poetry and Prose categories with three candidates per office and one write-in candidate for Poetry.

Other major changes promised by Spectrum editors is expansion of the magazine with more pages per issue plus cash prizes for the most outstanding submissions in each category. Spectrum is also soliciting more within the Five College community to bring in a wider scope of ideas and submissions and will produce at least two issues per year. The issues will be free to the public, upon its initial release. Thereafter, a nominal fee may be charged for each issue.

"With student submissions, the bureaucracy behind us, and a 25 member writing and production staff, this is going to be the best Spectrum on campus, and that's a promise," Wertelet said.

Student Senate board upholds invalidation

By KEN ROSS
Collegian Staff

The Senate Coordinating committee voted last night to uphold a decision invalidating the "sticker" campaign used by 30 candidates in last week's Commuter Senate elections.

A protest was filed by Student Government Association Attorney General Dana Collier because she felt that the election was not run in an "efficient and equitable manner" in light of a decision made by Government Affairs Chairman Diane Muellar. Muellar's decision declared the "stickers" appearing on ballots cast in the elections invalid on the grounds that they were illegal under Massachusetts State Election laws.

In a strongly worded statement, Collier charged that Muellar did not make Senate election rules clear to all candidates, questioned the applicability of State Laws to student elections and said her decision to invalidate the stickers was a "clear indication of a personal political bias."

Collier charged Muellar with saying that "the stickers were another example of LaVoice-Moran politics," and that Muellar was "not going to let them get away with it this time."

Muellar denied ever making the statement.

The two laws that Muellar cited in invalidating the stickers had to do with the size of the stickers, saying that they were too large, and the fact that candidate's names cannot appear twice on the ballot, which was the case with the majority of the sticker candidates.

SGA Co-president Rich Moran, supported Collier's protest saying that Muellar's decision was "based on Mass. Election Laws. I do not feel that we are under those laws. And if we are, why some laws and not others? Why isn't the election thrown out because there wasn't a police officer present when the law says there has to be?"

Committee members who voted to uphold Muellar's decision expressed concern, not so much over the legality of the stickers, but over the accusations made against Muellar.

"Just because she may or may not have made a wrong decision does not mean that she was politically motivated," said Committee member Joel Weissman.

"The stickers wouldn't have affected the outcome of the election," added Weissman. "If the stickers had been included it may have changed two of 34 seats."

Parents of Chad Green may choose to live in NH

CONCORD, N.H. — Action by New Hampshire against the parents of Chad Green, if they choose to live in the state, will depend on whether Massachusetts wants to pursue the case, Acting Attorney General Gregory Smith said yesterday.

Diana and Gerald Green, under contempt of court charges in Massachusetts for taking their son out of state for Laetrile cancer treatments, probably will live in New Hampshire, said Diana's mother, Betty Barton.

Smith said any action by his office is "speculatian at this point."

"Some other state would have to raise extraditian proceedings," he said, "and then we would handle the case as a standard extradition matter."

However, he said his office had not been contacted by afficials from any other state.

The Greens left Massachusetts in January 1979 after a court ardered them to submit Chad to chemotherapy treatments. Instead, they took Chad to Tijuana, Mexica, where he underwent treatment, including the use of Laetrile, until he died just shy af his fourth birthday.

Harvard biochemist shares Nobel Prize in chemistry

CAMBRIDGE — Walter Gilbert is a Harvard biochemist who managed to conduct groundbreaking basic research, find a potentially lucrative way to make money with it and win the Nobel Prize — all within five years.

Gilbert was one of three scientists to share the prestigious prize in chemistry yesterday for work unraveling the mysteries of genes, discoveries that have quickly been applied to create the new field of genetic engineering.

The research by Gilbert and the two co-winners — Paul Berg of Stanford and Frederick Sanger of Cambridge University in England — are being used to program comman bacteria to produce useful human chemicals to fight disease.

Ticket sales begin for new Massachusetts arts lottery

Governor Edward J. King (at podium) announces opening of Massachusetts' first in the nation arts lottery at ceremonies yesterday. Chalking an artistic rendering of the lottery ticket on the sidewalk is "Sidewalk Sam" Bob Guillemin of Needham.

BOSTON (AP) — Tickets went on sale yesterday for Masschusetts' first-in-the-nation arts lottery, expected to pump $2 million a year into arts projects throughout the state.

The first two $5 tickets were bought by Gov. Edward J. King at a ceremony outside the Statehouse.

The arts lottery, with one ticket good for faur weekly drawings, is expected to attract customers who don't ordinarily buy lottery tickets, said David Ellis, spokesman for the State Lottery Commission.

The regular weekly lottery tickets cost 50 cents; "instant game" tickets cost $1, and people can play the daily numbers game for 25 cents.

Ellis said the arts lottery is not expected to cut into proceeds from the other lottery games, which have been netting $4 million a week recently and grossed $162 million in 1979. Revenue fram these games goes to the cities and towns as general local aid.

Potential winnings with an arts lottery ticket include a $10,000 top prize in the first three weekly drawings in each four-week cycle and a $200,000 top prize in the fourth. The first drawing is scheduled Oct. 24.

"The objective is to generate additional revenue for arts in the cities and towns," said state lottery Director William Perrault. "It is for the enrichment of the culturol environment throughout Massachusetts."

Jacqueline O'Reilly, chairman of the state Arts Lottery Council, noted that unemployment among artists in Massachusetts is 40 percent and the new money will help keep artists working.

Legislation creating the lottery was approved last year. Cities and towns which set up arts councils will be eligible to receive funds from the lottery, starting next June.

Iran bombs Baghdad for first time in a week

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Iran's American-built jets yesterday bombed Baghdad for the first time in more than a week. Iraqi ground units shot their way slowly over marshy terrain in an effort to put the Iranian oil-refining city of Abadan under siege.

Iran claimed to have put down a Kurdish insurrection during two days of fighting along the Iran-Turkey frantier. And the Iranian Parliament was reported to have asked other Islamic and non-aligned nations to put pressure on Iraq to end the fighting as new mediatian efforts got under way.

AP correspondent Steve K. Hindy reported from the pontoon bridge that the Iraqis installed on the Karun River last week between Kharramshahr and Abadan that the invaders appeared to have mounted a siege of both cities.

He reported seeing four large fires burning on one side of the river. He quoted the Iraqi commander in the area as saying his sappers exploded the Abadan-Dezful-Ahwaz-Tehran pipeline at those four points. The pipeline normally carries refined oil products to Tehran.

Hindy said the Iraqis were clearly masters of the Khorramshahr-Ahwoz highway and railway on the western side of the river and the Ahwaz highway on the eastern side. He said he saw personnel carriers moving Iraqi troops toward the front.

An Iraqi military communique said 12 civilians were wounded in the air attack on Baghdad. A photographer in the Iraqi capital said a heavy plume of what looked like oil smoke could be seen over the section where oil installations are located.

Union president to orate in Thompson Hall

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Staff

William Winpisinger, President of the 982,000-member International Association of Machinists, AFL-CIO, will be speaking tonight in Thompson 106 at 7:30 p.m. Winpisinger has received much notoriety since rising to the union presidency in 1977 for his radical views.

Both Winpisinger, a self-proclaimed democratic socialist, and the IAM have taken strong positions againsl nuclear power and the arms race, while promoting studies and experiments to find feasible alternatives to each.

One of the many tough stands imposed by Winpisinger is getting the machinist Union not to tool up for war.

Winpisinger recently received national attention by walking out of the Democratic National Convention after President Carter's "binding delegate" amendment passed. He and his union have not as yet endorsed any candidate.

After the Camp David summit, Winpisinger created a stir by announcing he and his union would not support Jimmy Carter's re-election bid, because of the Administration's neglect of such domestic issues as national health insurance and tax reform.

"Wimp", the name by which he is popularly known, has tirelessly proclaimed his conviction that organized labor must move sharply to the left in its economic, social, and political approach. "Wimpy's the best thing that's happened to the labor movement in 25 years," said Attorney Joseph Rauh Jr., a longtime labor activist. "He's shaking up an inactive and apathetic movement."

Winpisinger did not graduate from high school. He became a diesel mechanic and slowly made his way up through the union ranks. A militant unionist, Winpisinger's expertise in collective bargaining propelled him upward. When he became union president, many of his peers found his politics a threat.

Area priest expresses liberal views

A local Catholic clergyman said yesterday he finds it difficult to agree with Catholic doctrine labeling artificial contraception sinful.

Father Joseph Quigley of the University of Massachusetts Newman Center is a member of the 71 percent of U.S. priests who donot consider the use of artificial contraception "intrinsically wrong."

That statistic was published in the October 3rd issue of The Catholic Observer, official publication of the Springfield Catholic diocese, and also said that nearly 80 percent of U.S. Catholic married women use contraceptives.

Quigley discussed in a recent interview the controversial questions facing Catholicism at the current Sixth World Synod of Bishops in Rome, including birth control, abortion, premarital sex, and the increasing number of marriage annulments.

The discussions of the synod has centered on the role of the Roman Catholic family in the modern world. The synod, the first since 1977 and the first since Pope John Paul II's election in 1978, will bring together 200 bishops from around the world in an attempt to make church government more responsive to parishioners.

He called the recommendation by Archbishop John R. Quinn of San Francisco that the church develop "a new approach to the teaching of contraception" " an exciting statement."

Synod delegate Quinn said there is an "immense problem for the church today" regarding teaching on contraception. "This is the real kind of information concerning Catholics in this country that needs to be communicated to the Vatican," said Quigley.

"I see the church's policy that the primary purpose of marriage as begetting children as the crux of the problem," Quigley said. "I don't know why we have to say this. I don't think it should be so."

Quigley, a priest at the Newman Center for 22 years, said he would support anyone who for health, economic, or emotional consideration chose to practice birth control because he believes that in "every age the church should reappraise what the purposes of marriage should be."

"No parishioner needs my permission to practice birth control," he said.

On premarital sex, Quigley said it is so prevalent because of a "terrific loneliness" in students. "They are seeking human warmth and this is definitely a need for men and women of all ages", he said. "They shouldn't initiate what they do not want to be responsible for," and that "one should be "damn particular" in the partner they choose.

Many men are just "too immature at this age," he said.

Quigley also attributed the rising number of anullments to a "terrible amount of immaturity." Emotional maturity is now considered an excusing factor in annullment for the first time in church history, according to Quigley.

"It is a blind spot in our education system that we don't deal with emotions and I feel attention here could help the problem," he said.

In 1973 there were 15,000 annullments granted by the church and in 1963 there were only 600 granted, according to Quigley.

Elvis Costello and the Attractions

New Elvis Costello recording shows artist's amazing versatility

Elvis Costello and the Attractions
Taking Liberties [Columbia]

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Once upon a time there was a need. This need arose from the then mundane quality of rock music. The big name rock'n'roll stars of the early seventies weren't producing anything substantial. Their music was becoming drab and calculated (witness: Yes, ELP, Tull, McCartney, etc.). It was lacking something, some spark of energy, of creative vigor. A new more vibrant sound was needed. Anarchy struck and from its ashes emerged Punk. New Wave came to life. The masses rediscovered Reggae. The need was satisfied.

Out of this musical resurgence came o young man full of energy and hurt. He sang songs of lost loves, desires and yearnings, societal mishaps, and neuroses. He sang for the common man. His name was (and still is) Elvis Costello. He is now approaching "big star" status. Yet his creativity remains.

Columbia Records has just released Taking Liberties, a compilation of Elvis Costello tunes. Some of the songs were previously unreleased, others were flip sides of British and American singles, all show Costello's amazing versatility.

Crammed onto this album are twenty songs (as on his previous album Get Happy!) covering a variety of moods and styles. All are quite good, some are outstanding.

Two of this album's finest cuts are country and westernish tunes entitled "Rodio Sweetheart" and "Stranger in the House." The softly wailing guitor of the latter is so melodic it is heartwarming. Noshville never had it so good.

One of Elvis' main concerns is one that we are all familiar with, that of lost love. This man can really put feeling into a ballad. "Just a Memory" is one of the most moving ballads sung by anyone in quite some time. "My Funny Valentine" is sung very gently, as any true love song should be.

Not to worry, there are many powerful rock'n'roll songs on this album. "Wednesday Week" is second only to "(I Don't Want to Go to) Chelsea" in solidness of beat. "Crawling to the U.S.A." does anything but crawl, it really moves.

Costello's best attribute, even overshadowing his wide versatility of style, is his voice. His vocals, strengthened by their nasal qualities, cover a range of feelings. At many times he is barely audible, giving note to his powers of compassion and pain.

In an acoustic version of "Black and White World" Elvis sings; "you've seen the film and you've read the book." Now hear the album.

Artists Bring Reality

Works of art created from several media by three artists involved in the Artists-in-Residence Program at the Studio Museum in Harlem, will be on exhibit at the Augustus Savage Memorial Art Gallery located in New Africa House until Friday, October 24th.

The artists Candace Hill-Montgomery, Jacqui Holmes and Louis Delsartes were present at the reception given last Friday, October 10th, which successfully opened the exhibit to the University.

Each artist possesses a different philosophy on life which they skillfully convey through their craft.

Candace Hill-montgomery seems to me a very powerful artist. She produces work that she believes is an inspiration of social and political factors. To express her messages several media are utilized. By integrating these media, Hill-Montgomery has devised some very original and interesting works of art. ONe creation of hers wos the paper-jumpsuit. This jumpsuit mode from light-weight paper and designed with pictures, mirrors and glitter would moke on attractive addition to anyone's wordrobe.

"It's nice to see people walking around with your design on," soys Hill-Montgomery. It's olso inexpensive and non-traditional.

Her works are constructed of photographs, words, and paint.

Hill-Montgomery's tribute to Eldridge Cleaver entitled Evaporated Euphonies, is an arrangement of ceramic dots, photos, momentas and words empiled together to produce a melody of animated lyrics. Hill-Montgamery's works often deol with weapons and violence. "I'm trying to instill o fierceness in our people, so that we can overcome the racism oraund us," she said, "we have to be built strongly, cuddling and sweet gestures won't do it."

Unlike Hill-Montgomery's social approach to art, Louis Delsarte tries to capture transcience, according to on article in Voice. He also prefers o world that he can privotely project. A portroyal of this philosophy may be seen in the title, Within the Abyss Choos Becomes Order. He feels thot he can show more power in his drawing by using block and white monotones, since, color tends to bring out o softness within him.

Delsarte's efforts ore currently being directed toword o series of twenty-one eloborote drowings which he hos entitled, Parts of Dreams. Severol drawings from this series were on display at the exhibit. Some of these include: Walking Post Silent Dreams, Memories of o Masked Escapade, and my favorite, Blue Days of Yesterday. All ore done in block and white ond are very moving.

Mr. Delsarte hos done extensive troveling while painting, reseorching, ond obsorbing the environment of cultures in locations such os Northern and Southern Europe, North Africo, the Carribeon and Mexico. He olso holds two degrees, Bachelor of Fine Arts from Prott Institute in Brooklyn, New York, where he mojored in Painting ond Printmaking, ond o Moster of Fine Arts from the University of Arizono in Tucson.

Jocqui Holmes, o young groduote of the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston, hos yet to define her style. She creates books ond song sheets from paper pulp which she cultivotes herself. Her two series ore Song from the Eorth ond Notes from the Earth.

These ore "books that hold a part of my being, my race, my femaleness, my humon memory...they refer to o time past, future, ond present", said the artist.

Jocqui hos reseorched rituols, cults ond history of book design. Her gool is to be o good teocher of ort, reported on orticle in Big Red.

"When you teoch art, you teoch everything," said Jocqui. "Real teaching is opening up o spoce for someone to find out who he or she is. If I con do this, I will have done something."

Jocqui continued, "Young artists should try to learn the history of ort os well as look into their spirits to see who they ore, in this woy they will produce something reol."

I think everyone should try to view these unique ort works, for you moy never receive the chonce to experience reolity agoin.

Food for thought

The acclamation of a Black Homecoming for this Fall, has been a loud cry since the summer. The apparent question is whether the community resources and interest can support this idea in the 1980's.

Historically homecoming, in definition, has been linked to a three day period in October, when the UMass alumni return to the campus. It has also been the custom to include parades, football games, and evening activities.

For the Black community, homecoming has only been a four year tradition. This can be attributed to the rise in the Black student population in the mid-seventies. The other notion was the increase in Black student organizations in number and power during this period. The latter point has been significant because of the additional funds and stabilization given to the program. But one thing that should be kept in mind, is the original concept of Black Homecoming was developed by the Director of the Black Cultural Center (Van Jackson) and former graduates to provide an adjoining program with the University for the Black community. It was felt that the university was overlooking our values and contributions in the traditional Homecoming events. Black organizers developed community programs like art shows, karate demonstrations, faculty-student basketball games, talent shows, Sadie Hawkins Dances (where females ask the males to dance), and concerts.

Basically, the program that has remained in the minds of community members have been the concerts. Some people have linked Sly & the Family Stone in the early 70's, and George Benson in 1976 as part of the Black Homecoming tradition. But these programs were part of the general UMass Homecoming Program. Thus, in the case of the former, the Black student population was too small, although this is not to say that some type of activities did not occur. The latter point was also a part of the UMass regular programming in 1976. But the community can claim the group Pleasure in 1976, Natalie Cole in 1977, and Ellis Hall (local group) in 1978. In viewing these performances from 1976-78, one would speculate that the future of Black Homecoming concerts looked positive for the future. Since this time, facts have shown that Black Homecoming has been a dwindling event. In order to understand this dilemma, an analysis of two major problems will have to be viewed.

The past has shown the willingness of this community to create an idea that represents the values and character to bound us together at UMass. But this feeling of pride in Black Homecoming has deteriorated since its growth in 1977. There is confusion in identifying concrete problems, however two areas have surfaced as contributing factors.

First, the concert aspect has been an expectation of all Black Homecoming affairs. Since 1977, the community has not had a major or immediate concert (excluding GQ and Breakwater, which was done in the Spring) for the Fall program. One problem has been the negative feeling generated from the May 6th, 1978 Duke Ellington Concert. Groups such as the Student Senate, Union Program Council and Office of Third World Affairs—under the direction of Stan Kinard, had taken a major role in this program. Unfortunately, the concert ended up being the largest deficit incurred by any single program in Student Senate concert history. Some parties attributed the problems this concert had toward a shakey communication among the three groups; possible sabotage of a Black program; and irresponsibility of student leaders. The influence of this concert placed a heavy shadow on future Black concerts. Thus, the correlationship of the May '78 concerts stifled negotiations for a strong Black Homecoming concert in the Fall of 1978.

A prime example was when a group of community members had contacted the musical artist, Bohannon for the Fall concert. The main funding organization, Union Program Council, was more interested in Al Jarreau. The conflict of interest resulted in a compromised local group (Ellis Hall Band). The bad relationships between UPC and the community organizers eventually brought on another major problem that the Black community would have to address—organization.

During the beginning of the Black Homecoming programs, the Black Cultural Center took a strong interest in promoting the ideas. This can be confirmed by their assistance with the Natalie Cole and Pleasure concert, basketball game (faculty-students), talent shows and overall direction of the program. But, in the Fall of 1978 the focus of the Cultural Center was no longer to front organization for the Homecoming festival, thus, instead the Office of Third World Affairs was pressured by the community to fill this role. They in turn set up a small group of individuals who had no experience in developing a homecoming program. Their inexperience was also hampered by lack of guidance and funds to accomplish this task.

A fourth problem, was related to the lateness of this program. In prior years, Black Homecoming received more publicity because it coincided with the traditional Homecoming events in October. These added pressures on the task force, coupled with a community who wanted results, forced the group to combine the talents of Ellis Hall (a local band) with local DJ's, to replace the normal Black Homecoming concert.

The weakness of the 1978 Homecoming program was plagued by organizational inexperience, the Duke Ellington Concert, and the loss of the exposure from the traditional Homecoming events.

As the community developed, strategies to overcome the stigma set by the May, Duke Ellington concert was undertaken. A new Duke Ellington concert committee formed and, the Afrikan Society and other Third World Centers supported other Black Homecoming programs. However, a new barricade had developed. The main problem related to depleting resources.

Since 1976, every Student Senate organization had received some type of financial cut. Organizers of Black Homecoming not only faced this problem, but also were plagued by new RSO (Recognized Student Organization) guidelines that curtailed expenditures on liquor and food purchases. These guidelines also made specific policies, where concerts would have to adhere to University policies.

In summation, the new members of the Afrikan Society have taken the task to revive the tradition of Black Homecoming in 1980. They have solved the problems of organization, and responsibility with the influx of new members and spirit. The problems of depleted funds, past mistakes, and low pride for Black Homecoming must be addressed before a solid foundation can be established. Regardless of the order in which these events occur, the end will have to justify the means.

Thus, during the period of November 2nd to the 9th, we all will find out whether Black Homecoming tradition has a place in the community for the 80's.

Accessibility

Since 1973 the University has provided improved access to educational opportunities for academically qualified, physically disabled students.

The University has completed several barrier reduction projects such as exterior ramping to major academic buildings, curb cuts throughout campus, and modivated bathrooms in several buildings. The Handicapped Student Affairs office works closely in scheduling to make sure that if a building is not accessible, then the classes are. Some major support services provided are interpreters, tape recorders, volunteer readers, van transportation, tutoring, and teletype machines.

These renovations and services have rated UMass at the top with other major Universities in the country for its accessibility. Nevertheless, there are still several problems facing the handicapped at UMass which remain to be dealt with by administration.

The Fine Arts Center, built after archetectural barrier laws were passed in 1968, is one of the main problems on campus for students confined to wheelchairs. When a person is forced to enter the FAC through the storage entrance, go down the freight elevator, and then be carried down the stairs to the main floor area before he or she can watch a show, makes it an emotionally disturbing experience for them. As a result, most attempt it once and then never return.

The University also has to confront the problems of contrast with the colors of directions and room numbers which are troublesome to visually impaired students.

Before people with handicaps can enjoy the benefits of this University, or of society at large, it must be made accessible to them.

Proposition 13 in Massachusetts

Editor's Note: The following is the first of a three part series on the effect of Proposition 2½ on Massachusetts. The concluding two articles will appear on these pages the following two Wednesdays.

Some of the speculation on what will happen if Proposition 2½ passes this fall can be checked against the reality of what happened in California when citizens voted in a similar property tax measure known as Proposition 13. This comparison, furthermore, brings to light the potential impact of the Massachusetts' referendum on our state's higher education system.

Michael Hillard

When California passed Proposition 13, that state had experienced several years of inflation in the housing sector which had sent property taxes up to unprecedentad levels. At the same time, Governor Brown had permitted a surplus of over $5 billion to amass in the state treasury as one way to bolster his political image as a fiscal conservative. Citizens wanted tax relief from a state government that was fiscally unresponsive to the pressures of inflation. They felt property tax relief could be financed by the state surplus without a significant cut in public services.

It was not so easy.

Local government revenues dropped $6.15 billion in the first year. The expected state bail-out did materialize: a $4.3 billion package that immediately claimed over 75 percent of the state treasury's surplus. Over half was used to shore up local school budgets, with most of the rest taking over local welfare and medicaid payments. This left local municipalities with about 90 percent of their previous year's budget (more like 80 percent taking inflation into account). How the 10-20 percent cut was to be handled was the problem of each municipality.

What Happened:

In order to help finance the state-bail out, welfare payments were frozen at existing levels. Between attrition at the state level, and cuts at the county and local level 100,000 jobs from the public sector were eliminated. Because of seniority, this meant that women and minorities last hired, first fired bore the brunt of the layoffs. For example, in Oakland, of 84 employees laid off, 70 were black. In one municipality, every teacher hired since 1970 was fired.

In order to maintain adequate fire, police, and public work services, federal revenue sharing and local revenues were diverted from human services, including daycare centers, health care centers, and programs for the elderly.

Previous to the passage of Proposition 13, gross inadequacies had already existed in mental health facilities. After a dramatic visit to a major state facility, Governor Brown had promised $82.6 million to improve community facilities to replace locked wards. Due to Proposition 13 that sum was the first to be dropped from the state budget. Furthermore, the most efficient and least bureaucratic of human service programs—the nonprofit community agencies funded by local grants, were eliminated.

Finally, municipalities were forced to impose fees, or increase existing fees, on municipal services. Robert Cuttner, author of Revolt of the Haves, provides a compelling description of what this meant for California's citizens:

> "Local governments outdid each other dreaming up new fees or raising old ones: Fees on parking, on garbage collection, parks, municipal pools, public tennis courts, health inspections, water and sewer services, higher admission charges to libraries, theaters, museums, zoos, and botanical gardens; higher fees for dog licenses, business licenses, and hotel licenses...Many cities raised bus fares, ambulance charges, tuition for adult education, grave digging fees, parking ticket rates, and even library card fines. In San Clemente, ambulance rides were upped to $160 each. Monrovia began charging for street sweeping and the senior dial-a-ride."

Proposition 13 resulted in drastic reductions of services and assistance for the poor, infirm, disabled, and elderly. Services to the general public also suffered; the quality of public education declined dramatically, recreational services were eliminated or required the imposition of fees, and even fire and police protection underwent cuts. Public sector workers, particularly women and minorities, joined the unemployment line in large numbers.

The situation after the passage of Proposition 13 in California was indeed grim, but by comparison to what would happen here it looked rosy. California had a state-level surplus of over $5 billion. The surplus at the state-level in Massachusetts last year was a mere $130D, and some sources expect a large deficit this year running up to as much as $250 million. Massachusetts would be unable to bail out municipal governments, unless severe and probably unworkable measures were taken. These would have to include sizeable cuts in politically vulnerable areas of the state's budget: Welfare, medicaid and medicare, human services, and public higher education. In the end, the most likely resolution to such a nightmare would be increases in state taxes.

The need for tax reform in Massachsuetts is evident. But Proposition 2½ is not the solution. Students at the University and citizens across the state should take the initiative in demanding sensible tax reform which will bolster the administration of public services. Meat-cleaver solutions are never the answer to public policy problems, and this is what we are presently faced with.

Michael Hillard is a member of the Campus Coalition Against Proposition 2½.

Letter—

National Anti-Draft Week

To the Editor:

Although the summer has ended, registration for the draft has not. Men born in 1962 will have to register for the draft in January, 1981. Independent estimates so far, of the number of non-registrants of the four million men who were supposed to register this summer have varied from 20 percent to 40 percent. There is no doubt that this high rate is partially due to the demonstrations that took place during the registration period last summer. Students Against the Draft was part of this effort in Amherst.

The draft (or registration) and the current rise in militarism is responsible for several problems. Those which affect us the most, as students, are the increased chances of war and the draining of financial aid monies into the military budget. In an effort to halt these trends toward militarism and war, this week has been declared National Anti-Draft week. For this, SAD has set up a table in the Student Union building today from 9-4. There will be general information and Draft Counseling available. Later today, William Winpisinger, President of the International Association of Machinists, and a critic of increased defense spending, will be speaking in Thompson 106 at 7:30 p.m.

Professionally apathetic

"Paul's Confusion" will not be printed this week but will be continued next Wednesday with Part Seven.

Toss an empty beer can out of any dormitory window and ninety-nine times out of a hundred it will glance off an apathetic student. When you poke your head out the window and beg the young scholar, Why are you apathetic? he curls up on the ground and falls asleep, his head resting loosely on Participatory Democracy—the latest edition. You have completed, at its furthest command of patience, a discussion of the most tedious topic of all: apathy.

Social commentators would never agree on why some people need to toss an empty beer can out a window now and then, but an ominous drone of dirges for society's foregone participants carries from that cerebral clan past every apathee into the shallow crevices of American publishing. Its products inspire pillows: While social commentators are heavily claiming apathy bears responsibility for most of society's ills, none are making apathy interesting to society.

You could say apathy is an inherently boring subject. But that begs the question of who it bores and why. It excites me like a weekend in Edison, New Jersey, and I consider myself a certified (published) member of the concerned. There are other members too: they criticize apathy as if was a disease contracted by a population of slobs lacking the critic's regard for intellectual hygiene.

Any nine-year-old can, in simple terms, explain how our culture discourages involvement in its society's institutions. "They don't want amateurs," a very young friend of mine told me recently. She meant it literally, amateurs being a new word for her; its original definition has as its root the idea of love and interest. If there is anything our institutions of government, of education, of the economy will not tolerate, it is people possessed with an interest in making their institution work better—in change—that they value more than their institutional jobs. Such extremists are deterred by unemployment.

Apathetic people have at least a visceral understanding that apathy is institutional. What I and likely a lot of them wonder is what does the social commentator, foe of apathy, writer of snoozatory, esoteric analyses, want from us?

Obviously they want us to read and listen to their wearisome lecturing and, incredibly, to respond to it. This expectation rests on the most laughable of all conceptions of human rationality—what some critics of the social sciences have termed "faith-in-education."

This assumes people's stupidity can be remedied by the provision of intelligent information. It assumes that once in possession of the facts, humans will alter their behavior accordingly. The idea itself evidences its own fallaciousness, since it ignores contrary "facts": that people don't want information that conflicts with what they believe; that where they already have information, they don't think they need any more; that they don't like being told, they must experience; and that what you say has to move them—first emotionally, then physically. Social commentators have a lot to learn about public relations practice.

While the film is a product of The Who, the album is not. Although Who members Pete Townshend, John Entwistle and Kenny Jones all play on the album at one point or another, it is basically Daltrey's show, along with several other talented musicians.

The album's best-known song, and the single that was played on the radio every five minutes this summer, is "Free Me," which includes some Townshend-influenced riffs and power cords. And, coincidentally, while it appears as if Townshend plays on the song (the album does not say who plays on what tunes), it is also Daltrey's finest effort on the album. A hard rocker, reminiscent of much of Who's Next or Quadrophenia, the song is powerful and a fine showcase for Daltrey's talent.

But that's where the impressiveness of the album ends. The remainder seems to suggest that Daltrey's voice is, perhaps, shot. He struggles on some songs, barely getting off the ground in a few, and doesn't seem to quite get a handle on the material.

It has been suggested that Daltrey really can't perform well unless he's singing Townshend songs. And perhaps that statement is true. Except for "Free Me" and a couple of other hard rockers in the Who tradition, Daltrey seems to fall flat and not quite hit the potential he has proven himself capable of.

The album kicks off with "Bitter and Twisted," a hard rock tune with some fine drumming and very prominent keyboards. And Daltrey's vocals really shine in this one, as they always seem to do when he's given the chance to belt out a really good song.

But then the album hits the skids with a few unimpressive ballads like "Just a Dream Away," "White City Lights," and "Waiting for a Friend," in which Daltrey attempts, unsuccessfully, to go country-ish. But the remainder of the album, in songs like "My Time is Gonna Come," and two instrumentals, "Escape Part One" and "Escape Part Two," Daltrey offers some good rock and roll.

Who fans expecting McVicar to be another Who album will be disappointed. Although the album carries the band's name and features its front-man, the album is not The Who. None of the songs were written by The Who and three in fact, were written by Russ Ballard, former singer-songwriter-guitarist far Argent (led by Who accomplice Rod Argent) and also the author of numerous songs on Daltrey's sola albums.

The album was produced by Who manager Bill Curbishley and Daltrey and financed by The Who. It isn't Who material, but represents another venture by the band into the film medium. One can only hope, however, that their latest interest don't detract from their talent and performance as one of the truly great rock and roll bands.

DAVID?
NOT ONLY THE MORALITY OF WHETHER OR NOT OUR INVOLVEMENT IN VIETNAM WAS BEING QUESTIONED, BUT ALSO WHY, HOW AND HOW MUCH WE WERE INVOLVED. THE AMERICAN PUBLIC FELT IT WASN'T BEING TOLD THE TRUTH.
DURING THE 1970's, THE PUBLIC NOT ONLY REALIZED HOW MUCH THE GOVERNMENT AND BIG-BUSINESS WERE NOT TELLING THE TRUTH, BUT THE ENERGY CRISIS HITS HOME WITH EVERYONE, NOT JUST THOSE FIGHTING THE WAR AND THEIR FRIENDS AND FAMILIES.

UM goes to Conn., JV's win two more

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team will travel to New Haven tonight for a tri-match against the University of New Haven and Central Connecticut State College.

UMass opens up its second half of the season against what Coach Elaine Marasco regards as "twa of the teams that will be considered for the Easterns this year."

"They both will be tough," said Marasco, "those matches will be tight."

UMass defeated both New Haven and Central before this season, while both teams have dealt UMass defeats. The record between UMass and New Haven stands at 1-1, while Central holds a 2-1 edge.

After this tri-match, UMass will have weekend off, before resuming play against Mount Holyoke College Tuesday night at NOPE gym. Among the teams UMass will face after Mount Holyoke will be Southern Connecticut State College, Rutgers University, the University of Connecticut and teams participating in the Maryland invitational and the University of Rhode Island Tournament.

As for the jv's, they raised their record to 6-1 last weekend with a sweep over both Firchburg State College and Mount Watchusett Community College at Fitchburg State.

UMass rolled over Fitchburg 15-4, 15-12 and set back Maunt Watchusett 15-10, 15-12.

JV caach Al Marel said that the overall spirit and performance of the team was and has been "sky high since the Springfield College match (a match UMass swept 15-1, 15-7.)

"They're playing great volleyball right now," said Marel, "I guess the key to our success so far has been that we pass the ball better than any team we've played. The passing and defense were excellent. Serving has been very consistent. They're doing a great job."

Minutewomen remain undefeated

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

UMass came from behind yesterday to sweep over Northeastern University, beating them with a decisive 4-1 victory.

It took the UMass field hockey team a long time to get fired up out on the NOPE field during the first half. There was a lot of ball-watching with not enough aggressive tackling and the women also failed to mark their opponents with consistent accuracy.

Northeastern came on the scoreboard early in the first half scoring off a penalty flick. The flick came off a corner shot on goal, giving the Huskies the lead, 1-0.

The Minutewomen had a rough time following that first goal, with a number of corner shots and each one failing to be stopped in the circle for a shot on goal.

On one of the corner shots for UMass, Judy Strong finally connected to bring the score to the even mark, 1-1.

From that spark came the fire: the women picked up their offensive action considerably and started to play a much stronger game. Strong was consistent with her shots on goal and came up with the second tally for the Stickers with 8:30 left on the scoreboard. The ball was brought downfield to a waiting Strong in the circle, who drove hard to hit deep in the left corner of the Huskie's net. The first half ended with UMass up 2-1.

The second half opened up slowly with the UMass women coming up with eight corner shots in a row. Ro Tudryn showed how the game is played with an excellent defensive game. She played a strong heads up game and kept her head on the ball. Northeastern was a very aggressive team with their coach yelling to one of the women at one point in the game, "...push her over if you have to."

The third goal for UMass came with 16:55 posted. It was the second hattrick for Strong this season and the first assist of the game for Caroline Kavanagh.

The final score of the game came from Sue Packard who has not seen too much action this season on the varsity squad. It was a nice flick into the net past the goalie with plenty of time left to play in the second half.

Strong was pulled from the game with just a few minutes left on the clock obviously in great pain from an injury to her left knee. Hopefully it is nothing serious for Strong, who will be playing at Boston University's Nickerson Field tonight with the rest of the Olympic team. (Assistant coach Diane Moyer will be travelling with Strong. She is one of the goalies for the Olympic team). The Olympic team will be playing teams from all over the world at BU, the first being New Zealand.

Next, the Stickers will be hosted in Storrs, Connecticut as they face the University of Connecticut tomorrow at 3:00 p.m.

UM homecooking

They stood there in the drizzle eating hot dogs and steak tips. They drove 300 miles, to stand in the damp gravel of the parking lot next to Alumni Stadium.

And they loved it.

"Hey, I'm having a ball," says Howard Creswell, of Newark, Delaware, sipping on a Budweiser. "We follow most of the (Delaware) games. When we heard this game was Massachusetts' homecoming, we made a special effort to get up here."

Creswell and his wife Ellen, who works as an administrative assistant on the Delaware campus, made the six-hour journey up from Newark with close friends Al and Joan Lindell, and the middle-aged foursome didn't seem to mind the rain at all.

"My name's not Ellen," Ellen Creswell says. "My name is Billie, with an 'ie' on the end."

She turns to chastise her husband.

Kevin Cullen

"Why are you telling him my name is Ellen?" Billie Creswell demands. "Who calls me Ellen? Nobody. When's the last time you called me Ellen?"

Howard Creswell chuckles as he sips.

The Creswells and the Lindells have travelled as far as Youngstown, Ohio, and down to William & Mary to watch the Blue Hens in action.

"It's worth it," Al Lindell says. "We have a helluva time, see some new places, watch a good football game. Besides, it's the only time I can get her out of the house."

Joan Lindell sends a backhand across her husband's shoulder, and they both laugh.

"Hey," Billie Creswell says. "You know your band director? George Parks? Well, George is a good friend of ours. He buddied around with my son, practically grew up in our house."

Howard Creswell nods to verify the fact as he sips.

"We came up here to see George's band, and see our team," Billie Creswell says.

Behind the Creswells and Lindells, behind the shiny mid-size 1980's with Delaware license plates, sits a beaten orange Volkswagen. A group of six 25-or-so year olds stand around a hibachi and laugh at the rain.

"This is our first homecoming," says Russ Boudreau, a 1975 alumnus of UMass. "We always said we were going to come up (from New York) but we never got around to it."

Boudreau says that after the game he will probably go duck hunting.

Why?

"Why the hell not?" Russ Boudreau says.

Kirk Grim, who graduated from UMass with Boudreau in 1975 came up with his wife Betsy, and the two celebrated their first anniversary on Monday.

The group began their tail-gating party at 10 in the morning and planned to continue right through the night. Except for Boudreau, who insisted on hunting ducks.

This was the first year the group of UMass fans ever got together for a real homecoming celebration, and all those involved vowed to make it an annual event.

"How long have you been drinking?" someone asks Kirk Grim.

Grim grabs his chin with a thumb and forefinger.

"1967," Kirk Grim says.

"No, no," the person says. "I mean leading up to the game today. How long have you been drinking."

Grim grabs his chin again.

"1967," Kirk Grim says.

Booters take on Friars today

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

The 4-6 UMass men's soccer team, which has won two of its last three games and is coming off a tough 1-0 loss to Boston University, faces the Friars of Providence College today in Providence.

The Friars, who have a 4-4-1 record going into the game, have shut out wins over Barrington College (4-0), UNH (4-0) and Stonehill College (6-0), as well as a 3-2 victory over Bryant College. The PC (Providence College) losses have come at the hands of the University of Rhode Island (3-2), Holy Cross (1-0), Brandeis (1-0) and Yale (5-0). They also have played Rhode Island College to a scoreless tie.

Senior goalie Peter Chenette has played in every contest this season for the Friars and, along with senior captain Bill Lawrence, a fullback, leads the PC defense, which has given up 12 goals.

Junior forwards Blaine Carroll, Mike Gilbride and Jay Skelton lead the Friar offense, which has scored 19 goals in nine games.

The Minutemen, who have scored no more than three goals in any one game this season, have tallied 12 goals in 10 games, while allowing the opposition 19 scored.

However, these statistics are misleading. While it is true that the UMass squad has had trouble putting the ball in the net, it is also true that their competition has been of a higher caliber. One of the two small schools the Minutemen have played is Williams College which they earned a 3-1 victory against. Other UMass victories have come against Keene State (3-2), Vermont (2-1) and UNH (2-0). The UMass loses, four of them shutouts, have come against Bridgeport (1-0), Southern Connecticut (4-0), Maine (1-0), BU (1-0), Davis & Elkins (5-1) and Harvard (3-1).

UMass has its full squad back in shape. Fullbacks Gary Deets, Joe Bortolloti and Gregg Draudt will be back and ready for action against the Friars. A bright note for the Minutemen is that while these regulars were out, freshman Dave Shilo came in and performed admirably.

This, along with the insertion of freshmen Kevin Flynn and Mike Runeare, gives UMass an impressive amount of depth. Goalie Brett Olsher came into his own for the Minutemen after Matt Esteves left the team, and the duo from Ludlow, Tony M. and Tony G. Dias have taken over the offensive leadership of the club.

With six games left on the schedule, the UMass squad looks to recover from the tough 1-0 loss to BU and to regain the form that started with the 2-1 last-second win in Vermont.

After today's clash with the Friars, the Minutemen play at Rhode Island Friday, host Connecticut October 25, and travel to Westfield State and Boston College on October 29 and November 1 respectively, before coming back home against Springfield on November 5 to close out the season.

Riders out-trot 23 competitors

By PATRICIA CARBONE
Special to the Collegian

The UMass intercollegiate Equestrian team was the Champion High-Point College over 24 competing schools at Saturday's meet at Dartmouth College.

Two UMass brothers, Ray and Ken Whelihan, won the individual Champion High-Point Rider and reserve High-Point rider of the day awards. Both of the Whelihan brothers won two first place awards, along with a rider from Colby-Sawyer College which created a 3 way tie for the high-point rider championship.

A ride-off was held at the end of the meet. The judge, Mrs. Susan Kennedy, had the three riders perform difficult movements on their horses and then on each other's horses and finally concluded by awarding Ray, the elder of the brothers the Championship and Ken, Reserve Champion.

Elise Weerts was also a first place finisher.

Finishing second for UMass were Liz Cowley, Tara Strzempek, Lori Usher and Diane Macbeth.

Karen Lynch, Sarah Boynton and Lee Williams placed third.

UMass hopes to continue their winning streak next weekend at UConn.

McCrone, Moores set records, UMass wins UConn Invitational

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

While most UMass students were enjoying the start of the long weekend last Saturday, the women's cross-country team was busy winning the UConn Invitational in Storrs. The UMass women took the top three places to help the team to an easy win over UConn, Southern Conn. and Springfield College.

Placing first overall on the rain swept 5000 meter (3.1) mile) course was UMass' Judy McCrone in 18:16 followed by teammates Tricia Moores, second in 18:22 and Cathy Petrick, third in 19:06. Fourth for UMass and ninth overall was Dill Wilson with Eileen Everett fifth for the team and 16th overall.

"Both Judy and Tricia broke the course record. They didn't have any competition in the race, but they ran like they did. It was a good win because it really boosted our moral," coach Julie LaFreniere said. All the UMass runners improved their times over last year's UConn Invitational which the team also won.

It was the second win for the team within a week. The women beat Smith College last Wednesday before traveling to UConn on Saturday.

The team's next meet will be this Saturday at 1 p.m. at home against Rhode Island, Vermont and New Hampshire. The race will be run over a new 5000 meter course on the trails behind Amherst College. It will be UMass' only home meet of the season.

"This is a big meet this weekend because four of the big powerhouses in New England besides Harvard will be running," McCrone said.

"Oh no," I thought, "it's that time of year again."

Inspection. Your car's way of getting revenge for all the infrequent oil changes and lack of air pressure in the tires. And, true to form, if you wait until almost the last day, as I did, something will always go wrong while you are on your way to the garage in search of that precious little sticker.

As I headed to my favorite local gas station Tuesday afternoon, the only thing on my mind was the grinding noise which seemed to be emanating from my brakes. I knew for sure that I wasn't going to make it but I went anyway, my strange masochistic tendencies driving me on.

I pulled into the gas station and assumed my position in line behind 17 other cars. Of course, I forgot to bring reading material and could only watch the couple in the car in front of me as they pretended they were at the drive-in. I watched the cars coming out of the garage, trying to get a handle on what kind of mood the inspector was in.

The first three cars pulled out with bright blue stickers. They had been successful. The next two came out with the big, obnoxious "rejected" sticker pasted on the windshield. And, coincidentally, the two rejected cars also bore UMass bumper stickers.

"Boy, am I in trouble," I thought.

About 45 minutes later it was my turn. I pulled into the garage as the mechanic, smiling somewhat sadistically, leaned in and asked me for my registration and $2. He took them and then proceeded to scrape off my old sticker. For some reason, all I could think about was the agony I went through when I got that sticker last April.

"Let's see your lights," the mechanic said, still smiling. "OK, good."

High beams, OK. Horn, OK. Blinkers, OK. Windshield Wipers, OK. I held my breath.

"Now lets check the front end," he said, as I chomped on my fingernails.

The right side was OK. And then, as he jacked up the left side, I felt a feeling of impending doom. He shook the wheel.

"Oh no," the mechanic said as my heart stopped. "You were doing so well."

After a short consultation with the garage owner and the chief mechanic, it was determined that my left tie-rod end was shot. I don't know what that means, except that It was going to cost me about $30 to get it fixed.

So as I left the garage, driving down the street with my new, round, orange and white rejection sticker I pondered my fate. My wallet was empty. My bank account nearly drained. I could afford the repair work, but what about next month's rent?

So my car sat in the garage yesterday, getting a new tie-rod end and, $30 and a lot of aggravation later, I had a new, valid state inspection sticker.

So I'm safe and on the road. My car is in fine shape (except for the groaning from the brakes) and probably won't need to be touched for a while. That is, of course, until next April, the day before I need to get another sticker.

Senate votes to approve election results

By Ken Ross
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to over-rule a senate Coordinating Committee decision to invalidate commuter elections and to accept the results from last week's commuter election.

The senate also voted to include ballots with stickers attached to them in the final election tabulations.

The senate will move to approve the commuter senate elections in next week's meeting when the commuter senators should be seated.

The Coordinating Committee had voted Tuesday night to invalidate commuter election results because one of the candidates, Jim "Bo" Floyd, had his name stated incorrectly on the ballot. His name had appeared as Jim "Bo" Clark.

Debate over the elections lasted four hours and the motion to overrule the Coordinating Committee's decision passed by a 32 to 10 margin with three abstentions.

"I think that the rights of one individual have to be weighed against the rights of the 34 candidates who were elected," said Judy Weiss, one of the commuter senators elected and the person who brought the motion before the senate.

Weiss also stated that she would bring the matter of Jim "Bo" Floyd before the Commuter Collective and recommend that he be given consideration for the next available senate seat.

Floyd had been offered to be installed as a senator at Tuesday night's Coordinating Committee meeting, but declined saying that he would "like a chance to run."

"I've been approached by both sides of this issue, both telling me what to do," said Floyd in last night's meeting, "and I decided over this weekend that I was going to do what I thought was right. If I accept things that have been offered to me I would be going against my own conscience. I think the elections should be re-run.

Opponents to accepting the election results cited precedent as well as Floyd's rights as reasons to re-run the election.

"In this past election the ballots for Washington Middle contained misprints and the election is going to be re-run," said Senator Bob Cleary. "It is past precedent that when the ballot is printed incorrectly the election is re-run."

In other business, student Judge Michael Cohen was cleared by a committee investigating a possible abuse of power in his injunction against the allocation of Student Funds for the Amherst Nursing home strike several weeks ago. The senate voted unanimously to approve the Committee's findings.

The Senate also unanimously voted to recommend that the contract of Robert Goldfarb, Manager of the Five College radio station WFCR, not be renewed.

Enthusiastic Professor deciphers hieroglyphics

By Carla Lesh
Collegian Correspondent

The characters probably don't mean much to you, but Dr. David Van Blerkom, a University of Massachusetts astronomy professor, and the students in his Egyptian Hieroglyphics class would recognize it as a recipe to keep your hair from turning white.

The medical remedy literally reads: 'Take the blood of a black calf, heat it with oil and annoint there with."

Van Blerkom teaches an honors course in Egyptian hieroglyphics every spring semester in addition to his Astronomy classes.

Many hieroglyphics have survived since they were first used in about 3000 B.C., according to Van Blerkom. Medical remedies, religious texts, monuments recording the king's latest victory, as well as popular literature in the form of adventure stories were written by the Egyptian scribes.

Translating an old recipe

After teaching the course for eight years Van Blerkom said, "students take this course because they are interested in learning to read the messages that were written so many years ago.

"Being able to read these hieroglyphics gives you an indescribable feeling. It's almost as if you were communicating with these ancient peoples. You are one of the few that know what these symbols mean," Van Blerkom said.

Finding textbooks for a language as obscure as Egyptian hieroglyphics is difficult, Van Blerkom said. The one text in English is now too expensive so he uses photocopies of an out-of-print text that was originally printed in German around the turn of this century.

Van Blerkom said he has been interested in hieroglyphics since he visited the Egyptian section of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York as a child. He and a friend began to study hieroglyphics from a textbook when they were in graduate school.

"The language changed through the years. It was influenced by the new ideas brought when Egypt was conquered. The most influential of these changes was the introduction of the Greek alphabet after Alexander the Great's conquest of Egypt," Van Blerkom said.

"The Greek alphabet was so much more expressive that it began to be used instead of the old hieroglyphics. Hieroglyphics continued to be used by the priests as late as 300 A.D.," Van Blerkom said.

"Hieroglyphics were chiseled in relief on public monuments. They were also written on papyrus with reed pens. The papyrus versions were sent to government officials as memos and to the Egyptian foreign embassies," Van Blerkom said.

Census says education rises

WASHINGTON — More than two-thirds of all adult Americans now have at least a secondary school education, the Census Bureau reported yesterday.

The bureau said the proportion of those aged 25 and over who have high school diplomas climbed from 55 percent to 68 percent during the 1970s.

WASHINGTON — The final toll from this summer's heat wave is 1,265 deaths and nearly $20 billion in damage, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported yesterday.

Only three other summers in this century have taken more American lives in heat-related fatalities.

Most of those who died from the heat were either elderly or poor and lived in non-airconditioned homes or apartments, said the agency.

Canada drops female titles

TORONTO — Identification of women in news stories by their honorific titles—Mrs., Miss or Ms.—has been discontinued by The Canadian Press, the national newsgathering co-operative.

The action by CP, which distributes Canadian and international news to 109 daily newspapers, comes three years after Mr. as a designation for men was dropped from domestic news copy.

Henceforth, women will be identified in first reference by their own full names—Mary Smith, for example—and thereafter simply as Smith.

Iraqis advance, suffer losses

By Steve K. Hindy
Associated Press

BASRA, Iraq — Iran said an airborne division killed more than 1,000 Iraqi soldiers in a series of "lightning attacks" yesterday on the northern end of Iraq's invasion front, the largest death toll claimed in any battle of the war.

Tehran Radio said "brave fighters of the airborne division" overran two Iraqi bases and destroyed 11 Iraqi tanks in the Ilam sector, about 250 miles northwest the main battle area at Abadan. Iraqi troops were reported closing a ring around that battered oil refinery center.

Iran bombed Baghdad and other cities in Iraq for the second consecutive day and Iraqi warplanes attacked an oil refinery in Iran's northern city of Tabriz, the Baghdad military command said.

Iran made a new threat to mine the Persian Gulf and the Strait of Hormuz, through which tankers carry 40 percent of the West's oil supplies.

There was no confirmation of Iran's victory claim in the northern sector, but if true it would indicate Iranian forces still were capable of mounting a major counterattack. Except for the air war, Iranian forces have been on the defensive since the war began.

An Iranian attack in the north pointed to an attempt to turn the Iraq's northern flank and to relieve pressure on Iranian forces in the south at Khorramshahr and Abadan.

Tehran Radio, quoting the military command on the action, gave few details of the battle and did not say whether the airborne units were dropped over the battle zone or attacked on the ground.

Iraqi troops were reported advancing on Abadan yesterday and Iraq claimed its forces pushed to within a few hundred yards of the last Iranian-held highway to the oil refining center. Iran said fierce hand-to-hand fighting awaited the invaders and that Iraqi forces were "in a trap with no way of escaping."

The Iranians claimed they had halted the attempted Iraqi encirclement of Abadan, stopping the advance of enemy forces five miles north of the city and using jets and helicopter gunships to pound columns of Iraqi troops.

Iraq reported 52 Iranian and nine Iraqi soldiers were killed in 12 hours of fighting near the highway. Iraq claimed its forces were only three or four miles from Abadan and had cut roads, railroads and pipelines to most of the oil-rich Khuzistan province and to Tehran, the Iranian capital 360 miles to the northwest.

Carter, Reagan on the attack

By David Espo
Associated Press

Ronald Reagan said yesterday that American taxpayers had better "grab your wallets" if Jimmy Carter is re-elected, while the president continued his efforts to paint his GOP challenger as an opponent of New Deal-type social programs.

While Carter and Reagan argued about economic and social policy, a troubled John B. Anderson conceded he is giving up hopes of borrowing $10 million from big banks to finance a television advertising blitz for his independent candidacy.

With his ratings falling from 15 percent to 8 percent in the latest Gallup Poll, the independent candidate said in Milwaukee that he'll borrow as much as he can from his own supporters for advertising.

As a further indication of Anderson's declining strength, the League of Women Voters already has said it might disinvite Anderson from the presidential debates it hopes to arrange.

Reagan left open the possibility that he would agree to a one-on-one debate with the president, after weeks of insisting that Anderson be included in any formula for a series of debates.

His campaign chief of staff, Edwin Meese III, said it was "highly possible" Reagan either would agree to debate Carter or deliver a 30-minute nationwide television address to deal with the president's suggestions that the Republican nominee might lead the country into war if he were president.

Carter has insisted that his first debate be with Reagan alone.

Reagan, meanwhile, resumed his campaign in the toss-up states of the Midwest, accusing Carter of distorting his economic proposals while charging that the president would raise taxes if he is re-elected.

007 to be less sexist

James Bond to clean up act

By George Boultwood
Associated Press

LONDON — James Bond is coming back, still with his 007 licence to kill but otherwise with a 1980s flavor.

He will be a little more respectful to women, consume fewer vodka martinis and smoke low-tar cigarettes.

John Gardner, British writer of best-selling mysteries, has been selected by the late Ian Fleming's literary executors to bring Bond back to life in three books.

"We are picking up Bond from where we left him in the '60s and bringing him into the '80s," Gardner said in a telephone interview from his retreat in Ireland's Wicklow Mountains.

When Fleming died in 1964, aged 56, he was correcting the proofs of his 14th Bond book, "The Man With the Golden Gun," which was posthumously published. Later two of his short stories were published under the title "Octupussy."

Gardner, 54, said the invitation to bring Bond back "is a challenge, especially on the technical side. I will enjoy it as a relaxation from my other work. I like to write one serious book and one of mystery or spy fiction each year."

His first Bond book, provisionally titled "Meltdown," has been written and publication is set for next April, the time of year Fleming's books were always launched.

Gardner would not reveal the plot, saying he has been told to keep it secret. But he did indicate it was the traditional fight between good and evil, with Bond assigned to save the world.

Gardner said Bond will be pitted against an individual with immense resources and a nasty streak whose malignant activities have to be stopped.

"We have kept to the Bond formula. He loves his country and his service. Naturally there was a clearout of the '00' service following the defector scandals, but fortunately Bond came out clean," Gardner said.

The enigmatic spymaster "M" who sends Bond on his missions will be back behind his desk.

Union president cites need for workers' party

By Jonathan Dean
Collegian Correspondent

William Winpisinger, president of the nearly one million member International Association of Machinists, last night urged a University of Massachusetts audience to recognize America's need for an effective workers political party.

Winpisinger said the only nationwide attempt ever made to give this country a workers party was defeated by the 1936 election of Franklin D. Roosevelt and big business interests.

"The corporate state owns the United States — both the Republican and Democratic parties," Winpisinger said. To broadly illustrate his point, the democratic-socialist labor leader indicated that while labor musters only 18 million dollars for politics, the corporations normally invest $48 million or more.

"Essentially, what we have is a one party system, because both of the traditionally strong parties seek out and support candidates who are like-minded," he said, adding that such persons satisfy the needs of big-business by maintaining the status quo.

One small hope for the democratization of "all processes in America" is Barry Commoner's Citizens' Party, Winpisinger said. However, he hastened to add that the Citizens' Party is full of novices in the field of socialistic thought.

"Commoner's people would be a good core group from which the socialist party could grow," he said.

Winpisinger gained national attention when he left the Democratic National Convention in protest of President Carter's binding of the delegates, which killed Sen. Edward Kennedy's hopes for nomination. According to Winpisinger, upon exiting he and his people were physically accosted by Carter workers paid to harrass them.

Winpisinger heads the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee, the goals of which include the vast improvement of working conditions for all and the promotion of leftism in the Democratic Party. But in closing, he admitted America is indeed "a long way from accepting the Democratic-Socialist movement."

Area students write book on internship ideas

Getting ahead with experience

By Eileen Galligan
Special to the Collegian

You are a student looking for some practical experience in your field. How do you go about it?

A group of Amherst College students have written a book called The Student Guide to Fellowships and Internships that could help you.

The 402-page guide gives information on how to find the best internships available and how to obtain internships where there is no organized program. It includes in-depth descriptions of internships from former participants. Also included are helpful hints on resumes, applications, and the interviewing process.

The idea was conceived by Kenneth Banta, a 1979 graduate of Amherst, who in January 1979 received an advance from The E.P. Dutton publishing house to go ahead with the project.

He then recruited Rosanne Haggerty, now a junior, and Philip Simmons, who graduated last year, to oversee the project while he continued his studies at Oxford University.

They assembled a staff of 30 students who wrote different sections of the book, ranging from Architecture, Business, Education, Environment, Government, Health, Journalism, Law, Public Service, and the Sciences.

Also on the staff were two UMass students, Steven Lewis and Brian O'Connor, who researched the health section.

Although the book dominated most of Haggerty's time last semester, she expressed her enthusiasm in saying, "we feel it is particularly interesting to college students, where they can learn about resumes, fellowships, and how the actual internship process really works."

The guide, now available at the University Store for $5.50, is only the third book written by and for students, Haggerty said. The other two are Let's Go Europe, written by Harvard students, and The Yale Daily News' Insiders Guide to Colleges.

Southwest's WZZZ celebrates with bubbles on the air

By John Dipalazzo
Collegian Staff

The radio station of the Southwest Residential Area at the University of Massachusetts celebrated the opening of its second semester of broadcasting with champagne as the station resumed operation Monday night.

Most of the station's staff was on hand at the WZZZ studio for the opening show. The 50 disc jockeys, who represent a cross section of Southwest residents, will play music on a free-format basis to best reflect the musical tastes of most area residents.

"We want to provide a unifying factor to the Southwest community," said WZZZ student manager Ed Duggan, who sees the station as an important communication link within Southwest.

WZZZ is presently broadcasting from noon until 6 a.m., but will soon be on the air 24 hours a day, seven days a week, said Duggan.

In addition to music, the station's news department will soon be broadcasting relevant to the Southwest area. Public service announcements will also be aired.

Special features of WZZZ will include a "New Release of the Week" where a new album will be featured. The station will also feature live broadcasts, concert ticket give-a-ways, and other unannounced specials.

WZZZ hopes to appeal to most Southwest residents, but Programming Coordinator Seth Hyman said, "we'll be willing to change to meet the needs of Southwest."

WZZZ is a non-commercial radio station which broadcasts at 91.7 FM using one-tenth of a watt of power and can be heard throughout Southwest as well as other parts of the campus.

The studios are located on the 12th floor of the John Quincy Adams tower in Southwest.

Drinan visits to hype Carter

By Nancy Anderson
and Henry Griffin
Collegian Staff

Father Robert Drinan, D-Mass., from the fourth Congressional District, will speak about the upcoming presidential election at noon tomorrow in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

Drinan, a popular campus lecturer during the 1960s and 70s in his fight to end the Vietnam war, will attempt to point out differences between the candidates while at the same time endorsing President Carter and the entire Democratic platform, said campus co-ordinator for the Carter-Mondale Campaign, James Garrity.

This committee is working in conjunction with the Massachusetts Campaign for the Carter-Mondale re-election and is responsible for Drinan's appearance at UMass.

Garrity is afraid that the lack of knowledge concerning the President's record will hurt him in the November polls.

"My experiences on the campaign trail the past few weeks have been that the students at UMass aren't so sure who stands where on what issues. It's important that if you are going to vote for someone, you know why you're voting," Garrity said.

To inform people on the Democratic platform, Garrity said his committee is leafletting the town of Amherst and football games, making phone calls and doing other campaign leg work. There are about 40 students on campus who run a table in the Campus Center to get more volunteers to work on the campaign, Garrity said.

Garrity hopes the Drinan visit will not only drum up volunteer support for the Carter campaign, but that it will also bring some votes over to the Democrat's side.

"We just hope to reach as many people as possible and stress the Democratic party as the only choice in both the presidential and congressional elections."

Garrity also said that this could be Drinan's last speech as a Congressman. The Jesuit priest, who joined the Congress in the late 1960s, was instructed this past summer by Pope John Paul II to leave politics. Drinan's term ends in January.

I FOUGHT THE LAW AND THE...A fast one was pulled on all you folks who missed a chance to buy tickets to the December 12 Bruce Springsteen concert in Hartford, when Boston-based concert promoter Don Law put tix on the market in the late afternoon last week for the December 11 Providence gig, and when Law repeated his grand performance Tuesday by giving the nod for the December 15 and 16 venues at Boston Garden, which went on sale at around 3 p.m. Ticketron's Campus Center outlet reported yesterday that as of 10 a.m. there were only two seats left for a line of about 20 persons outside their door. A spokesperson for CBS Records reports that Law's organization didn't even tell them the plans in advance. But, be not of faint hearts all you Springsteen fan(atics), for rumor has it Bruce just might play Springfield on his "rebound" tour which, as reported in last week's column, begins January 1, 1981. If 1978's tour is any precedent, The Boss will play very close to our Happy Valley...

...SINGLES GOING STEADY—New York's latest sensation on the club circuit is a band known as The Rockats. Originally featuring ex-New York Dolls drummer Jerry Nolan (He's since split), this group has a single they've produced due out in the racks next week: "Rockabilly Dolls" b/w "Tanya Jean." The group has just been signed by Island, have an album planned (which they're in the Bahammas working on) and will tour starting sometime in December. The Rockats have been described as sounding "very much like the Stones, hot enough to get you dancin' up on the tables." We'll look forward to hearing them soon...Another band to watch for is Rubber Rodeo, who have a disco-ish new wave version of Tammy Wynette's "Stand By Your Man" on their first single. They have been described by Max's Kansas City Records as "a country rock Devo"...

...MARIANNE FAITHFULL, Mick Jagger's ex, who had a big comeback with last year's LP Broken English, is reportedly ready to do another album. It will be released sometime early next year, after which, an Island Records spokesperson said, she will do her first U.S. tour. Faithfull did do a limited promotional tour, playing gigs at the Mudd Club and Bottom Line last winter, but the other dates (one of which was scheduled at Boston's Paradise) never materialized. When questioned about Ms. Faithfull's absence and her less-than-exciting performance on NBC-TV's Saturday Night Live last February, the Island spokesperson said Faithfull suddenly developed a case of laryngitis, "Her voice just kept getting lower, and lower and lower. We gave her Contacts and tea and her throat was as red as a tomato," the spokesperson added.

Lost in the Wilderness

In the beginning, the state legislature created the Board of Regents.

Its 15 members were given the power to set budgets, transfer and discontinue existing academic programs, departments or entire schools, act as the state's bargaining agent for all employees of higher education, and other almighty duties once possessed by the individual boards of trustees. They became the holy of holies of public higher education.

But before the beginning, there were students.

In their time, as parts of their board of trustees, they had some of their own to speak for them in the vast wilderness of higher educational policy and politics.

Then came the fateful day when the state legislature made the Regents sovereign over the wilderness, saying unto them, "Reorganize."

The trustees were banished and cast out of the wilderness by the "King" who rose up new trustees and spake to them thusly, "Help the mighty Regents decide where and how each part of the wilderness should be constructed but remember, ye are but mortals and the Regents are blessed with Executive guidance."

And after all this was done, the state legislature looked back on all they had created and said, "It is O.K."

But the creatures in the reorganized wilderness became worried. Not the least of which were the students for they no longer had a voice, a representative.

Despite their worries, the studens knew they had one recourse. They approached the holy of holies and asked if they, too, could help decide where and how the wilderness would be constructed.

But the Regents, not being of the same stock as the students said, "No. It would not be a good idea." They would, however, let the students continue to speak in the lower temple of the board of trustees — maybe.

And because of this the students worried, for now their voice was amongst the merchants and scholars who ruled over the wilderness. The Regents, seeking to quell the wrath of the students, whose masses swayed with a wave of resentment, said, "Trust us."

And so it was.

Scholastics and the Beast

There's a mischevious, wretched and just plain notorious dweller lurking not in the shadows, but in plain view of everyone here at the university. As a result, no one suspects that this monster is really a monster, but he is or she is; what I mean is "it" is both he and she as this beast is a master of disguise. Therefore, suspect everyone.

It could be your best friend, your professor, your daily columnist, even your mother might be just another of its thousand faces. This beast is so sinister it isn't satisfied with normal beastly desires, like your body for instance, because what this beast wants is nothing short of your time!

Seth Jacobson

Hours upon hours of your valuable time could right now be draining into the slimy throat of this Draculonic devil. Was it then so lucky for me to gain the rights to an exclusive interview with it? You be the judge.

ME: Spare a moment?

BEAST: Always, if you know what I mean?

ME: Do you ever feel guilty about your work?

BEAST: Should I feel guilty when I just allow someone to do what they want?

ME: I'm not sure. Still, if it weren't for your antics students would work twelve hours a day. As it is with all the confusion you spread, a student is lucky to get in two hours of work a day. And that's with late hours.

BEAST: If I didn't plague them, someone else would. Look I'm no momma's boy, that's for sure. Besides, have you any idea what kind of a "rush" it is to creep up to a hard working student and distract him so that maybe he doesn't even pick up a book for the rest of the day? It's my heaven.

ME: What's your technique? I know there are trade secrets, but surely there are some general approaches you can let the public in on.

BEAST: Well, no one approach works for two people. Gregarious people, though, are the easiest to paralyze. Often I'll invite them to my table for tea and without even trying I've pilfered an hour or two of their day. Puff! Up in smoke!

ME: Tea? An hour? It doesn't take even a refined Englishman an hour to drink his tea.

BEAST: Maybe, I'm better than I realize. Sure, I just don't plunk the tea in front of their ugly mugs and say "Bottoms up!" A direct question like "How's it going?" or "Been to any parties recently?" goes a long way. My latest is "Did you check out Beck? Whether they have or haven't I've got a whole routine which, if performed correctly, can lead them into twenty-four hours of mindless music group talk. But this move is so easy it's getting boring even for me.

There are other tactics slightly more challenging and I usually perfer these. Television talk, for instance, can be milked for hours. One woman, a Larry Hagman groupie, couldn't stop offering me possibilities for who killed JR. She even had blown-up photos she'd taken of her television during the assassination attempt. For the whole afternoon I got her to tell me everything from what lenses she used to how much Hagman really made. She even knew his make of car and the kind of home he owned (several of course). For many students I just stick to my P's and S's,—presidential politics and sports, as you would know them by.

ME: Well, where do you stand, politically?

BEAST: I'm undecided, but that's no way to entice someone into a mechanical discussion. I tell them I'm supporting whomever I think they're not. That way I can play devil's advocate, and keep them busy for hours while they try and explain away all the hypocritical statements of their chosen savior.

ME: Okay, let's say I'm for Reagan.

BEAST: Well, I'd ask you to define what Reagan's "get tough on the Soviet Union" talk really means. Why, I'd ask, if we have ten thousand more warheads than the Soviets should we need more to "insure peace." This person would probably quote one of Reagan's cribsheets, something about America needing to be number one again and then I'd ask well, what does number one mean?

ME: It's devastating. And students don't even suspect that you're indifferent?

BEAST: I'm a "master of disguise" to quote you, Seth.

ME: What are some of your favorite disguises?

BEAST: An alluring woman goes over very nicely with the fellows. Some of them would skip their mother's funeral just to hear me tell them about my curriculum.

ME: Do you ever fail?

BEAST: Oh, sure. Life wouldn't be any fun without failure. Nerds who keep reminding me that their calculator is getting cold are the toughest subjects. But where there's a will, there's a way.

ME: Disgraceful. But, why do you do it?

BEAST: Perhaps its the thrill I get when a student throws up his arms and says in twisted frustration "Well, I guess that paper won't get done now," or "I'm sure to fail that test, now." They never guess my deepest intentions, though.

ME: Which are?

BEAST: To freeze the entire student body into an impulsive, illogical fatty mass.

ME: A more vile and disgusting creature I've never met.

BEAST: Now, you're talking.

Concert security

To the Editor:

How would you define a UPC security person? A cretin? A traitor? Or maybe just a fool. A fool willing to give of himself for the benefit of others. The people who work security for concerts are not doing so because they're on some sort of power trip or, with the exception of a selected few, because it's a good way to get into concerts free. On the contrary, those who do their job well tend to miss a great deal of the show.

So why are these students trying to prevent concert goers from smoking in 60-year old buildings, climbing on railings, walking on stadium walls, fighting in the stands, and throwing bottles? Could it possibly be because they don't want to see you or anyone else get hurt?

All I ask you to consider is this: UPC cannot have concerts unless it supplies security for them. The security is responsible for protecting you and helping anyone who gets sick or hurt. If you are going to attend the concert you should be willing to accept the fact that they must be there, and must do their job. The job is rough enough to begin with, and is only made harder by people constantly yelling obscenities, throwing things, spitting, threatening, and in some cases even physically abusing the workers.

This article is not meant for everyone, for there are many who don't like the rules, but nonetheless don't give workers a hard time for trying to enforce them. Instead it is meant for those of you who consider security "the enemy" and therefore try to give them as much trouble as possible. I would just like you to remember they are only doing their job, and they are doing it for you.

Bostonians protest in lieu of fiscal crises

BOSTON (AP) — A budget standoff that had Boston temporarily cashless, thousands of workers without paychecks and protesting city workers blocking a presidential motorcade yesterday, appeared over—for a while.

Following a meeting of the City Council, Mayor Kevin H. White and ranking officials of the police and fire departments, council members gave initial approval on an 8-1 vote of a $30 million short-term loan order to defer the city's fiscal crisis.

The city routinely floats such loans in the fall to provide operating cash until property tax collections come in. But the council, smarting from a disagreement with the mayor over the fiscal 1981 budget, had refused to authorize the loan this year.

At the meeting, White conceded to delay any closings of police and fire stations, which are undertaking reorganization, at least until after a public hearing on the plan Friday by the council. At that time, if another two-thirds vote is taken on the loan order, paychecks will be released immediately.

Meanwhile, a Superior Court judge issued an injunction ordering the city to pay fire-fighters, library workers and other municipal employees who have not been paid since last week, according to Christine Peterson, a library union spokeswoman. The order blocks the closing of three fire stations.

Earlier yesterday, about 1,000 city employees, unhappy because their checks are overdue, gathered at one end of the Sumner Tunnel as Carter arrived for a brief campaign stopover. The tunnel normally carries traffic into downtown Boston from Logan International Airport.

Police cleared the parallel Callahan Tunnel, which usually carries outbound traffic, so the presidential motorcade could travel through it.

White was riding with Carter in the motorcade.

"No pay, no work," demonstrators chanted as the motorcade emerged. They carried placards imprinted, "We need our money now."

Later, boos sounded as Carter, White and others left a rally at the Christopher Columbus Center in the city's North End. The jeers apparently were aimed at White.

"Our argument is not with the president but with the mayor," said John Harvey of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

Fire Marshall warns about dorm dangers

By Hanna Dyer
Special to the Collegian

Your room is in flames. Who do you call? Should you put it out? What kind of extinguisher should you use? How do you evacuate?

These are all questions that might run through your mind during a fire and Fire Marshall Keith E. Hoyle says students should take time to find out the causes of fires, how they can be prevented, and methods of evacuation in case of a fire.

If students learn the dangers of fire, he said, there may be fewer false alarms pulled. Pulling fire alarms, for fun, is a criminal offense and could cause students to ignore actual alarms, leading to fatalities, he said. Over the years, false alarms have risen by a large margin, Hoyle said. So far this year there have been 70 total responses to fire. Only 12 were genuine alarms.

Hoyle said the main cause of fires are careless smokers, overburdened electrical systems, and improper use of candles.

Cigarette smokers should extinguish all burning materials, he said. Electrical systems should not be overloaded with high voltage appliances (i.e. hotplates, irons, and large refrigerators). Candles and fires should be attended to constantly.

Netwomen fall to UConn, face BU today

By Anthony Kundert
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team suffered its third defeat of the season as it went down to a tough University of Connecticut squad 6-3 Tuesday afternoon at Storrs. Their record now stands at 8-3.

The day was the coldest yet for the netwomen as temperatures dipped into the low forties and winds buffeted the courts. Their only consolation was the bright sunshine.

The singles lineup was changed for the match in order to accommodate for the injured Barbara Mills (ankle sprain) who is resting her ankle in hopes of being ready for the New Englands this weekend. Filling her shoes at number one was Elizabeth Sullivan who was able to win her match over Tracy Behrman 6-0, 6-4.

Coach John Beal explained what went on in the match; "Lill (Sullivan) was able to change the ball around a lot with soft shots and then long vollies. The person that played her wasn't able to adjust to her style of play."

At number two, captain Joanne Vennochi lost to Donna Bindelglass 6-4, 6-3.Chris Carson was the only other singles player to take her match over Bonnie Dworkin 6-3, 7-6.

"She was a backboard, got everything back," said Carson. "I just tried to play steady."

In a close match, number four Sue Lochiatto fell 6-4, 7-6.

Number five Paula Natale was beaten 6-2, 6-3. Finishing out the singles was Trish Sullivan who lost in three sets 6-1, 4-6, 6-1.

The UMass double teams managed only one win in the three matches played. This came from number two doubles Helen Najaran and Sally Fryberger 6-4, 7-6. This win gives them a very impressive ten wins with only one loss in their match play this season.

Number one doubles Kathy Burke and Carolynn Tarbell managed to go three sets but lost 6-3, 3-6, 6-2. Roxanne McCarthy and Didi Courtright finished out the match by losing 6-1, 7-6.

"Everybody played very well," said Beal. "But it was the first match we've played with no add scoring and that makes a difference." Apparently all schools in the league have the option of whether or not to use no-add scoring and UConn uses it.

The netwomen finish their match schedule today with a home match against Boston University. Beal feels the match will be a tough one, especially since they are ranked third in New England.

JVs now 8-1

The UMass women's JV volleyball team added two more wins to its record Tuesday, beating Endicott Junior College and Salem State College in Beverly.

UMass swept Salem State 15-7, 15-9, while taking three games to defeat Endicott 15-4, 14-16, 15-12.

"We were playing very well," said JV Coach Al Morel, "our serving was excellent and our overall play was great. Against Endicott, we lost concentration in the second game. Nobody was communicating out there on the court. We should've beaten them in two games, but we came back to win."

The JVs, now 8-1, will host the Harvard University JVs at NOPE gym Saturday morning. The match will begin at 11:00 a.m.

After Harvard, UMass will play the Mount Holyoke JVs on Tuesday night at NOPE, beginning at 6:00 p.m. This match will precede the varsity match against the Lyons. UMass played Mount Holyoke before; the JVs won the match in three games.

UMass blanks Mt. Holyoke, 3-0

By Maureen Sullivan
Collegian Staff

The women's soccer team fended off a tough Mount Holyoke squad to take a 3-0 victory yesterday at Kendall Field.

Both teams marked each other closely; just when either team could get its offense perking and moving, the other's defense would intercept the pass or tackle the necessary player.

UMass got its lone goal of the first half when junior Maddie Mangini lofted a penalty shot over the Mount Holyoke goalie's head at 4:55 of the half. After that, the Minutewoman had several chances to score, but the Lyons kept up with them on defense.

While UMass shot on goal 11 times, Mount Holyoke could get just three chances past the UMass defense, led by Deborah Pickett and Elaine Contant.

The second half saw the tempo pick up, as the Lyons began penetrating the defense for a chance to tie the game. UMass goalie Kelly Tuller covered and shoved away 10 close shots in the second half, including one that she punched away as it flew towards the top of the net.

As Mount Holyoke increased the pressure, so did UMass. The Minutewomen's passing game opened up the offense; the midfield was dominated by UMass players trying to set up another opportunity to score.

One of those opportunities came at 10:28 of the half, when Nancy Feldman fed Nina Holstrom a pass to the middle, where she booted over the sprawling Mount Holyoke goalie, making the score 2-0.

Despite more chances to score, both teams held each other off with tackling, pass interceptions and tight marking.

"We could have played better," said UMass Coach Kenekai Banda, "but the field was small, and it's hard for a team to get psyched up for any college, especially an away game. But we got much better in the second half."

The half saw not only improved play from the Minutewomen, but saw the return of Natalie Prosser from the bench to a more regular role on the field (after missing several games because of a knee injury, Prosser played for about five minutes against Cortland State). It was Prosser, with a litle help from Holstrom, who got the final tally of the day at 33:30.

"I'm really happy Natalie's back," said Banda, "Maddie's playing hurt right now, but we're coming around. We must win the rest of our games; we can't let the other team win it for us."

Now 7-2-1, the Minutewomen will travel to Springfield College to face the Chiefs on Saturday afternoon for a 5:00 p.m. contest. It will be the first time UMass will see Springfield in two years, and the first times the team will play on Astroturf since forming as a varsity team three years ago.

"It's bad enough trying to keep the ball in control, but on that Astroturf, the ball will be bouncing around like crazy," said Banda, "we'll hold our practice Friday night in NOPE gym to get set for this."

Providence College handles booters, 3-1

By Bob Mitchell
Collegian Staff

Providence R.I. 8 Two early first half goals by Bill Baker paced Providence College to a 3 to 1 win over the UMass soccer team yesterday.

Baker, a senior midfielder, opened the scoring at the fifteen minute mark of the half when he took a pass from Tony Conte and blasted a shot in from close range after UMass goalie Brett Olsher was caught out of position.

Baker then scored what proved to be the game winner just two minutes later by heading a high cross from Mike Moretti.

The Minutemen who outshot the Friars 11-8 closed the margin to 2 to 1 just fourteen minutes into the second half when Marc Elliot tipped a Doug White cross past Providence goalie Peter Chennette who made seven saves in the game.

However, Kevin Legare headed in the Friar third goal off a direct kick from teammate Martin Hayes just one minute later to put a damper on the Minutemen comeback.

The UMass squad took the play to Providence throughout the first ten minutes of the game but could not find the net. Elliot White and Tony M. Dias all blasted shots wide for UMass in the early going.

"We came out early and looked like we were going to blow them away" said UMass coach Russ Kidd. "But we just couldn't put it in".

After the first two goals of the game were scored, UMass came back to life momentarily with two quick scoring opportunities. Fritz Pike drilled a high, hard shot that Chennette tipped over the crossbar and Tony M. booted one just wide off the right post off a direct kick.

However, after the scoring in the second half, both teams started to play a much more physical game which resulted in the majority of the action being played at midfield.

The Friar's fullbacks held the Minutemen forwards at bay for most of the afternoon. The Providence defenders were led by captain Bill Lawrence a native of Bourne, and Blaine Carroll of Natick.

"I thought their big backs outfought our forwards" said Kidd.

The loss drops UMass' record to 4-7, while Providence moves to 5-4-1. The Minutemen who have won 2 out of their last 4 and have five games left on their schedule, play at the University of Rhode Island Friday.

Zoo Disc trips at Purple Valley Classic

By Joel Zuckerman
Special to the Collegian

Zoo Disc just couldn't get their chemistry together over the weekend, dropping three straight games in Williamstown. The losses came at the hands of Middlebury, Williams, and Boston Aerodisc. The loss to Boston put Zoo Disc's season record with the New England champions down to 1-2. It was the first meetings of the year with Middlebury and Williams.

The Purple Valley Classic always has been a mellow affair; this year more than ever, as the colorful surroundings lent itself as much to laughing, singing, and dancing, as it did to competitive ultimate.

The host team, Williams, (or WUFO-Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organization) was more than hot. They came back from nine behind to beat Dartmouth, five behind to top Middlebury, and six behind to beat the Zoo, in a game that began at dusk, and ended as the nighttime fog rolled over the field.

The tournament's surroundings, a cloudy, misty, foilage-filled valley made loss after loss seem relatively unimportant.

I look forward to the Williamstown tournament every year, its such a colorful event. I wish we could have made a better showing." Saturday standout John Dubinsky continued: "But it was so much fun, it was like a trip to Disneyland." Graduate student R. Allan Barnicle looked at it this way: "The three losses are deceiving. I think we all peaked in the first game, and didn't have enough left to carry us through the rest of the day. We all needed a little bit more."

What could have been a morale crumbler, has been taken in stride by Zoo Disc. Part-time Zoo Disc'er and ZULU coach Dave "Freek" Novick reflected the team's feelings: "It was really no big deal. It seems we have a tournament like that every fall. It's just something we have to work out of our system."

Soccer JVs run past Jeffs

By Sue Bridgman
Collegian Staff

Despite a low-key performance, the UMass J.V. soccer team pulled out a 1-0 victory yesterday over Amherst College at Memorial Field, Amherst.

The only goal of the game came early in the first period when Steve Berlin sent a short pass to Steve Luby, who booted a long shot across the goal and into the upper right hand corner, past the outstretched goalie.

Despite some good shots on goal early in the game by UMass, the Minutemen could not pull ahead by more.

Unfavorable field conditions hampered UMass from playing their type of game. Although the team started off fairly strong, they lost control, and continually were beaten to the ball by Amherst. Also, the players seemed to have trouble concentrating and anticipating, and communication was lacking at times.

Coach Mascolo was disappointed with his team's performance, and felt that they lacked the sharp skills that the team has shown previously.

The JVs will play again tomorrow at 3:30 p.m. behind Boyden. UMass will face several UMass soccer alumni, including Tasso Koutsoukos of the NASL's Chicago Sting and Mark Marilla.

The win brings the J.V.'s record to 4-0. The Minutemen take on Holyoke Community College next week at home.

Koffler outlines plan for higher ed. changes

By Deborah Coughlin
Collegian Correspondent

University Chancellor Henry Koffler outlined seven steps yesterday that the state Board of Regents will take to consolidate the process of reorganizing public higher education in Massachusetts within the next few months.

The plans include a search for a permanent chancellor for the board. Koffler said at a Faculty Senate meeting, that a search committee exists, and their announcement should be made by March 1.

The Regents also plan to review the reorganization act to see what modifications they would like made. This involves both legal and objective counsel, Koffler said.

The Regents will also address the question of how to become familiar with the 28 public institutions and the 30 campuses in the state — including their individual problems and needs, Koffler said.

Other plans include the recuitment of temporary staff which Koffler said is a "critical issue."

The regents have been asked to consider requests by individual institutions in regards to the fiscal year '82 budget request to be sent to the Legislature. It is now being analyzed by the Board of Higher Education which will act on behalf of the Regents, Koffler said.

Koffler said that the Regents have already begun to develop procedures for long-range planning. He said the Regents also plan the implementation of the transition before March 1, 1981. This includes both finance and personnel issues.

Koffler said the board's plans were recently made public by acting chancellor Paul Guzzi at a meeting with representatives from the various state colleges and universities held in Worcester.

In other business, President of the Graduate Student Senate, Jack Delmond, spoke of a meeting held last week with State Representative James Collins, D-Amh, who is sponsoring a bill proposing that a student representative be allowed to join the Board of Regents. Delmont asked the members of the senate to support the bill.

Harassment suit filed against nursing home

By Stephen Moran
Collegian Staff

An unfair labor-practice suit charging the Amherst Nursing Home management with harassment and intimidation of union members was filed yesterday on behalf of the home's non-professional staff members. The sixty workers, members of District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union, recently returned from a seven-day strike.

Richard Sanders, union organizer, said he filed the complaint with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board in Boston. He said that the nursing home management has violated two sections of the National Labor Relations Act; both sections deal with the harassment and intimidation of employees who engage in union activity.

Betty Kravitz, nursing homeowner, refused comment.

Sanders said the nursing home management has circulated cards to new employees "within a few days after employment" asking them to declare whether they intend to join the union and pay union dues or reject union membership and pay an agency fee. The new contract, agreed upon September 29, contains an agency clause that allows for this decision.

But Sanders said that management has no legal right to ask new employees of their union intentions "The potential for discrimination is real," and could affect an employee's decision to join the union or mangement's decision whether or not to grant post-probationary employment status to a new employee after the forty day probationary period, Sanders said.

Sanders also complained that union members have been treated unfairly by management. He said that one of the two kitchen workers who did not cross last month's picket line was fired unexpectedly from her job. Sharon Goldstein was released from her kitchen job within a week after returning to her old job, "It's obvious intimidation," said Sanders.

Linda Edwards, delegate to the grievance committee, reported a significant increase in the number of warning slips that management has given to the employees. "During the life of our last contract, there were perhaps two or three warnings issued. After returning from the picket line, you don't dare sneeze, for fear of being written up," said Edwards.

Spokespersons for four pres. candidates to debate

By Ed Levine
Collegian Staff

Representatives of four presidential candidates will be debating the 1980 campaign Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck Labs, room 20, at the University of Massachusetts.

Spokespersons for the campaigns of President Jimmy Carter, former Gov. Ronald Reagan, Rep. John Anderson and Citizen's Party candidate Barry Commoner will debate "Election 1980 — is there a choice?"

Sponsored by the UMass Radical Student Union, the debate will include Nancy Stevenson, Lt. Governor of South Carolina, representing Carter; Lou Crampton, New England Organizer, representing Reagan; Lou Zemmel, senatorial candidate in Connecticut representing Commoner; and an as of yet unknown representative from the Anderson campaign.

RSU member Joel Weissman said the debate is being presented to help make students more aware of the campaign issues and to get them to think about alternatives to the traditional two-party system.

"The election every four years raises some very fundamental questions, and once again in 1980, it questions the whole two-party system," Weissman said. "For the first time in many years, we see cracks developing in the system. We want to give students the chance to decide. They're going to view the three major candidates and an alternative."

Campus representatives of the Socialist Worker's Party have protested the debate because their candidate was not invited to participate. But, Weissman said, the group wanted only to present on viable alternative to the major candidates and the debate would have been difficult to run with five people.

"We felt we could have a maximum of four people and even that would be very difficult," Weissman said. "We need a viable third party, a mass party. Before us is the Citizen's Party. The SWP is not a mass party. It is not a viable party."

Weissman said a student, probably a member of the RSU, would moderate the debate, but he said the person has not been chosen as of yet.

Each representative will be given a seven minute opening statement and then a set amount of time to discuss several issues pertinent to the campaign, Weissman said. The exact format of the debate will probably be worked out over the weekend, he said.

Weissman said the RSU is contacting the campaign staffs again in an attempt to secure more notable representatives for the debate. Since the only prominent representatives are Lt. Gov. Stevenson and Senatorial candidate Zemmel, it is hoped the Reagan and Anderson campaigns will send more well-known spokespersons, he said.

Economy starting to rebound

WASHINGTON — Industrial production rose sharply and personal incomes continued to grow steadily in September, the government reported yesterday, providing new evidence that the economy is inching out of the 1980 recession.

Production at U.S. factories and mines was up one percent — the second monthly increase in a row and the largest since May 1979, the Federal Reserve Board said. Gains were registered over a wide sector of the economy as the board's production index rose to 142.4 percent of its 1967 level.

September still was 6.7 percent under the year-ago mark, the board said.

Allied fleet considered

WASHINGTON — Though the U.S. Navy is capable of holding open the vital oil-tanker route into the Persian Gulf, the United States is willing to consider the possibility of a combined allied fleet there, a Pentagon spokesman said yesterday.

Thomas Ross, the spokesman, said there is "no active coordination on a day-by-day basis" between U.S. naval units and ships of other navies operating in the Arabian Sea and Gulf of Oman approaches to the Persian Gulf.

State Department spokesman John Trattner said the United States is engaged in technical level discussions with other countries on ways to ensure the continued free flow of oil through the Strait of Hormuz. He said the discussions are being held at the "navy-to-navy" level, but declined to identify the countries involved.

WLS-TV reports arms deal is in works to free hostages

CHICAGO — WLS-TV reported yesterday that the American hostages have been returned to the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in preparation for a trip home as part of an arms deal with Iran. A State Deaprtment spokesman called the report "totally false" but the station stood by its story.

"We may be wrong in some detail — we have said that on the air. But we will stand by the basis of the report. We feel a deal is in the works," said Tom Kuelbs, news director of WLS.

In Washington, State Departnent spokesman John Trattner also denied other aspects of the telecast, including a report that President Carter's jet, Air Force One, has been placed on standby to carry him to an Air Force base on the East Coast to meet with the hostages on their return to this country.

The station reported these details Thursday, attributing them to unnamed sources, and repeated elements of an exclusive story aired Wednesday night. In the first report, the station said negotiations were under way in Tehran for release of the 52 hostages in exchange for five planeloads of military spare parts.

Pentagon spokesman Thomas Ross said, "The report involving aircraft loaded with spare parts is false."

Kuelbs said Ross's denial only means the planes aren't loaded. Kuelbs said the parts, purportedly for use in American-built military hardware used by Iran in its war against Iraq, are on the ground at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey, ready to be loaded.

"I am trying to give you a flat, categorial denial" that official have been alerted about the possible mission, said Lt. Col. Mike Burch, a spokesman for the Defense Department in Washington. "We know there has been no order, no plans drafted, no airplanes alerted, no effort to consolidate the parts to ready them for shipping, no people ordered to do any contingency planning . . . and we are the managers of that equipment."

Burch said parts at the warehouse at McGuire Air Force base are ones that had already been signed over to the Iranians before the hostage crisis began and were put there to be made available for the Iranians to pick up at their convenience.

SGA clears student judge

By Ed Levine
Collegian Staff

An ad hoc Student Government Association Committee investigating alleged improper actions by student judge Michael Cohen released its report Wednesday evening, clearing Cohen of any wrongdoing.

The report, issued by committee chairman Kenneth Moore, was presented to the Undergraduate Student Senate Wednesday evening, which accepted it unanimously.

The four-member committee, which included Moore, Robert Cleary, Kevin O'Leary and Pam Malumphy, determined that Cohen had done nothing illegal three weeks ago when he issued temporary injunctions against the senate, prohibiting them from spending money which had been allocated to support the strike at the Amherst Nursing Home.

"The committee felt that Michael (Cohen) took what he felt to be the only action possible, as a reasonable and prudent person," the report concluded.

Cohen had issued temporary injunctions against the expenditure of the funds after a student had requested the action on the grounds that the senate had not acted properly when allocating the funds. Cohen said he took the action to preserve the rights of the student and to prevent the money from being spent until the complaint could be heard by a full student court.

Normally, a complaint is presented to a Clerk of Courts and then is heard by a three-judge tribunal. In this case, however, Cohen said, and the committee agreed, there was not a clerk of courts or a judiciary capable of carrying out the process.

The committee was formed about three weeks ago by the SGA Coordinating Committee under tight security. Coordinating Committee members, concerned about the fairness of the proceedings, refused to release any details of the investigation and instructed committee members not to discuss it until it was completed.

"We were thinking of Michael's rights more than anything else," Clearly said. "He couldn't get a fair shake in the senate if everyone had already read about it (in the Collegian) and discussed it. We wanted the senate to interpret it for themselves."

Clearly said he felt that the testimony presented at the hearings was honest and indicated Cohen had not acted improperly.

"He acted the only way he could. If he didn't take action, that would have been grounds for removal, too," Cleary said.

Cohen said he fully expected to be cleared of any wrongdoing but disagreed with the process used to investigate him, and agreed with the committee's conclusion that, in the future, such cases should be heard by the judiciary and the full senate.

"I thought all along that I would be cleared," Cohen said. I think it was a fair hearing. The decision to investigate me was more or less politically motivated but the investigation was 100 percent non-political, integritous (sic) and legitimate. Judges should not be removed for small or political reasons. They have to get in the middle, that's their job. If anyone has a problem with a judge's or tribunal's interpretation of the constitution, their only appeal is to be the next highest tribunal."

Textbook refund policy changed

By Samuel Chalfen
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Governors announced last night that the University Store's Textbook Annex refund policy has been extended from a two to a four week period, and may be retroactive to students who lost money this fall.

The policy had included a four week grace-period in previous semesters but Textbook Annex managers changed the policy without BOG approval over the past summer. The policy changes were advocated by board member Debby Abramoff.

Some students have received refunds for the fall semester by talking to the Textbook Annex manager Russ Evans, she said.

The board also debated on the wisdom in closing the Campus Center and Student Union Building for Halloween night. Campus Center Director William Harris said, "It's a matter really of closing down the University, if the Campus Center is closed many of the campus-wide problems will be muted.'"

When asked whether the closing could help potential trouble groups that may travel to dormitories Harris said, "Security is going to be as tough as it's ever been."

According to member Lori Dratch, Greek Area Residents have pledged to help clean up the next morning, and Boston Magazine staff will be on hand to report on the difference between last year's violence.

The board also announced that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will act as an informal advisor for long range planning aspects of the proposed several-thousand-dollar Cable Video Project the University will embark on in the spring semester. The Campus Center administration has submitted $9,000 as a proposed budget to the Board for the cable system.

The board has four open seats available to those interested in helping to manage the Campus Center Student Union Complex. The board has three seats open for appointments from the Third World Caucus, and one from the handicapped students league.

Four BOG members will travel to Hyannis to attend the Regional American College Unions International Conference from Nov 9-12, which offers leadership and programming skills workshops.

Autumn comes to Amherst

"And all the leaves on the trees are falling 'Neath the cover of October skies"

By Cathy Cebulski
Collegian Correspondent

Autumn holds many expectations for people. Small children anticipate the coming of Halloween, and students, the resuming of school. There are regrets that summer is over, and anxiety towards new beginnings.

Many do not realize that in literature autumn symbolizes death. Autumn is nature's quiet way of letting us know that winter is around the corner. The most obvious and startlingly beautiful sign of autumn is the changing color of the leaves.

The Pioneer Valley, in which the University of Massachusetts is located, is surrounded by mountains, and at this time of the year, the horizons are fringed with deep reds and purples, golds, and rich browns.

"These colors have been there in the green leaf all along through the spring and summer," explains Yassa Grossman of the UMass Botany Department, "but with the low temperatures at night, it's hard for the tree to get the sugar out of the leaves."

As the green chlorophyl dies in the leaf, the pigment of all the colors we see now are brought out, Grossman said. Eventually the leaves turn yellow. This entire process is called "senescence," which is the death process of a leaf, she said.

Many UMass students enjoy taking long hikes in the autumn. One student said, "There are lots of places that are really nice this time of year. A bunch of us went over to Mt. Tom in Holyoke last Saturday and hiked up around there. We had a great time."

The UMass Outing Club offers frequent canoe trips, hikes and overnight camping trips. These are all coordinated by students and have been known to be successful and enjoyable.

Quabbin Reservoir, on Route 9, is especially noted for its beautiful scenery.

Many horse farms on the outskirts of Amherst are advertising trail rides through wooded forests. The closest to the University is Fuller's Horse Farm located in Westhampton off Route 66. Reservations must be made the day before. Sessions are $5 per hour and up to 18 people may ride at one time, Robert Fuller said.

For those who do not have cars, the Central Residential area on campus is an ideal place to go for a walk and admire the foliage.

No matter where one is, it is impossible not to witness the spectacle of fall in Western Massachusetts.

Western Mass. oil prices lowest in the state

By Marcia Sciabarrasi
Collegian Correspondent

A biweekly survey conducted by Charles Bronner, data analyst for the Massachusetts Office of Energy Resources revealed that the average price for home heating oil in western Massachusetts is the lowest in the state, at $1.00 per gallon.

The survey reported that the statewide average was $1.02 a gallon. Bronner said that the price ranged from $1 low to a high of $1.04 per gallon.

Bronner said the low average is because the area has easy access to a pipe-line located in New Haven, Conn., which enables the local dealers to save on trucking and transportation costs.

Another reason is that people are conserving at a greater rate this year, he said. Bronner attributes the new wave of conservation to the pilot program, "Oil Burner Retrofit" sponsored by the Massachusetts Energy Office in Springfield last year.

The objective of the program was to educate people and make them aware of the impact that developing alternate sources of energy, or updating their present oil burning units for more efficient use, has on the demand for oil. Bronner said that the increase in oil prices of late has shown consumers the necessity of conservation. The rebate consumers earn by their system has become more appealing, he added. Due to the ample supply of number 2 heating oil in the area, dealers are more price competitive, which results in lower price averages, Bronner said. State Energy Secretary Joseph S. Fitzpatrick said, "Conservation remains the key to bringing some stability to the price of heating oil."

Bronner said he does not anticipate drastic price increases as the weather gets colder. He said there is a sufficient supply to meet increasing demand at this time.

Explosion kills 5

By Joyce McLauren
Black Affairs Staff

Four children and one adult were killed Monday, Oct. 13 in a gas explosion in a Day Care Center at the Bowen Homes Housing Project in the northwest section of Atlanta. Six others were injured seriously after the blast. One child was released after being treated at Grady Memorial Hospital, while several other children were treated for cuts and minor injuries at the scene of the explosion.

According to the New York Times, an employee of the Day Care Center said "there were 83 children and nine adults inside the building at approximately 10:20 a.m. when the explosion went off." The explosion ruptured a passageway containing offices, kitchen, play area and the furnace room.

Fifteen children still remain unaccounted for according to hospital sources.

The explosion also sent "a shock wave" to 650 black families in the Bowen Homes Housing Project. There is already a lot of tension among the blacks in the community because of the murders of eight black children and the disappearance of six black youths believed to have been kidnapped in the last 15 months.

Mayor Maynard Jackson arrived at the scene of the explosion and called it "an awful tragedy" he also tried to abolish rumors saying that the explosion resulted from a bomb. But just to be sure he evacuated the elementary school located directly across the street from the Day Care Center, which reported had a bomb scare the same day of the explosion.

Maynard then promised the community extra police patrols for all Atlanta housing projects and the reconstruction of the Day Care Center.

One man who reportedly heard the explosion stated in the New York Times "I heard a real loud boom and I ran out the door and saw the smoke and dust and ran down there. Then I heard a little boy holler 'Help me, Help me' then I saw two other little boys pinned under the bricks and blocks and a little girl laying in a corner . . . I pulled out one little boy and an employee, but the boy died a few minutes afterwards. A mother whose son attended the Day Care Center said in the New York Times "I will never send my Tory back to that place."

A spokesman from the Atlanta Gas Company said the boiler exploded possibly from too much pressure or lack of water.

Realities of UMass

A berated brother recently wrote to the Miami Times "I see something very peculiar that the White man is doing. He is eliminating Black Men from any type of progress. He'll hand out his oppressive justice in the court room or on his city streets. He'll make you want to leave town . . . this is public knowledge . . ."

These remarks may seem harsh to the brothers and sister on campus, cocooned and blinded by the false security college life offers. But one cannot help but notice the very real and frightening facts that have occurred recently.

Richard Lomax and Perry Owens, two black men from Springfield, are incarcerated in the Union County Jail located in Blairsville, Ga., where they were arrested Nov. 5, 1979. These men face 50 year sentences, stemming from charges of theft from a convenience store. The money was not found on either man.

The two men escaped from the jail and returned to the "liberal" north, fighting extradition back to Georgia. Although Lomax told two Hampden County Superior Court judges, that he did not want to return to Georgia because "I am in fear . . . I may not remain alive," the two men were ordered back to Georgia. What better example could be offered of the "oppressive justice in the court room"?

The state of Georgia seems to be overflowing with its tragedies these days. Not only did explosion occur in a day care center, causing the death of several young children, there are also numerous other missing children from the community, all under the age of fifteen. Some of these children have been located; shot, stabbed, strangled and mutilated. What wrongs could these young children possibly have committed to die such brutal deaths? More importantly, what type of odious heartless creature, walking scot-free among us, could have performed such horrid crimes? It seems the only crime these children committed were to be born black. Needless to say, this hardly serves as justification for the brutality of their deaths.

Many blacks in the north make the mistake of associating all these terror stories with the South. If this is so, why were Lomax and Owens ordered back to Georgia? Why were six Black men murdered in Buffalo New York, two whose hearts had been cut out? Why, in Philadelphia, was a black man shot to death after being handcuffed?

Is it not enough to even limit racism to the boundaries of the United States. In Kenya an American sailor admitted to killing a Nairobi prostitute and received only a $70 fine, while in the United States Lomax and Owens sit in a Georgia county jail, possibly facing life sentences for trumped-up theft charges, where the stolen property has not been found on either man.

Perhaps these things strike no reality for the black students here. After all, the collegiate atmosphere lends itself to academic and social endeavors, giving little cause to really fear the occurrence of racial incidents. It is time to shed light within the darkness of the cocoon, for the facts of UMass speak for themselves.

Already this semester several racially linked beatings occurred. Nothing much has been said about them, although one Puerto Rican claims he was jumped by some white men who called him derogatory names. Over and over, the names of Seta Rampersad, Jose Pontes and Jill Dickenson are brought up by the black press at UMass. But, Seta's case still remains unopened and her murderers roam the Pioneer Valley freely. Jose Ponte's death was considered a suicide although, there is reason to believe that foul play occurred. No one ever bothered to investigate further. Jill Dickenson today suffers from both mental and physical impairments due to being hit by a car, and left by the roadside to die. And then there's the case of Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers, two black men accused of robbing McDonald's several years ago, although neither one fit the description of the suspects. The list goes on and on . . . .

I am telling all these things, not to scare my brothers and sisters, but rather to alert them to the realities of life here. The oncoming Halloween weekend frightens me. In the past some imbeciles have dressed as Klan members. It is this type of sick humor that disgusts and frightens me. Perhaps we should adopt the attitude of the brother who wrote to the Times "Well Mr. Charlie you're not going to get me in any form or fashion. I got a power that I think is a little bit stronger than yours. Anyway somebody is gonna rescue my soul, I wonder who is gonna rescue yours."

Foot patrol for missing youths

By Peggy Walsh
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — Police began organizing door-to-door foot patrols Thursday and community leaders signed up volunteers for weekend searches as the investigation intensified in the unsolved slayings and disappearance of 14 black children.
